Forget not the poor at your gate, dear reader, when you are preparing to celebrate your home Thanksgiving. Remember the widow, the homeless, the wanderer, the outcast. Don't let the festival pass without some kind deed done, some lone home of poverty cheered, some neglected one revived and reinspired by the friendly grasp of your hand and the bounty of your thankful offering. Make a loan to the Lord this Thanksgiving Day. You will thus win the three-fold blessing: the heart of the giver will be filled with joy as he sees the good that follows his generosity; the recipient will be gladdened at the knowledge that "some one cares for him," and the Master himself will look down on the act with approval and blessing. This is the true way to enjoy Thanksgiving; without it, all the lavish display and costly entertainment which we may spread on our tables will count for little. We must remember those in the "highways and byways." The Divine smile rests upon such a Thanksgiving, no matter whether it be in the sumptuous home of wealth or in the humble abode of the workingman. The greatest blessing in all the world is that which comes from doing good to others.

Materialism in Our Colleges

PROFESSOR MAX VERWORN, of Bonn, a materialist of the German school, and noted for his researches in physiology and archæology, lectured before the students of the University of Pennsylvania the other day. He recited the familiar argument of his kind, denying the immortality of the soul and declaring that the single-celled amœba and man are alike in being subject to extinction after life is ended. This is the kind of teaching that is tolerated in many of our colleges in these days. One professor with magnet or microscope, another with lancet and X-ray, and both with a weight of testimony consisting mainly of observations and experiments and deductions by other scientists, come before the classes and gravely announce that they have been unable to find traces of the soul in the material body—hence it does not exist; moreover, that the belief in its existence is founded on very ancient superstition. This is the poorest sort of stuff for the student-mind to feed upon. The inspired revelations of Scripture, the writings of the great spiritual leaders through all the ages, the teachings of Jesus, the testimony of the Christian world, the evidence of the great modern philosophers and scientists who have accepted Christianity—all of these and everything else that bears directly upon the question, are swept aside by some one who in all likelihood has never devoted a single hour to serious reflection on spiritual things. Paul's famous affirmation that Christ "brought life and immortality to light" goes for nothing when addressed to those who would measure the Creator and his work by their own little plumb-line. With such men, the spiritual evidence of great minds has no weight. There is no greater barrier to spirituality than pride of intellect, which impels mere man to measure his own puny accomplishments against the Infinite.

The Horrors of War

IS THERE such a thing as civilized warfare? One may very well doubt it, after reading the cable dispatches telling of the frightful doings of the Italian soldiery in Tripoli and of the massacres by the Chinese imperialists at Hankow. We talk in peace conferences about the "sacred principles of the modern law of nations," and of the rules of civilization and humanity; but wherein lies the difference between the slaughter of helpless Arab women and children (non-combatants) in the Tripolitan desert and the indiscriminate butchery of unprotected fugitives at Hankow? The truth is that all war is legitimized murder, and when the brutal passions of men are unleashed in battle, all considerations of humanity are forgotten.

In the leading English and American journals the story of the atrocities in the Sidi Ben Mansur oasis has been fully told and it is one that disgraces civilization. Correspondents describe the Italian troops as "literally drunk with the blood they had spilled." In one village, the inhabitants were exterminated and the place burned to the ground. Dead bodies lay everywhere and the wounded were neglected. Whole Arab families, father, mother and children, non-combatants, were slaughtered. There were many infants, and the correspondent asks, "What became of them? What became of their mothers?" In other places, the war became a man-hunt, and every native, old and young, was a target. Groups were corralled, stood up against a wall and shot two at a time. These people had no weapons; they were not soldiers, but simply Arabs, in their own homes. One group of fifty, many of them children, were surrounded by troops, roped together and marched to the outskirts to be shot, where armed men hidden among trees nearby fired a volley and stampeded the executioners. The concealed enemy turned out to be Italians who had fired on their comrades by mistake. It is estimated that during the carnival of slaughter, upwards of 2,000 fell victims, of whom 400 were women. If this was war, was it in accord with the rules of civilized warfare? If it was not war, what was it?

Of course, all this has been officially denied by General Caneva, the Italian commander, who in turn accuses the Arabs of atrocities perpetrated upon Italian prisoners and wounded. What he says on this point is probably true. But it is immaterial which side was most guilty, or whether Arabs or Italians had the bitterest grievances to avenge. The essential and undeniable thing is that this is a picture of warfare, not among savages, nor in the Dark Ages, but in the enlightened twentieth century, with its Christian civilization and its Peace Congresses and arbitration treaties.

Apologists for war will plead in justification that such excesses must be expected and that they are inseparable from wars of conquest. They may point at us the finger of accusation and say that our own skirts are not entirely clear; that we have been guilty of conduct in the Philippines that cannot be forgotten. But such statements, even accepting them as wholly true, concede the whole contention, which is that all war is barbarous, inhuman and revolting, and that there can be no such thing as a war conducted on high principles or in conformity with the correct view of civilization. In the terrible lust for blood, we hark back with incredible swiftness to absolute savagery. And this is war!

Remembering the Sermon

IT WOULD be an instructive test of a pastor's influence to find out just what proportion of his congregation could remember, twenty-four hours after its delivery, the lesson his last sermon conveyed. There are sermons that we hear, admire—and straightway forget; while there are others that stir the heart, quicken the best impulses and kindle a holy passion in the soul. The influence of such sermons remains and makes itself felt in the future lives of uncounted multitudes. We sometimes hear it said that there is a woful dearth of brilliant pulpit oratory nowadays. This may be measurably true, for the old-time style of ornate preaching, with its coruscating flights and lofty perorations, has fortunately given place to a better, happier and more direct pulpit method. Emotion is not religion—at best it is but an incident. Preachers like Dr. Parkhurst, with his fearless grasp of the great problems of our day; like Dr. J. H. Jowett, whose sermons are rivers of gracious helpfulness and invitation; like Pastor Sheldon, who does battle for God and conscience in a way that grips the heart as well as the mind; like Doctors Chapman and Torrey, the two greatest living evangelists, and like Hugh Black and Dr. Eaton, both logical and eloquent, Dr. Hillis, Dr. Shannon and a host of others, all of whose sermons speak from week to week through THE CHRISTIAN HERALD'S pages, reaching the heart through the understanding, are not among those whose sermons are quickly forgotten. Depend upon it, the sermons that do not help to broaden your view of life and its duties, or lift you just a little further along on the right road, and that slip from your memory almost as soon as you pass the church door, are not true spiritual food but the poorest kind of substitute.

We repeat this week our request to our readers to co-operate with us in our plans for the improvement of their favorite home journal, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, by sending us on a postal card a line indicating their preference among the various Departments now running in the paper. This is for our personal information and not for publication. These Departments are:

Sermonic Page	Mrs. Sangster's Page
The Short Story	The Mail-Bag
Bible and Newspaper	Sunday School Page
Editorial	Boys' and Girls' Page
The Continued Story	Eugene Thwing's Articles

Write on the postal the name of the Department which you read most regularly and consider of greatest value. Address the card to the Publisher, CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York City.

Contents of this Number

Wednesday, November 22, 1911

	PAGE
Our Mail-Bag	1178
Making Ready for Congress (Illustrated). By Waldon Fawcett	1179, 1204
The Rich Man and the Poor Man. Sermon. By Rev. Charles M. Sheldon, D.D.	1180, 1198
Once a Year, Thanksgiving. By Eugene Thwing	1181
To Cross the Atlantic by Airship (Illustrated)	1182
The Centennial of Steam on the Ohio (Illustrated)	1182
Mrs. Peter Wiggs' Thanksgiving Party (Illustrated). By Susan M. Griffith	1183, 1204
OUR EDITORIAL FORUM	1184
THE BIBLE AND NEWSPAPER (Illustrated)	1185
Brander Cushing's Ambition (Illustrated). By Charles M. Sheldon	1186, 1187, 1197
Thanksgiving in the Country. By Margaret E. Sangster	1188
Our Boys and Girls (Illustrated)	1199
Stocks as an Investment	1200
An Automobile Thanksgiving. By Kate Upson Clark	1201, 1202
Harvest Home. Music	1202
Thanksgiving at the Bowery Mission. By J. G. Hallimond	1203
Building With God. Sunday School Lesson, by Dr. and Mrs. W. F. Crafts	1205, 1206
Young People's Societies	1207

THE BIBLE AND NEWSPAPER

Conducted by FERDINAND C. IGLEHART, D.D.

Dispute Over Morocco Settled

FOR four months there has been a political dispute between France and Germany which has several times threatened to terminate in a war between the two nations. An agreement has just been reached by which Germany recognizes the right of France to establish a protectorate in Morocco. France in compensation for German recognition of her protectorate cedes to Germany about 250,000 square kilometres in northern French Congo touching the German Cameroons. The territory ceded is inhabited by about one million negroes and has a commerce valued at $2,400,000 annually. The new German frontier starts at Monda Bay and extends to the Sanga River, thence to Kandeko, thence through the Congo, finally attaining Lake Tchad by way of the Ubanga and Logone Rivers. France retains the right to run railroads across Germany's territory so as to connect the different parts of French Central Africa. Although Germany secures territory in Africa more than one-half as large as the whole of France the German people are displeased that such valuable prospects in Morocco were surrendered to France, and the Colonial Secretary, Dr. Lindequist, has renewed his request of last summer that his resignation be accepted. The French people are delighted at the settlement of the dispute, which insures a great French empire in the north of Africa, consisting of Tunis, Algeria and Morocco. Nine of the fourteen articles of the treaty guarantee to citizens of all countries equal commercial opportunities in the Moroccan territory. While the parceling out of the territory of weak by stronger peoples is far from the common honesty which should govern nations as well as individuals it is to be hoped that the Almighty will so overrule the greed of nations for gold and power that the best civilization may result, and the swifter establishment of his kingdom in the earth be accomplished. In the adjustment of the relation of individual to individual and that of nation to nation it will be well to heed the injunction of the prophet:

These are the things that ye shall do: Speak ye every man the truth to his neighbor: execute the judgment of truth and peace in your gates: and let none of you imagine evil in your hearts against his neighbor; . . . for all these are things that I hate, saith the Lord. (Zech. 8:16, 17.)

A Festival in the French Congo (Territory to Be Ceded by France to Germany)

No Help, No Hope

Mr. J. J. D. Miller was in the shaft of his mining claim near Bridgeport, Calif., when a mass of rock pinned his left leg against the side of the fifteen-foot shaft. Every effort to extricate himself was fruitless, and every call for help was unheard, and he lived standing in an upright position, without a morsel of food or a drop of water, from Friday morning till the next Friday noon, when he died. An old assay certificate which was found on his body and taken to the coroner's office told two stories; on one side, of the gold in his shaft; on the other, in pencil, of his agony and suspense in looking for help. The certificate had this daily record: "Saturday—No help yet. Why did this come? Sunday night—It is cold and long. God help me! Monday—Why did Dick forget me? A drink of cold water would taste good. Tuesday—The end is near. Wonder why Dick Barnes, my chum, is not looking for me. Wednesday—Guess to-night will be the last. No hope. The end is near." Thursday's record was illegible. "Friday noon—No hope." He wrote on the certificate also a request that his wife in Harrisonburg, Va., be notified of his death, and gave instructions as to the disposition of his body. The man stood erect so he could see the sunlight and the stars above the shaft. What a hero he was in his patience and courage and sweetness of spirit! This life of ours is one of tragedies. The young man who has worked his way up into a partnership in a business house and has his hand on a fortune, and the young professional man who has just come to eminence and in the sight of gold, who die by some disease or accident, and those who are compelled to pass away within sight of the realization of their cherished ambitions and plans, are all suggested by the horrible fate of Miller, who was pinned to death while in reach of the gold that was his. In the spiritual realm there are no burdens, however heavy, nor calamities, however terrible, that can pin us down to death without help or hope. The Father's heart is always near to pity, and his hand to help. In misfortune the spiritually minded have hope. The psalmist has thus expressed this divine help:

God is our refuge and strength, a very present help in trouble. (Ps. 46:1.)

Base Ball Centuries Ago

Professors Winkle of Berlin and Hogarth of London in their excavations at Boghaz-Keul, Syria, have just come upon thirteen clay slabs which indicate that a game somewhat like base ball was played 4,000 years ago. These slabs picture a game being played by a team of Hittites, the catchers wearing a perforated mask made of the dried shell of a gourd. The umpire was King Subbi-Luliman, who reigned in the eighteenth century B.C., and the amphitheatre was full of men and women carrying fans. On some smaller tablets were found the rules of the game, and in a stone casket a sample ball and bat of the period, the centre of the former being a whittled-out ball from the end of a sturgeon's nose, which has all the resiliency of rubber, and this wound around with a thread of native grass, and covered with camel's hide, the bat being like the cricket stick of our times, and made of gopherwood. It is likely that the game of ball has been played by the generations from the Hittites to the Athletics and Giants, and that the playful side has had its due proportion in the healthy development of the race. In the laws of nature and of man, in the customs of society, in the battles for bread and power, in the aspiration of life, in the story of the heart, its loves, its work and its play for 4,000 years, we are reminded of the question of the Preacher:

Is there any thing whereof it may be said, See, this is new? It hath been already of old time, which was before us. (Eccles. 1:10.)

Falls into Rattlesnake's Den

Roy Jones, clerk in a hotel at Los Angeles, Calif., stumbled over an embankment into a den of rattlesnakes at the mouth of Eagle Rock Canyon. Mr. Jones said: "It seemed as if a thousand pairs of beady little eyes were focused on me alone, the forked little tongues glistening beautifully in the sunlight. I was almost paralyzed with fear, yet fascinated as they crawled over and about me, a score of them at least. One big rattler wound itself around my camera, and then my friend, Ben Johnson, called to me. He climbed down to my rescue with two big sticks. I arose, and we killed four or five snakes and then got out of the way in a hurry. Give me a den of lions to a den of rattlesnakes. That experience will remain fresh in my memory as long as I live." Jones stumbled into the den of snakes by accident. There are many that go down into dens of moral evil intentionally, some of them being poisoned to death by the serpent's bite, others, aroused by the call of a friend from without, making good their escape from death. The escape of Jones from the rattlesnakes calls to mind that of Paul from the viper:

And when Paul had gathered a bundle of sticks, and laid them on the fire, there came a viper out of the heat and fastened on his hand. And he shook off the beast into the fire and felt no harm. (Acts 28:3, 5.)

Discovery Prevents Ship's Sinking

A method for keeping water from entering ships through holes by compressed air was tested on board the North Carolina while the great fleet was at anchor in the North River at New York recently. Captain C. C. Marsh, commander of the North Carolina, conducted the experiment in person. He was enthusiastic over the success of the experiment, and claims that it will prevent vessels from going to the bottom from collisions, torpedos or mines, and that it will revolutionize marine warfare. The thought of applying to the compartments of a ship the science of compressed air as it is used in building tunnels first occurred to W. W. Wotherspoon, one of the engineers of the subway in New York City, and of the East River and Pennsylvania tubes. He aided Captain Marsh in the experiment on the North Carolina. Captain Marsh said the compressed air had to be used with great prudence, as too much pressure would burst the deck and other parts of the ship. He said: "This new method will revolutionize the business of ship-saving. When I applied to the Navy Department recently to be allowed to try out the method, I asked them to send me some pipes and air-gauges so that I could connect every compartment on my vessel with the air-compressing plant. If the captain of the Republic had understood the method we have tried to-day, and if the different compartments of his ship had been equipped with the simple system of pipes, air-gauges and air-compression we have used, the vessel would never have sunk. Every battleship in the navy can make itself practically unsinkable by applying to Washington for $125 worth of supplies in the shape of pipes and gauges. This new method will permit us in action or after collision to repair all holes beneath the water line from the inside." Amidst the glare of myriad electric bulbs, the stringing of flags, the firing of guns, the drilling of men and the reviews of the fleet, it is not likely that there was anything so significant as the modest experiment of the captain of the ship and the professional engineer, which promises to reduce the danger and mortality of the men of the navy and those who sail the seas. In early navigation the most primitive methods of ship-saving were used, such as the expulsion of water by hand vessels, or pumps, or increasing the chances of safety by unloading the cargo. This last method was used on the ship in the memorable storm referred to by the apostle:

They lightened the ship, and cast out the wheat into the sea. (Acts. 27:38.

A Thornless Blackberry

Luther Burbank, the magical master of the gardens and orchards, after ten years of experimentation has removed the thorn from the blackberry bush, and he will give to the world the luscious berries without the nettle to prick the fingers in picking them. Mr. Burbank's marvelous discoveries in the plant realm, which have been the wonder of the world, are types of the great improvements that are taking place in the mental, moral and spiritual world. His removal of the thorn from the bush without injuring the quality of the blackberry suggests the spiritual improvement the prophet saw at Christ's coming.

Instead of the thorn shall come up the fir tree, and instead of the brier shall come up the myrtle tree. (Isa. 55:13.)

Brander Cushing's Ambition

A New Serial Story Written for The Christian Herald

By Charles M. Sheldon.

Author of "In His Steps"

Synopsis of Preceding Chapters

The story opens with a vivid description of the brilliant scene at the launching of the new American battleship Republic, 26,000 tons displacement, at the great navy yard at Dockville. The Secretary of War is present with many other high officials, members of Congress, army and navy officers. The great steel monster of destruction, the most perfect triumph of modern shipbuilding, is the work of Brander Cushing, the famous builder and naval contractor, who is present, with his son Sidney, on the launching platform. The signal is given, the music strikes up and the huge vessel is "christened" in the usual manner by Miss Pax Marston, the beautiful daughter of Rear-Admiral Marston. A tiny bow of ribbons, which was released by the impact of the stroke at the moment the conventional bottle broke on the vessel's bow, flutters past the high launching platform. Several snatch at it, but only one, Sidney Cushing, succeeds in grasping the little bunch of color, though he does so at the risk of losing his balance and dropping a sheer seventy-five feet to the river below. A dozen spectators, seeing his peril, spring to his assistance, but he recovers his poise, although his hat, caught by the wind, is wafted away.

After this adventure, he is introduced to Miss Pax, the Admiral's daughter, who has been an interested witness of his exploit. She questions him about his rescue of a young sailor on the cruiser Del Monte a year before, and although young Cushing modestly evades a direct answer, she is satisfied that the heroic act was his. Miss Marston invites him to call upon them in Washington. Leaving the launching platform, he is proceeding up town to buy a hat to replace his lost one, when a sudden explosion occurs near at hand in the big naval supplies factory of which his father is the principal owner. The whole building seems to burst into flame. Cushing, seeing numbers of women leaping from the windows, at the risk of his life succeeds in saving a number of workers from the burning factory. A busy reporter whom he encounters at the fire, after he has come out blackened and scorched from the smoking ruin, tells him that two of the girls he has rescued are daughters of an old, invalided navy yard employee named Howard. He is horror-stricken at the terrible tragedy he has witnessed and stunned by the reflection that his own father is responsible for the lack of fire-escapes, which he had been notified by the fire marshal two months ago to provide, but had neglected. He goes back, half-dazed, to his father's office. The latter is greatly excited when he learns that over one hundred lives have been sacrificed through his neglect of a plain duty. The question of this responsibility is discussed between them. The son tells his father plainly that he remembers the marshal's notification. "Somebody is guilty of the death of those girls," he says. "Who is it?" And Brander Cushing knows that a great breach—the first in his lifetime—has come between him and his son.

Sidney Cushing and his father attend a navy banquet given in honor of the launching, at which the Secretary of War and other high officials are present. Neither father nor son touch liquor. There are the usual official addresses, and Brander Cushing makes the best speech of the evening. Both are tortured throughout the festivities with visions of the horrible fire. Next day the papers announce that criminal proceedings are to be instituted against the parties responsible for the disaster, Brander Cushing being mentioned by name. The builder is besieged by reporters, to whom he denies point-blank having received any notice from the marshal. He knows that the prosecution will be in the hands of District Attorney Fleming, his political enemy, from whom he expects no mercy.

"Open the safe and prove that the papers are not there and I'll leave"

CHAPTER III

THE sweat stood on Brander Cushing's face in beads. He got up and walked across the length of the office; then suddenly he pushed a button and in response to an answer from the draughting room asked Sidney to come down to the office at once.

When Sidney appeared, he found his father seated, cool, calm, and direct as usual.

"I want you to go to Washington."

"Washington!"

"At once. I need some plans for the navy department. And there is a very important matter to go over with Mansfield at the patent office about those water valves. Look that up. Take time for it. How soon can you start?"

Sidney looked surprised.

"At any time. I thought you said at once."

"I did. Your bag is here. You can leave on No. 9. It goes at 10:15."

"But this affair of the grand jury, the fire, the—"

"Leave it to me, Sid. I can take care of it."

"But I don't feel right to leave you here to face it alone. You know that, don't you, pater?"

"Yes, yes. But you needn't worry."

Sidney went into the cloak room and got his bag and came out looking at his father wistfully and with a little perplexity.

"Here are notes on the patents. Mansfield is up on all details. But of course take nothing for granted. You don't need to hurry. Stay a week or ten days. And, by the way, didn't I hear Admiral Marston, or was it Miss Marston, invite you to call if you came to Washington?"

"Miss Marston." Sidney blushed.

"It's all right, Sid. I don't object to your looking in that direction."

Silence on Sidney's part. He was not ready to make a confidant even of his father concerning the emotions Pax Marston had already created in him. Already the thought of meeting her dimmed the first impulse of resolve to beg his father not to send him to Washington at this crisis.

"Plenty of money, Sid?"

"I think so."

"Don't spare. Your account is more than enough. If not, draw on me."

"Thank you, father, I have enough. Is that all?"

His father gave him a bundle of papers and Sidney put them into the bag.

"Yes. I believe that is all. Don't hurry. If you feel like it stay a couple of weeks. Congress is in session and you will enjoy seeing the bear-fight. There's your friend Gordon; have a good visit with him. And perhaps you don't know it, but the Secretary of War took a great fancy to you. He may invite you to luncheon. And, Sid—I have my reasons—promise not to read the papers for the next few days."

Sidney moved toward the door, slowly.

"All right, sir. I'm sick of the papers. I trust you to manage it all right. You're sure I ought not to stay just now—"

"No, no. I can attend to Fleming. I don't need you."

Sidney went out feeling uncertain. Once on the train he began to anticipate his Washington trip. Late that afternoon he put his hand in his pocket and took out the bow of ribbon he had risked his life to get. He looked at it a moment and his dark face glowed.

Brander Cushing's habit of business was never fixed. This morning he was all over the shipyard in the three hours before noon, after Sidney had gone. The complexity of the place presented no puzzles to him. He knew it as a master machinist knows the engine he has built, and he was passionately devoted to it in all its details.

His first trip had been to the great draughting room, where the lines of the new warship were being chalked out on the floor of the vast loft. He stayed there a few minutes to give directions and then plunged down to the engineering rooms. From there he went out to the yard itself, under the glass-covered roof, and stood a moment on a piece of steel sheeting, looking over the whole scene.

The ways were being prepared for the laying of the keel. Cushing's rapid glance took in every minute detail.

He called one of the yard foremen to him:

"Stuart, send McDonald here a moment, will you, please?"

Stuart looked queerly at Cushing.

"McDonald is not here this morning."

"Not here?"

"His two girls were killed in the fire yesterday. He is at home getting ready for the funerals to-morrow."

Brander Cushing braced his feet as if he feared to fall from a blow.

"Funerals! Stuart, I—"

He did not dare say he had almost forgotten that horror already. But the truth is, as soon as he had gone up to the room where those fascinating chalk lines curved their story under his eyes, his whole soul had flung itself around his remaining life ambition the building of the best and greatest warship in the world.

"Are any other men in the same—"

"Fifty absent this morning, Mr. Cushing," Stuart answered curtly; "and I can't answer for some others. They're ugly, Mr. Cushing—ugly is the word. You can see for yourself."

Cushing was a brave man. He walked down through the yard. Not a man touched his cap or greeted him. In reply to his "Good morning," not a word. There was clang of hammer, clank of chain, whistles up aloft by the cage that worked the running crane, the jar and resonance and whirr of that which was not like any other place on earth, but the silence of death surrounded Brander Cushing as he walked among the workmen. It seemed to him that a conspiracy existed. He asked a man a question. No answer. He asked another. The man laid down a tool, picked it up, laid it down again, spit on his hands, and looked Cushing squarely in the face, but did not say a word.

When Cushing had gone back into his office, the sweat stood on his face again as it had after his interview with the reporters. During that walk through the yard he had sensed what distrust is from men who, up to this time, had at least respected if they had not loved him.

He went out from habit to get the first edition of the afternoon paper.

An old man near the main yard entrance usually furnished him a copy.

He was not there.

"Where's Andrew?" he asked one of the office bookkeepers just going out to get luncheon.

"His granddaughter was in the fire yesterday."

Brander Cushing bought the paper elsewhere and went back to the office.

It was now after one o'clock. He was not hungry and did not go out with the rest of the office force.

The early edition contained in full his interview with the reporters. It was a fair report, and special emphasis was laid on the statement that no paper had been served on him by the marshal's office but that he had of his own initiative been making plans for fire-escapes and other safety appliances. Technically, therefore, the shipyard company was not guilty.

But following the interview with Cushing appeared another with the fire marshal, in which he plainly denounced Brander Cushing as a liar, asserted that notice had been duly served, yet when driven to make proof was obliged to admit that no such proof could be found as a record in the office of the department.

This to a great extent lessened the strength of the charge he made against Cushing's truthfulness, and made the editorial comment seem entirely plausible:

"The matter simply comes down to a question of veracity between a deputy fire marshal and a man like Brander Cushing. And every one who knows Cushing will be inclined to side with him. It looks as if it were up to the marshal to explain the careless and loose methods of his department. If any person is going to have indictments drawn against him by the grand jury, it looks as if it would be Fire Marshal Marks and not Brander Cushing. If he was morally to blame for not making proper provision for the safety of the factory operatives he is at least legally innocent, and the jury will have to take that into account in making its findings. Attorney Fleming will have to change his tactics in order to find the party responsible for the terrible tragedy of yesterday."

Continued on next page

Brander Cushing's Ambition

Continued from preceding page

Brander Cushing smiled grimly as he read. If there was any one in all the world he hated with a sound, undying animosity it was Silas Fleming, his old political enemy, the man who had for years been trying to hinder him in the work of his life, for reasons which may appear later on.

Between three and four o'clock a clerk came to the office, where, after another round through the yard, Brander Cushing had gone, to sit down and with a steady frown go over certain points again which had occupied him just after his interview with the reporters.

"The county attorney wants to see you, Mr. Cushing."

"Who?"

"Mr. Fleming."

Pause.

"What shall I say to him, sir?"

"Tell him I'll see him."

The attorney came in and Cushing calmly invited him to take a seat. Before doing so, Fleming shut the door and Cushing closed the one leading into a rear office where most of his personal draughting and planning were carried on.

"I came to see you, Mr. Cushing, about this newspaper article." Fleming had a paper in his hand and spread it out on his knees. He was a very large man, and as he leaned over toward Cushing, the heavy folds of skin on his hands, which lay on the paper, looked red and coarse by contrast with Brander Cushing's firm white hands, which he had clasped together over his knee.

"Well?"

"In this article—"

"Wait. I am not informed concerning the object of this call. As my time is exceedingly valuable, perhaps you had better tell me what is the real object of your coming."

"I told you it was to see you about this article."

"Well, the object—the object of that?"

"The object? The object?"

"Yes, sir. The object of your discussing the article in question."

"There can be but one, and you know what it is."

"I do not know. The article you mention proves clearly to the public that I am no more legally responsible for the loss at the fire than yourself. The grand jury will indict you as soon as me. Therefore I don't see the object of your visit and I beg to say I am very busy."

County Attorney Fleming hitched his big bulk up an inch nearer the ship contractor.

"You will see the object of my coming in a minute, Mr. Cushing. This marshal's notice — you say it was never served. Will you swear to a court that such is the fact?"

"It is none of your business to examine me."

"Mr. Cushing, I have a special reason for seeing you and I am impervious to insult. You have allowed me to come in here and I take it you are more or less curious to know why I came. We understand we're in the game to fight it out. But I'm not altogether depraved, and I don't want to see you make the mistake of your life. You know the deputy did serve you the papers. I would be willing to wager they are somewhere in this office now."

Brander Cushing sat there looking at the big hulk of the attorney, with a feeling in his heart of enraged astonishment. What did the man mean? What made him so positive? What was he driving at? There was politics in it somewhere, but where he could not determine. But of one thing he was certain: No power on earth could make him acknowledge to Silas Fleming that his guess about the marshal's notice was true.

"You are on the wrong tack. The papers are not here, because I never received them."

Fleming leaned over until his fat forefinger almost touched Cushing's white hand.

"Would you swear now that the papers are not right there in that safe, in a drawer with a key in it?" The forefinger swung around and pointed at the safe.

Brander Cushing's heart leaped up in a torrent of rage. As a matter of fact, however, Fleming had guessed it; the papers were in that identical spot. He cursed his indecision in not having destroyed them that morning. He rose and in a tone of thunder said:

"Leave this office, you impertinent whelp!"

Fleming stood up.

"Open the safe and prove that the papers are not there and I'll leave."

"Get out!" Cushing advanced on him, his eye gleaming.

Fleming backed to the door. There he paused.

"I am going without having said why I really came. If you were willing to take me into your confidence I could make it worth while. As it is—"

"Well?"

"I shall simply subpœna your son as a witness. He was here when the deputy served the papers. The deputy swears he was present. I will see whether he will perjure himself to save you."

Brander Cushing gave a cry that Fleming had never heard before. The two men stood there in silence confronting each other.

Chapter IV

WASHINGTON was only four hours' ride from Dockville, and Sidney arrived at 3:30 P.M. He went to his hotel, and from there immediately to the patent office, in obedience to his father's instructions. At the office he learned that Mansfield had been called suddenly to Annapolis and would not return for two days. So there was nothing to do but wait, and meanwhile there was his promised call at Admiral Marston's. He decided to go that evening.

When he was ushered into the house he was greeted by the admiral himself, who came out of a little office room opening up from the far end of the drawing-room. Marston was eccentric in many ways, in spite of being commonplace in many more, and among his eccentricities was a room in his house the duplicate and counterpart of his private cabin on board the Republic. This room was the cause of constantly polite differences between the admiral's wife and himself, but had never reached any really dangerous stage.

"Mrs. Marston and Pax will be home soon. You must stay to dinner. We dine en famille. And, by good luck, nephew Ed is with us. You can tell us that story. Capital! You couldn't have come at a better time."

The admiral was very enthusiastic over him. Sidney easily complied with the invitation, and found himself awaiting the entrance of Pax and her mother with almost nervous eagerness.

When they finally came in, followed shortly afterward by the young lieutenant, Ed Marston, Sidney was more than gratified at the kindly reception given him.

Mrs. Marston was a large, stiff-minded woman, very plain of feature and simple of dress. Sidney liked her. Ed was an overgrown, self-sufficient, loud-talking young cub, and it took nearly the whole evening for Sidney to decide whether he liked him or not. Pax Marston was all he anticipated. Why had he anticipated anything? He did not know, but he had, and she seemed to know it. Was the girl unmaidenly? He chided himself at the thought. But she certainly did not hesitate to let him see that she was really glad to meet him again.

This is the time of year when most youngsters suffer from chapped hands and rough skins.

It is easy to understand why.

The average American boy is full of life. He is always doing something or going somewhere. He will wash his hands and face—when you tell him. But he is apt to waste very little time in drying them.

That is what causes all the trouble—that and the use of soaps containing "free" alkali.

You should use a pure, mild soap—Ivory Soap. You should see, also, that, in winter, the younger members of your family thoroughly dry their hands and faces before venturing out of doors.

For bath, toilet and fine laundry purposes, Ivory Soap is in a class by itself. It contains no "free" alkali. It floats. It is pure. It lathers freely, rinses easily and leaves the skin soft, sweet, smooth and exquisitely clean.

Ivory Soap . . . 99 44/100 Per Cent. Pure

At the table she sat beside him, and between the easy exchange of varied talk led him on finally to relate the details of his part in the rescue of Cousin Ed, at the time the hawser snapped and swept the young officer into the water.

"There really is not much to tell. I was sitting on the dock that evening watching the transports and cruisers go out. Father had been busy in the navy yard all day, and I had been helping him. About the time the Del Monte pulled out he asked me to go down with one of the departing officers —I think it was Lieutenant Brooks— and from him get a sketch of the Del Monte's forward bulkhead which father wanted for comparison with the Aloah. I had gone on board, got what I wanted, and had come off again and sat down on the dock nearly opposite the forward capstan.

"When the hawser snapped, it looked from where I sat like a coil of green serpent. I could see a number of men jump back, and then the end of the cable leaped right up off the deck like a live thing, and I knew one of the men was caught."

"Me," said Ed Marston. He had been listening to Sidney's account with great boyish interest. At that point Sidney began to like him.

"Yes, you. I had never been introduced, but it seemed to me a proper thing to get intimate with you at once. When you dropped into the water you were so near me that your feet knocked my hat off."

"I'll get you a new one!" shouted Ed.

"That's two hats you've lost, Mr. Cushing," said Pax demurely. "I wonder who will pay for the other."

"All in the family," Sidney said, before he realized how it might sound.

The admiral and Mrs. Marston looked puzzled. Pax laughed and blushed. Sidney bit his tongue and Ed Marston stared.

"There," went on Sidney hurriedly, "it was a very simple and easy thing for me to slip down into the water and grab you," looking gravely at the young officer. "You were wedged in between two of the piles, lucky for both of us, for the Del Monte had swung in so close that if there hadn't been an opening there big enough for both of us I am afraid we wouldn't either of us be here to-night."

"That would be too bad."

"I'm glad you feel so. Well, after that, there isn't much to tell. I must say, Admiral Marston, that the crew of the Del Monte acted with wonderful quickness and precision. Two of them were over the side in less than half a minute and a score were ready to go if the space had allowed. The cruiser

Continued on page 1197

Thanksgiving in the Country

By MARGARET E. SANGSTER

WHEN Thanksgiving Day comes to the farm, to the rural village and the quiet hamlet, it is the crown and culmination of springtime and summer. Seed-time and harvest answer one another in song and chorus on Thanksgiving morn. When the ground was broken to the furrow and the tiny seeds hidden in the earth, when the blossoms waved on the bough and the birds were building their nests, God made a promise that has been fulfilled this year as in all the years, in the gathering of fruits and the reaping of fields. The birds built their nests and reared their little ones around the country home so that May and June, their busy season, resounded with their melody. Later, when the fledglings had found their wings and learned to fly, the parent birds sang less often, and only in matins and vespers dropped from the tree-tops their silvery notes. So it has been with parents and children in the families and homes of the planet since the world began.

. . .

The merriest time is when the children are growing up, and the quieter time when they are grown. The heart that is fullest of thanksgiving is the heart of that one who has known cares, solicitudes and labors, and entered after a while on a period of rest, when desire has been succeeded by repayment and life's meridian been reached. The year's most exquisite harmonies belong to the Indian summer, when the sunshine filters down through rainbow tints, when the forests are clothed in purple and gold, when the grapes have ripened in the vineyards and in great flocks the birds go flying to the South.

. . .

Last summer in August, the farmer's wife looked from her door with satisfaction as she counted her twenty or thirty white turkeys walking in stately file across the lawn, reminding the spectator of a train of ladies, with here and there a gallant knight, marching on their way to a vast cathedral. The turkeys may not have been white. Sometimes they were dressed in brown, but the white ones are the prettiest, and as they step delicately along with an air of solemn dignity, no one would suspect how much they retain of their primitive wildness. The domestic turkey vies with the eagle in the claim to be our American bird. In his nature he is not unlike his wild progenitors, for he loves to wander, hide, and stroll far afield. Also, with ruthless savagery, he kills the weak of the flock, and a woman who has brought up many broods tells me that she is obliged to safeguard the weaker among the young with ceaseless vigilance, because the fierce gobbler has no mercy upon them. With him the rule is the survival of the fittest.

. . .

The train of turkeys in August may well be solemn, for it is marching straight to sacrifice. The destiny of these beautiful creatures is, to be sure, heroic and exalted, for they are to be proudly borne to the place of honor on the Thanksgiving dinner tables of a continent. I may be too soft-hearted, but always in the summer I feel a pang when I hear the farmer telling how much he expects to receive from these living products when they are sent to the city markets. I own with self-abasement that I enjoy a walk through the same markets when the turkeys, duly prepared, are ready to be transferred to the baskets of customers and the skill of the cook. Then, too, they are transmuted into books and newspapers and magazines for the long winter evenings, into a new outfit for the daughter, shoes for the boys, and whatever else contributes to the comfort and luxury of the home when the snows are deep and the storms are abroad.

. . .

Thanksgiving, as I have said, is the triumphant coronation of many days of patient labor. The first Thanksgiving dinner followed the first harvest in Massachusetts nearly three hundred years ago. Governor Bradford issued a proclamation to the colony, and the hardy pioneers who had braved illness and cold and hostile Indians, who had already buried many of their loved ones and had cleared the forests alike for homes and graves, met and thanked the Almighty for his goodness. They counted their mercies and disdained the thought of their tribulation. It is to them that we owe our long succession of Thanksgiving days. First, as they were kept in one and another State, until at last, in 1863, the blended holiday and holy day became a national institution.

. . .

IN THESE days the pendulum is swinging back to the farm. Scientific agriculture is forging to the front, and the orchards of Connecticut and Oregon, Rhode Island and Minnesota, New Jersey and Michigan are sharing as sources of wealth with our mines of copper, silver and coal. There is not a State in our Union in which, if men's eyes are open, they may not find golden gains at no great distance from their own doors. The towns still attract the lads from the country, and in all the great cities there are county clubs composed of prosperous men who like to meet from time to time that they may talk over their school-days, and remember the joys that were theirs when they fished in the brook, dived in the deep hole, tramped over the hills and gathered chestnuts. Alas, the days of chestnutting may soon be over for the country boys, unless the scientific agriculturist can arrest the progress of decay that is rapidly denuding the land of these beautiful trees. Bankers, brokers, lawyers, physicians, merchants and mechanics, engineers and electricians, and aviators, too, hark back to the country which gave them their start, though they have made their mark in the town.

. . .

As Thanksgiving draws near, the old father and mother in the homestead begin to count the days until John, their eldest born, shall come back with his wife and children, to sit again at the family table. Their pretty Ruth, married ten years ago, will be coming home, too, with her husband and the babies, and the children who have settled in homes closer to theirs will feel the homing call and crowd beneath the roof for a real old-fashioned Thanksgiving. Every train that starts from San Francisco or New Orleans, St. Louis or Chicago, from the great mountains or the Great Lakes in late November, bears homeward its army of home-going pilgrims. Men in whom one would suspect no sentiment make an effort to meet their kith and kin at this season, and in the meeting forget sordid aims and grim anxieties and once again are children at home.

. . .

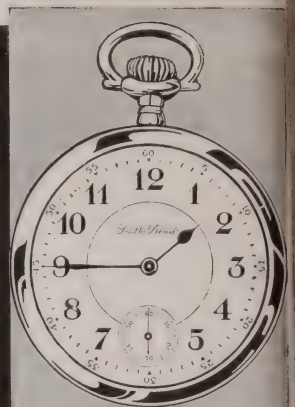
I have never forgotten a glimpse I once had as the train in which I was a passenger stopped at a wayside station in the mountains. Not far from the roadside there was a white house with green blinds and tall pillars. A little gray-haired woman came running down the path as if she had been a girl and presently was caught and whirled back in the arms of a great brown-bearded son who must have been fifty, while three other men, his juniors, rushed behind him with shouts of "Hello, mother! Here we are!" On the veranda stood the father leaning on his cane ready to welcome his boys, his smile benignant, his look a benediction. In those days, the country was not as now attracting to itself thousands of householders from the city. More and more we are realizing that we ought not to abandon to the newcomer from Sweden in the north and Italy in the south of Europe the farm-lands we have called our own. We thank God for the great tide that sweeps toward us from other shores. We have room enough for every one, but although we are glad to have the foreign-born peoples find a home with us and settle in our midst, they cannot be properly assimilated under the flag unless we, too, shall stay with them and cultivate the fields with the old zest and the new methods. For frugality, economy, plain living and high thinking, for solid and substantial virtue and common sense we still look to the farming communities. The white-spired church, the schoolhouse, the sturdy children trudging along the country roads, the country doctor riding in these days in his motor-car oftener than in his gig, are among our fairest pictures. The simplicity and sweetness of the household life near to nature's heart appeal to us with a compelling charm. As from coast to coast we shall keep Thanksgiving this year, let us thank God for good government and the blessing of peace. Away with pessimism, away with the cry that times are hard. They are never improved by complaining. To thank God and take courage, to believe in the forward advance of the Republic, and reverently to say "God save the commonwealth" should be our pleasure as it is our privilege at the return of our American Thanksgiving Day.

THE THING SO DEAR

I CANNOT think but God must know
About the thing I long for so;
I know He is so good, so kind,
I cannot think but He will find
Some way to help, some way to show
To me the thing I long for so.

I stretch my hand—it lies so near;
It looks so sweet, it looks so dear:
"Dear Lord," I pray, "Oh, let me know
If it is wrong to want it so."
He only smiles—He does not speak:
My heart grows weaker and more weak.
With looking at the thing so dear,
Which lies so far, and yet so near.

Now, Lord, I leave at Thy loved feet
This thing which looks so near, so sweet:
I will not seek, I will not long—
I almost fear I have been wrong:
I'll go and work the harder, Lord,
And wait till by some loud, clear word,
Thou callest me to Thy loved feet,
To take this thing so dear, so sweet.



SAXE HOLM.

THE OLD CHAPTER

ONE of the sweet old chapters,
After a day like this.
The day brought tears and troubles,
The evening brought no kiss,
Nor rest in the arms I long for—Rest and refuge and home;
Grieved and lonely and weary,
Unto the Book I come.

One of the sweet old chapters—
The love that blossoms through His care of the birds and lilies
Out in the meadow dew.
His evening lies soft around them,
Their faith is only—to be;
Ah! hushed by the tender lesson,
My God, let me rest in Thee!

—Selected.

Wear The Master Timepiece

HERE is a watch that was inspected 411 times in the making, that was nearly a year in the process of building; a watch that ran perfectly in a 700-hour test before it was allowed to leave the factory; a watch that passed a Master Inspector whose sole business is to find fault; a watch that when finished was "finished" in the perfect sense.

"The South Bend Watch"

These Master Timepieces are sold by over 15,000 expert retail jewelers. They are becoming dominant in every section of the country because of their marvelous accuracy. See a South Bend Watch at your jeweler's. Ask him about "Personal Adjustment."

The adjustment of a watch to your personality by an expert jeweler is absolutely necessary, because good watches run differently for different people. If you walk much, ride a great deal in motor-cars, move quickly, etc., your watch is affected and should be regulated to offset the general condition under which you carry a watch,

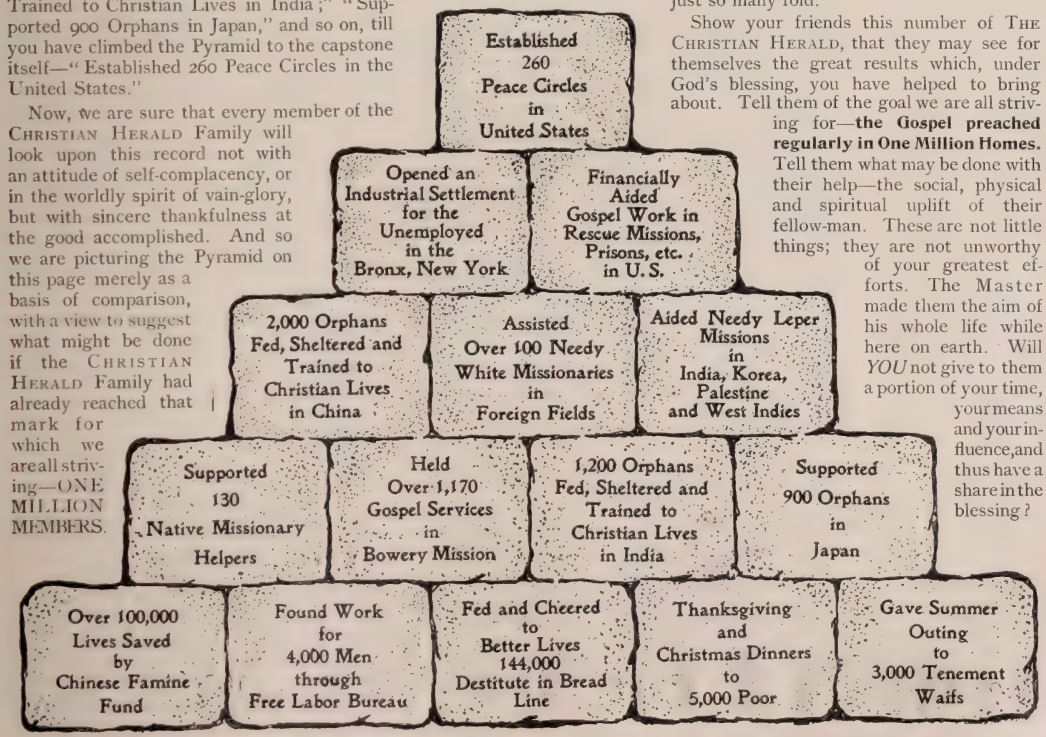
Only a good jeweler can do this, and it can be done only with a good watch, for common watches are not sensitive enough for such delicate regulation — hence, seldom keep time for anybody.

You can get a South Bend in a solid gold case for $75, or in less expensive cases within everyone's reach.

Write us for free book, "How Good Watches Are Made." It tells all about watches. It will help you get an admirable timepiece.

THE SOUTH BEND WATCH COMPANY
Dept. 252, South Bend, Ind.

"By their fruits ye shall know them"



DEAR FRIEND: Do you, as a member of the CHRISTIAN HERALD Family, realize the important relation you bear to the work of that Family as a whole? Do you realize the tremendous scope and power of that work?

Look at the illustration on this page, the Pyramid of Loyal Service, and you will not only be surprised at the extent of the work, but you will be impressed by the far-reaching influence which the CHRISTIAN HERALD Family wields for the uplift of the world.

See the five solid foundation stones: "Over 100,000 lives saved by Chinese Famine Fund;" "Fed and cheered 144,000 destitute in Bread Line;" "Gave summer outing to 3,000 Tenement Waifs;" "Found work for 4,000 men through Free Labor Bureau;" "Thanksgiving and Christmas dinners to 5,000 poor"—is it not something to feel that your co-operation helped to lay these blocks of helpfulness?

And then cast your eye upon those other stones which are the result of the earnest effort of the CHRISTIAN HERALD Family to spread the Gospel throughout all lands: "1,170 Gospel services in the Bowery Mission;" "Assisted over 100 Needy White Missionaries in Foreign Fields;" "Supported 130 Native Missionary Helpers;" "2,000 Orphans Fed, Sheltered and Trained to Christian lives in China;" "1,200 Orphans Fed, Sheltered and Trained to Christian Lives in India;" "Supported 900 Orphans in Japan," and so on, till you have climbed the Pyramid to the capstone itself—"Established 260 Peace Circles in the United States."

Now, we are sure that every member of the CHRISTIAN HERALD Family will look upon this record not with an attitude of self-complacency, or in the worldly spirit of vain-glory, but with sincere thankfulness at the good accomplished. And so we are picturing the Pyramid on this page merely as a basis of comparison, with a view to suggest what might be done if the CHRISTIAN HERALD Family had already reached that mark for which we are all striving—ONE MILLION MEMBERS.

The imagination kindles at the power for good, at the influence for religion which would be ours if we were One Million Strong. Think a moment. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD goes every week in the year to 33,859 separate post offices in the United States and Canada, and is read by the members of over 300,000 families. In some places it is passed around to be read from family to family. This means that at least 1,500,000 persons read the paper every week.

But suppose we had One Million Subscribers. That is to say, suppose THE CHRISTIAN HERALD were received in One Million households, situated in every city, town and village in the land. That would mean that our army of readers would be over Five Million strong. Five Million persons all praying, all working with one consecrated purpose—the uplift of humanity, the glory of God.

And it is not so much to ask, much less to accomplish, if you, dear friend, work shoulder to shoulder with every other member of the CHRISTIAN HERALD Family to bring it to pass. Do you as a member of the Great Family continue that membership. Use every effort to induce your friends to join. If you persuade only one new member to join, you will be increasing your own initiative one hundred per cent. And remember that every new addition to the multitude augments its power for good just so many fold.

Show your friends this number of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, that they may see for themselves the great results which, under God's blessing, you have helped to bring about. Tell them of the goal we are all striving for—the Gospel preached regularly in One Million Homes. Tell them what may be done with their help—the social, physical and spiritual uplift of their fellow-man. These are not little things; they are not unworthy of your greatest efforts. The Master made them the aim of his whole life while here on earth. Will YOU not give to them a portion of your time, your means and your influence, and thus have a share in the blessing?

The Pyramid-builders of Egypt erected great monuments which time has defaced, but has not wholly destroyed. Their work represented generations of heathen labor. The Pyramid reared by the humble, self-denying efforts of God's people is indestructible. It is an integral part of the great campaign which has for its ultimate object the winning of the world for Christ.

McCall's Magazine

The greatest woman's fashion journal in America. Has over one million subscribers —more than any other similar publication. Besides showing all the latest designs of McCall Patterns, each issue is brimful of sparkling short stories and most helpful information for women. McCall's is a large, artistic, handsomely illustrated hundred-page monthly periodical that no woman can afford to be without. If you wish to save money and keep in style, subscribe for McCall's Magazine at once. Any one of the celebrated McCall Patterns (value 15 cents) free with each subscription. Select your free pattern from your first number of McCall's. McCall Patterns lead all others in style, fit, simplicity, economy, and number sold. More dealers sell McCall Patterns than any other two makes combined.

The Housewife

The Housewife is exactly described by the name it bears, being edited with a view to giving the woman, who has the care and development of her home at heart, valuable suggestions and assistance. The department devoted to Cookery always contains practical, seasonable and tasty recipes. The Fashion Department, recently enlarged, displays the most desirable and fetching styles. The Social Circle, a special department, found in no other magazine, is used by Housewife readers as an interchange of ideas for home decoration, amusement, hints in economy, health, etc. The many serial and short stories are interesting and wholesome, effectively illustrated. Handsomely printed with beautiful colored covers. A magazine the arrival of which the reader looks forward to each month with interest.

People's Home Journal

By bringing good literature within the reach of the reading public of this country, The People's Home Journal has probably done more than any other popular fiction and home magazine to help build up the American home into the great national bulwark that it is to-day. For the past twenty-five years fathers and mothers have looked to The People's Home Journal for their reading and the reading for their children. This magazine has had a wonderful influence for good in every one of the homes—almost a million—into which it goes. It has become famous for its brilliant serial and short stories. Then you will also find all kinds of departments to cover a multitude of home subjects, such as cooking, care of children, entertainment, latest styles in clothing and newest fashions in needlework.

Pictorial Review

claims pre-eminence among women's magazines for four reasons: First, for its fashions, which are easily the most up-to-date, correct and most practical of any magazine published anywhere. Second, for its common-sense, essentially helpful practical home and household departments, which cover the whole field of housekeeping and its problems. Pictorial Review devotes more space to this subject than any other magazine in this country. Third, for the wealth and interest of its art and literary sections. Pictorial Review stories are good stories, better and more interesting, stronger stories than you are apt to find in the pages of other women's magazines. Fourth, last, but not least, for its uplifting, instructive special articles bearing on home problems by the best and most popular writers.

Ladies' World

This is the big year of the Ladies' World. 1911-1912 marks the 25th year of its existence. Nothing has been left undone to make the Ladies' World during the coming year run far ahead of its record for any previous year. The magnificent list of writers and illustrators, rich array of magazine material and the ever valuable departments will make the Ladies' World almost indispensable to you during this —its Silver Anniversary Year. The December Jubilee Number will contain an especially written commemorative poem by Edwin Markham, special articles by Speaker Champ Clark of the House of Representatives and Mrs. Robert M. LaFollette, Strickland Gillilan's reminiscences, stories by John Luther Long, Florence Morse Kingsley, Beulah Marie Dix and the beginning of an entrancing serial by Edith Barnard Delano.

American Boy

The great magazine for boys. Give it to your boy. It will appeal more to his finer sensibilities than the knick-knacky, soon-forgotten gifts. It trains him to live and think right. The American Boy contains stories written by men who understand the American boy—stories of adventure, skill, travel, history, biography and world events, beautifully illustrated. Proper amount of sports and games and departments of photography, electricity, stamps, curios, carpentry, how to do things and how to make things, and it has a department devoted to the Boy Scouts of America, to which Ernest Thompson Seton, Chief Scout, contributes an illustrated page each week. It is the biggest, brightest and best magazine for boys in all the world. The American Boy is eagerly read by 500,000 intelligent, manly American boys.

Current Literature

Current Literature is an illustrated review of the large events and important utterances of the month. It is so in touch with the changing world that even its editor cannot tell what subjects will be treated by it one month ahead. The great currents of thought and action, in politics and industry, in science and religion, in literature and the drama, are all brilliantly mirrored in its pages. It sweeps the whole field, in both hemispheres, as no other magazine in the world has ever before done, and gives you the interpretations on all sides of all vital questions. The chief departments of Current Literature are: A Review of the World, Persons in the Foreground; Science and Discovery; Music and Drama, and Religion and Ethics.

Lowest Price Magazine Club Offers

The present season, 1911-1912, shows many changes in our magazine clubbing offers. A number of publishers have found it necessary, because of improved magazines and increased cost, to raise their prices. The popular $1.00-a-year magazines have, within the last year or so, all been advanced in price to $1.50 per year, and 15 cents per copy. Our old contracts with these publications have expired, and their wholesale rates to us have been increased. We are, therefore, unable to duplicate many of the offers of last year. However, we still lead in offering our subscribers the very lowest priced magazine bargains. Our 1912 Almanac is sent Free to each Christian Herald new subscriber, and to all old subscribers when they renew their subscriptions.

The Christian Herald's Own Club Rate

This coming year THE CHRISTIAN HERALD may be had for the first time at a club rate, as follows:—
Your Own RENEWAL and ONE New Subscription for ONE Year for $2.25. or Your Own RENEWAL and TWO New Subscriptions for One Year for $3.00.

CHRISTIAN HERALD ($1.50 a Year) .
LADIES' WORLD (One Year) . . or Housewife or McCall's or any one other magazine in Group One
} Our Price $1.75

CHRISTIAN HERALD ($1.50 a Year) .
CURRENT LITERATURE ($3.00 a Year)
with any two other magazines in Group One or with any one other magazine in Group Two
} Our Price $3.00

CHRISTIAN HERALD ($1.50 a Year) .
REVIEW OF REVIEWS ($3.00 a Year)
with any two other magazines in Group One or with any one other magazine in Group Two
} Our Price $3.25

CHRISTIAN HERALD ($1.50 a Year) .
PICTORIAL REVIEW ($1.50 a Year) . or any other magazine in Group Two
} Our Price $2.00

CHRISTIAN HERALD ($1.50 a Year) .
WOMAN'S HOME COMP'N ($1.50 a Year) or a choice of any other magazine in Class 23, instead of Woman's Home Companion or a choice of any magazine in Class 20, instead of Woman's Home Companion, for $2.50
} Our Price $2.65

CHRISTIAN HERALD ($1.50 a Year) .
OUTLOOK ($3.00 a Year) . . .
Both magazines must be ordered to the same name and address. No commission on this club.
} Our Price $3.00

FARM JOURNAL (2 years) add 25 cents to any Combination

Foreign and Canadian Postage Extra

Group One. $1.75

Any one magazine in this group with the Christian Herald one year . . $1.75
Any two with the Christian Herald . 2.10
Any three with the Christian Herald . 2.40

McCALL'S — LADIES' WORLD
HOUSEWIFE — FARM JOURNAL (2 yrs.)
PEOPLE'S HOME JOURNAL

These Magazines are the very best publications in their field. They are all clean and refined, each excluding objectionable advertising, and we have no hesitancy in recommending each of them to our readers. They have made great strides during the past couple of years in editorial contents and general appearance. The move of the old popular $1 magazines to higher prices has given these journals a big impetus and an opportunity which they have been quick to seize. All three magazines in Group One will, together with THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, give more reading matter than any one magazine in Group Three with THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and will cost less money.

N.B.—We will cheerfully refund the money paid should any one be disappointed in any one of these magazines.

Group Two. $2.00

Any one magazine in this group with the Christian Herald one year . . $2.00
Any two with the Christian Herald . 2.60
Any three with the Christian Herald . 3.20

AMERICAN BOY — LITTLE FOLKS
MODERN PRISCILLA — METROPOLITAN PICTORIAL REVIEW — SUCCESS
WORLD EVANGEL

We especially call attention to the descriptions of these publications on the margins of this page. Of the entire group perhaps the Pictorial Review has made the greatest strides within the last couple of years. It has improved immensely in editorial quality, and is one of the most interesting publications in the woman's field. The Metropolitan has undergone a radical change in character as well as size. Its plans for the coming year are extremely interesting. The Success Magazine has undergone many changes during the past year. It is now under new management, and it will continue to be one of the most valuable magazines in its field. The American Boy, Little Folks, and Modern Priscilla are all old favorites with THE CHRISTIAN HERALD readers.

Group Three

You may order with the Christian Herald any other standard magazine through us at their special clubbing price or class rate.

Class 20 Magazines	Class 23 Magazines
Cosmopolitan	American Magazine
Good Housekeeping	Garden Magazine
Harper's Bazar	Everybody's
	McClure's
	Woman's Home Comp'n

At the same time you send us your CHRISTIAN HERALD subscription you may add any other Magazine you want at its special "class number" price as named and advertised by the publisher in any magazine clubbing catalog. Add together the class numbers of the magazines you want, multiply the total by five, and add the amount you get to your CHRISTIAN HERALD remittance. We will forward your order promptly and save you time and trouble.

EXAMPLE:

Woman's Home Companion, Class 23
Cosmopolitan, " 20
Total .	43
	x5
	$2.15
Add the Christian Herald .	1.50
Total .	$3.65

Little Folks

In Little Folks magazine love and joy and goodness are presented in stories of real and imaginary children and creatures and things. Besides the wholesome stories, there are charming pictures, sunny little poems, and suggestions to keep children happily busy in beneficial work or joyous play. Little Folks is a blessing to every mother and child, for it helps children mentally and morally, while it amuses them. Every child will love the magazine, and remember the donor with gratitude.

Farm Journal

is the standard farm and home paper of America; made for housekeepers, boys and girls, as well as fruit-growers, truckers, poultrymen, stockmen, dairymen, suburbanites and village people. It has always "stood up" for women. It is clean, brief, bright, "boiled down," intensely practical. "Cream, not skim-milk," is its motto. It is thirty-three years old, and known everywhere. "Judge Biggie" and "Peter Tumbledown" are chasers better known to many than Hamlet or Micawber. Its poultry department is famous.

Modern Priscilla

First, last and all the time, the best Fancy Work Magazine published in America, if not in the world. A practical instructor and reliable adviser in every branch of feminine handicraft known to women, including all kinds of embroidery, crochet, knitting, lace, bead work, basketry, stenciling, oil, water-color and china painting, art leather work, art brass work, pyrography, etc. Every number is profusely illustrated with beautiful original designs and full-size details of stitches. Besides fancy work, The Modern Priscilla provides its readers many specially edited departments.

World Evangel

Readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD who are Sunday School teachers or scholars should not fail to include The World Evangel in their combination magazine orders. The Evangel is the leading Sunday School magazine. It makes teaching delightful and effective, its fund of anecdotes enabling the teacher to interest scholars of all grades. Its International Lesson Study Department provides the best available exposition and information, and its lesson-teaching department is divided into Adult, Intermediate and Primary Departments. The Evangel will save time and increase your efficiency.

Success

The only home magazine that is not a woman's publication, a children's paper or a farm journal. It has recently been combined with the National Post and the united magazine for 1912 promises a remarkable assortment of vital, live articles on the questions of the hour, and stories by our best fiction writers, old and new. Among the magazine's special features for 1912 are Orison Swett Marden's inspiring editorial articles; a vigorous, readable review every month of the world's leading events and chat about the striking personalities of the hour; Mrs. Curtis's Home Corner and Pin Money Papers for women readers; twelve fearless, progressive editorials on the questions before the people; hints to prospective investors; and, by no means least welcome to our readers, a page of the month's best anecdotes.

Review of Reviews

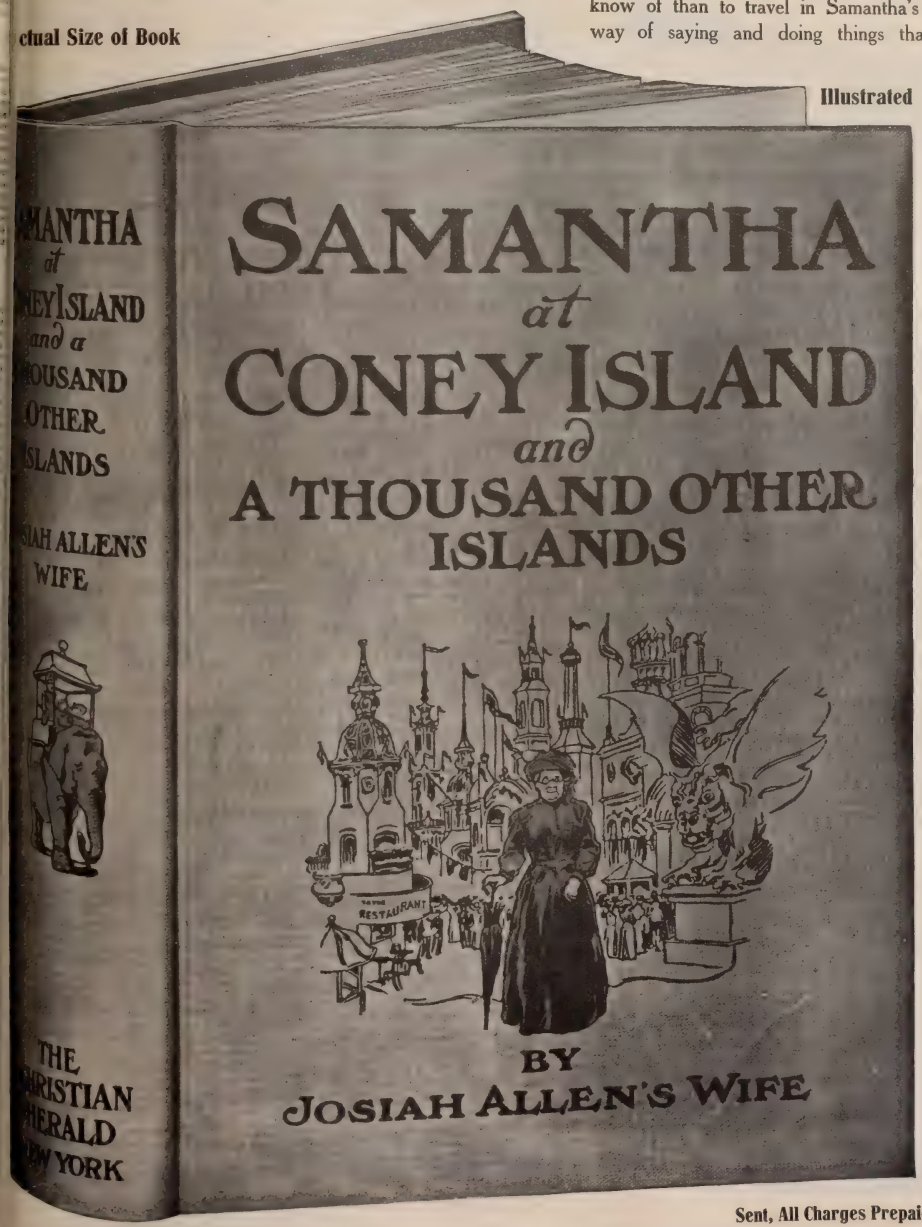
Fifty magazines condensed for busy people. Always necessary, it is absolutely indispensable in these times of stirring public affairs, to the man who thinks and wants to know what is going on around him. It brings together the best that is in all the other important magazines and explains, through Albert Shaw's timely editorials, political issues, persons and all noteworthy events which you must know about. It is always fully informed, interestingly written and splendidly illustrated. Because, as they say, "they cannot do without it," intelligent men and women have given the Review of Reviews the largest subscription list in the world among the magazines not publishing fiction. The "Progress of the World" and "Leading Articles of the Month" are two of the most important features of each issue.

Metropolitan

The Metropolitan is now published in a new size, 10¾ x 14 inches. The new size is not a mere change of inches; it is a great, important step towards the national magazine of the future. The new-size Metropolitan has set itself to restore the appeal to good taste. It sets out, first of all, to supply literature; in the second place humor; in the third place, human feeling. If it supplies those three elements, you may be sure it will also give the reader more knowledge of life than all the sensational articles and muckraking attacks can produce in a thousand years. Important and timely articles by authoritative writers will be a special feature of the new Metropolitan. Finley Peter Dunne, the famous creator of "Mr. Dooley," will be a regular contributor, under the heading, "From the Bleachers." Stirring fiction will be a strong feature.

Outlook

During the coming year the Outlook will be of more importance to you than even during the last, as the discussions in the political field will be of greater interest, due to the approaching presidential election and the outcome of the Taft policies. Of course, Mr. Roosevelt will write in his trenchant editorials on great public questions of the day. In these articles he will continue to discuss the movements for clean politics, honest business, and popular rule. Not even the editors of the Outlook themselves agree with all that Mr. Roosevelt writes, but every one must agree that what he writes commands attention. You will enjoy the Outlook, for it is unquestionably one of the best edited and illustrated periodicals in existence. Do not forget that the Outlook, with its 52 issues, includes the 12 double magazine numbers.



NOTE— The matter on this page describing the Magazines is supplied by their respective publishers, for the information of our readers
WE WILL REFUND THE MONEY paid for any Magazine, including The Christian Herald, if you find such Magazine undesirable in your home

Address: THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK CITY

THE FUNNIEST BOOK OF THE YEAR

SAMANTHA ALLEN is the most popular author of bright and amusing stories in America to-day. Her books sell into the hundreds of thousands. The dear old lady is so irresistibly whimsical and funny, yet so kind and lovable withal, that she wins the hearts of her readers instantly. If you want to pass an evening of delightful amusement at home and to put the whole Family Circle aglow with genuine merriment, just read a bit of Samantha at Coney Island and they will hunger for the whole story. And the best of it is that there is a deal of sweet and lovable sentiment in what Samantha writes. She is more than a wit. She is a philosopher, sound at heart, and with downright sensible ideas about every topic she touches. We all need the sunshine and cheer at times to chase away the gloomy shadows, and there is no better prescription we know of than to travel in Samantha's company. She has such a delightful way of saying and doing things that she stands in a class by herself.

Actual Size of Book

Sent, All Charges Prepaid

How the Craze Caught Josiah

Samantha was living happily as Josiah Allen's wife when they returned from their trip around the world, and all might have gone as merrily as a wedding bell, had not Serenus Gowdey put the idea of Coney Island into Josiah's head. After that Josiah could talk of nothing else. He was so wrought up that he would spring up in bed at night crying out: "All aboard for Coney Island!" or, "Get your hot dogs!" or, "See the Awful Tower and the alligators!" or other things equally as bad.

Samantha gave him catnip tea, but that "didn't git the pizen out of his system." She planned a trip to the Thousand Islands, thinking to turn him from the subject, but Josiah would not be turned; he spoke of it day and night. Even the presence of Faithful Smith, a sweet soul whose father had refused to allow her to marry Dick West and so had saddened her life, failed to stem the tide of Josiah's longing for Coney Island, and Samantha was more shocked than surprised one morning to find that he and Serenus Gowdey had run away to the great Amusement City by the sea.

Samantha Pursues Her Pardner

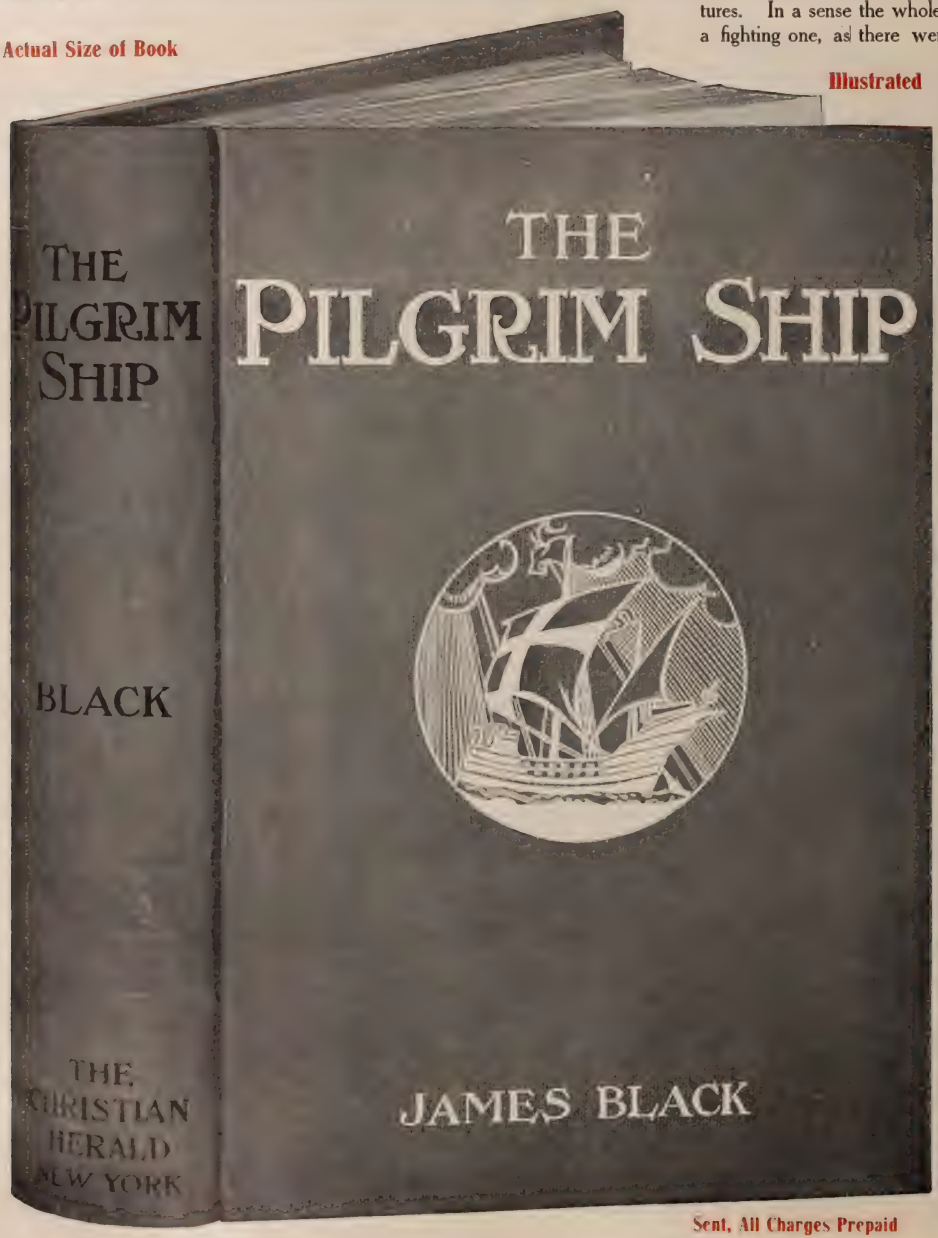
Of course, Samantha followed him immediately. What else could she do? "What wuz Josiah Allen doin' in that place of folly and fashion?" wailed Samantha. "Could he keep his innocence amidst the awful temptations? I hearn there wuz places there where folks stood on their heads; wuz his brain strong enough to stand the jolt?"

Samantha arrived in Coney Island on the day before the destruction of Dreamland by fire, and her experiences were enough to fill a book which has been called Samantha at Coney Island and a Thousand Other Islands. In it she relates her adventures, which were strange, and her stories, which are screamingly funny.

How she pursued Josiah through all the mazes of the concessions, how she rode the witching waves, went on a voyage to the moon, watched the circus, looked in the magic mirrors, sank through the floor, got lost in the maze, trod the rocking steps, lectured the Head Hunters, discovered the fire, rescued the incubator babies from the flames, and finally saved her beloved "pardner," Josiah, from the jaws of the blazing lion, etc., together with the pretty love romance which fittingly ends the book—all of these you must read for yourself. The full story of her wonderful experiences is told in her own inimitable fashion, mingling humor with pathos and giving every reader enough sunshine and laughter to last the whole year round.

Samantha at Coney Island is a large, handsome book beautifully bound in cloth, 350 pages printed in large type. The various scenes described are profusely illustrated in line drawings by a well-known artist who has caught the right spirit of Samantha's humor and incorporated it in all his drawings.

SAMANTHA AT CONEY ISLAND will be sent prepaid with THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for one year (52 issues), together with a copy of the new CHRISTIAN HERALD ALMANAC for 1912, all three for only $2.00



Your own Renewal for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD and ONE NEW Subscription for $2.25. Your own Renewal and TWO NEW Subscriptions for $3.00

A STORY TO BE READ ALOUD

NEVER has a more fascinating tale been penned than this. THE PILGRIM SHIP is a narrative of the voyage of the Prince of the Happy Isles to a far distant country, and of the many extraordinary adventures that befell him. His vessel was a warship of great swiftness and unique armament, with guns that were known by names to the officers and crew, but which worked like no guns you ever saw or heard of. The good ship Safety was fully provisioned for a long voyage and her charter gave her wide privileges. She was right seaworthy too, and she bravely weathered all the gales and hurricanes she encountered in mid-ocean. But the terrors and dangers of the sea were far less than those ashore, for when the Prince's ship reached the Land of Delusion, and later when they sighted Lotus Land, the seamen had some stirring adventures. In a sense the whole voyage of the gallant Safety was a fighting one, as there were encounters afloat and ashore and many hairbreadth escapes. Sometimes she would skirt the Gold Coast, and again the shores of the Land of Silver. Hidden reefs and sandbanks would threaten her many times; but she escaped them all.

Actual Size of Book

Illustrated

Sent, All Charges Prepaid

'The City of Idols"

There was a most remarkable "City of Idols," too, which she visited, and where her forces made some recruits; also a dreary and dangerous "Land of Dole," and a "Land of Slaves." Queerest of all the distant countries was the "Land of Pleasure," wherein many subtle danger beset the voyagers, especially at Gaytown, the capital. But of the wonderful adventures of the Prince, his gallant ship and faithful crew, you must read in the book for yourself.

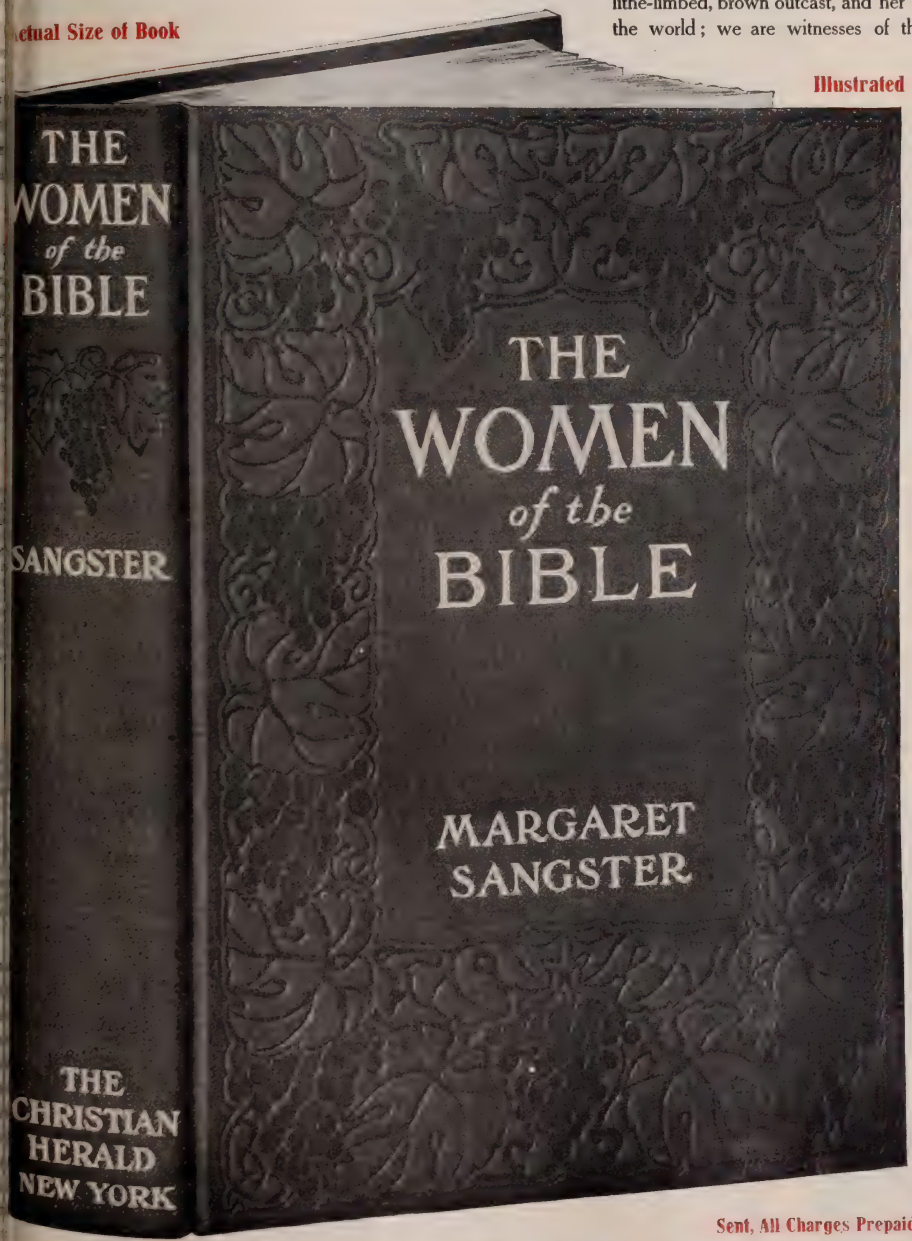
Old Friends On Board

The Pilgrim Ship holds a charm for the readers that is equaled by hardly any other book we know of; it allures, delights, surprises and uplifts. As you read it, you find many unexpected things happening. Old friends and some very near and dear ones are among the voyagers, and it will be strange indeed if you yourself are not among the number. As you read, you become imbued with a new strength, the vigor of the sea and the impulse to a noble and lofty purpose.

A Fascinating Story

Some wise critic has said that the finest test of a good story is to read it aloud in the family circle. The Pilgrim Ship is admirably adapted for this purpose. You can gather around you all your dear ones, and the reading of this wonderful book will hold them in the grip of its fascination right on to the end. Even the youngest will follow the strange adventures of this mysterious vessel and its brave crew, just as though they were passengers and witnesses of all the things it describes.

The Pilgrim Ship is a volume of 320 pages, in handsome cloth binding, beautifully printed in clear bold type, suitable for readers of any age, for it is a book that will hold an equal charm for both old and young. Moreover, it is a tale which seems to magically illustrate itself in the mind of the reader as he proceeds chapter by chapter, creating the most fascinating and delightful pictures, for it is all action like a living panorama. If you wish to make this wonderful voyage in the best of good company, and to have a part in these adventures in which so many friends of yours are even now sharing, write for the book and you will be mustered in as a member of the brave and gallant company.



THE PILGRIM SHIP will be sent prepaid with THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for one year (52 issues), together with a copy of the new CHRISTIAN HERALD ALMANAC for 1912, all three for only . . $1.85

Address: THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK CITY

ONE OF THE REALLY GREAT BOOKS

THE WOMEN OF THE BIBLE is the most comprehensive book ever written on womankind, for it is a World's Portrait Gallery and embraces the foremost representatives of the sex, from Creation down to the Christian era. That subtle and indefinable quality, womanly intuition, which Mrs. Sangster possesses as a special gift, accounts for the peculiar charm with which she invests every one of her heroines. We gaze in wonder and admiration at Eve, "the beautiful woman-Titan" and founder of the race; we now understand for the first time what kind of a woman Adah, the "mother of all lyrists, who rocked the cradle of the arts," must have been; we stand by the side of Sarah, the beautiful wife of Abraham, whose loveliness turned the heads of monarchs; we have a new and deeper sympathy for Hagar, the graceful, lithe-limbed, brown outcast, and her little lad, when they are flung out upon the world; we are witnesses of the strange wooing of Jacob, and we are privileged guests at the home wedding of Rebekah, the first ever recorded and a pretty pattern for all such weddings ever since.

Actual Size of Book

Illustrated

Sent, All Charges Prepaid

Wonderful Women

Mrs. Sangster has this to say concerning The Women of the Bible:

"In studying these wonderful women, we are brought face to face with many types of character. No two women in the list are precisely alike; yet not one, whether she be saint or sinner, prophetess or queen, daughter of antiquity or child of the early Christian era, fails in being distinctly and wholly feminine. There are many of these heroines who have the courage of men and woman's beauty in rare combination." Heretofore history and biography have dealt largely with the doings of man; Mrs. Sangster rewrites it, giving to womanhood its true setting in this story of the world's development and civilization. Her Women of the Bible is a book of romance in actual life in which the home, the court, the temple, the battlefield, the desert, the throne, all play their part. In love, in patriotism, in service, in prophecy, in religion, woman is here assigned her true place at last.

The Author's Great Task

"I have written this book with enthusiasm," Mrs. Sangster says in her preface. "I have renewed in memory the happy days of childhood, when I first made acquaintance with Sarah, Rebekah, Rachel, Miriam, Hannah and how many more, as I heard Bible stories from the lips of those who long since went to abide in the Home beyond the sea. Every page of this work has been to me a delight that words fail fully to portray. If my readers shall find in it half the inspiration, the pleasure and the profit I have had in writing it, I shall be more than ever glad of the privilege that has been mine in this especial work."

The World's Mystery

From Eve's day until now, woman has been a delightful and perplexing mystery to the thoughtful minds of the world. Mrs. Sangster notes at the outset the "thread of the shuttle, the indefinable feel of sex" that runs through the life story of all the women of the Bible, and she notes also the wonderful variety of character, temperament and purpose. Yet each and all, whether of a royal line or the daughter of peasant or prophetess, old or young, heathen, Hebrew, or Christian, they are still distinctly and wholly feminine.

Seldom has any book issued in recent years been so beautifully illustrated as this great volume, which contains sixteen full-page artistically colored portraits of Bible heroines by famous masters. The book is printed in large, clear type, contains 363 pages, and is handsomely bound in cloth.

THE WOMEN OF THE BIBLE will be sent prepaid with THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for one year (52 issues), together with a copy of the new CHRISTIAN HERALD ALMANAC for 1912, all three for only $2.00

Your own Renewal for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD and ONE NEW Subscription for $2.25. Your own Renewal and TWO NEW Subscriptions for $3.00

Our Red Letter Bibles and Testaments

The only genuine edition of the Red Letter Bible is the Authorized or King James' Version, unchanged save for the variation of the color in the type. Two colors (Red and Black) are employed, in accordance with the simple plan devised by Dr. Louis Klopsch, the Originator of the Red Letter principle applied to the Holy Scriptures.

The text of this Bible is set in Bold-Face Minion, especially designed for this work. There are 268 pages of Helps or Concordance and 17 superb Maps. This gem of a Bible, small in bulk, light in weight, very legible and Very Durable, weighs only 20 ounces. It is bound in American Levant, overlapping edges, red-under-gold, and makes altogether the handiest and most satisfactory Bible now on the market. For size of type, size of page and appearance, see illustration below.

We send this superb Bible, together with The Christian Herald for one whole year, and our 1912 Almanac, all for only . . . $3.00

SOMETHING STILL BETTER

If you can afford to pay $1 more, ask for the same Bible bound in Genuine Morocco, Calf Finish, Leather Lining, Silk Sewed, which will wear a Lifetime. This Bible is Equal to Any $10.00 Bible. It is sent with The Christian Herald for One Year and our 1912 Almanac, all Three for Only . $4.00

ALL CHARGES PREPAID IN EVERY INSTANCE

RED LETTER TESTAMENT AND BIBLE PHOTOGRAPHED TOGETHER AND SHOWN FULL SIZE

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD ALMANAC FOR 1912

After much time devoted to the preparation and the expenditure of much ney in the publication, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is happy to announce to its my of readers that THE CHRISTIAN HERALD ALMANAC is ready for delivery.

As with all CHRISTIAN HERALD publications, this work has been planned th care and worked out with an attention to detail which it is hoped and be- ved will meet the approval of all our subscribers. The primary purpose of ery almanac is to present an accurate calendar of days, eks, months and seasons, with information as to eclipses the sun and moon, star variations, and the other import- t phenomena of the heavenly bodies with which the aver- e observer is familiar. All this has been carefully done.

An Encyclopedia of Facts

Realizing that CHRISTIAN HERALD readers wanted facts t available in other great almanacs, or even in ordinary raries, it was decided to make this a work of ready refer- ce for every intelligent household in the land. The sub- cts have been grouped under five heads, with many sub- visions. The following gives these in their order, with ief details under each head.

First—The Calendar

As THE CHRISTIAN HERALD ALMANAC is issued Novem- r 1, 1911, it gives the calendar for that month and Decem- r of the same year; then follow the twelve months of 12. In addition to each monthly calendar, which is pre- nted in a clear, condensed form, each page contains the oon's changes, the noted days of each month, a number of illiant proverbs, and a mass of astronomical and other in- rmation.

Second—The United States Government

The great departments of the Government, the Execu- ve, Legislative and Judicial divisions are treated under parate heads, the duties of each being clearly set forth. n addition valuable information is presented about the Post ffice, Commerce and Labor, the Army and Navy, receipts nd expenditures, irrigation, arid land reclamation, State overnors, comparisons of States in area and population, nd hundreds of other facts about our country, which must rove of the greatest value to the intelligent reader.

Third—Religious Information

This is one of the departments in THE CHRISTIAN HER- LD ALMANAC that distinguishes it, in the most interesting ay, from every other Almanac published either at home or abroad. Limiting the field of investigation to the United States, there is here presented in alphabetical order each church denomination, with its creed, form of church government or polity, and statistics as to its strength, wealth, work, periodicals and Sunday Schools. While no denomination reported by the United States Census has been overlooked, each has been treated with an impartiality that adds to the value of the information.

The 1912 Almanac is sent free to all new Christian Herald subscribers, and is also sent free to all our old subscribers when they renew their Christian Herald Subscription.

Fourth—Agricultural Interests

Under this general heading there is presented a wealth of information, differing essentially from the recipes, advice, and cut-and-dried data ordinarily found in such publications. Crop statistics, the uplift of agriculture, the comparative output, the relations of producer and consumer, the farmer's share in the profits, fertilizers, labor, cattle, dairying, poultry, bees, and other matters of interest to the farmer, are treated in a way both interesting and instructive.

Fifth—Foreign Countries

In addition to our own country it is fitting that we should know our neighbors. Under the foregoing heading there is presented a great deal of information as to foreign countries, their forms of government, present rulers, areas, capitals, debts, armies and navies, and religions, particular attention being given to the progress of Canada.

General Subjects

Dividing each department there are pages given to the best things in prose and poetry by famous authors, nor is humor neglected in these breathing spaces. In addition there are scores of subjects treated, which it was thought best not to place under the regular heads. Among these are the State laws affecting women.

A Great Book

There is no outside advertising in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD ALMANAC. Every line is devoted to information. It contains about one hundred and fifty thousand words of reading matter, or more than twice that to be found in the highest-priced magazines, and even more than is to be found in the average dollar and a half book. These figures give no idea of the value of this work, which will not be finished when read nor cease to be valuable at the end of the year, but will continue to be read with an increasing appreciation of its value and importance.

---

rom Earliest imes in Chaldea

Illustrated History of All Nations

Down to the Present Day

The Illustrated History of All Nations is a comprehensive and omplete record of the history of mankind, and the whole narrative is nvested with a human interest that makes the story of the world and its eoples, its immortal heroes, its great men and famous women, far more absorbing than any work of fiction. Never for even a moment does the fascinating narrative lapse into a dry, prosaic recital of facts, but every volume tingles with full-blooded life as the ever changing panorama unfolds before us, engrossing, fascinating, captivating from first chapter to last.

FIFTEEN MASSIVE VOLUMES HANDSOMELY BOUND

Contents

OL. I—ANCIENT HISTORY
Ancient Egypt and Ethiopia, Chaldea, Assyria, Babylonia, Phœnicia and Syria.

OL. II—ANCIENT HISTORY
The Hebrews, or Israelites Kingdoms of Asia Minor Republic of Carthage
Media and Persia
The Sanskritic Hindoos
Ancient China and Japan

OL. III—ANCIENT HISTORY
Rise of Greece
Greece in Her Glory
Græco-Macedonian Empire
The Græco-Oriental Kingdoms

OL. IV—ANCIENT HISTORY
Regal Rome
Republican Rome
Imperial Rome

OL. V—MEDIÆVAL HISTORY
Barbarian Kingdoms
Empires in the East
Islam and the Saracens

Size of each Volume 7x10 inches

VOL. VI—MEDIÆVAL HISTORY
Western Empire Restored
The Northmen
Mohammedan Empires
Mediæval Civilization
The Crusades
Empire and Church
Feudal France

VOL. VII—MEDIÆVAL HISTORY
Feudal England
Feudal Southern Europe
Feudal North and East Europe
Tartar Conquests
Modern Mohammedan Empires

VOL. VIII—MODERN HISTORY
Dawn of the Modern Era
States-System and Reformation

Contents

VOL. IX—MODERN HISTORY
Revolutions in England
France and the Age of Louis XIV
States-System in North and East

VOL. X—MODERN HISTORY
European and Colonial Wars
Dawn of the Age of Revolutions
England and American Revolution

VOL. XI—MODERN HISTORY
French Revolution and Napoleon
Revolutions in Europe

VOL. XII—MODERN HISTORY
Recent History of Europe

VOL. XIII—MODERN HISTORY
United States of America

VOL. XIV—MODERN HISTORY
Latin American Republics
British and Dutch in South Africa
Modern China and Japan

VOL. XV—Supplement and Index

This Magnificent Work Contains Three Hundred and Thirty-eight Full-page Illustrations

ILLUSTRATIONS. Three hundred and thirty-eight full-page illustrations enhance he beauty of this costly edition of the Illustrated History of All Nations. These are illustrations are reproductions of world-famed paintings by master artists f the world, most of the originals being in the great galleries abroad. It would e impossible to say too much of these superb pictures or to adequately describe heir surpassing richness and beauty. Every volume is further enriched by a plendid frontispiece in full color, which feature alone adds immeasurably to the alue of the books.

INDEX. No more complete system of indexing has ever been devised. Each volume contains its table of contents. In the last volume is the General Index.

BINDING. The Fifteen Massive Volumes are very handsomely and substantially bound in a beautiful silk-finish cloth, beautifully stamped in genuine gold, with the lettering in gold on a deep red panel.

THE TYPE is unusually large and very clear, and the paper is heavy stock of beautiful texture. The 338 Exquisite Illustrations are printed on fine coated paper as full-page inserts.

A Truly Magnificent and Final Offer We have only a few sets left of the History of All Nations, and as long as they last we will send the fifteen volumes, you to pay freight charges, for only $1.00 down, and then $1.00 a month for 11 months, making a total of only $12.00. If the books do not please you, return them, and your money will be refunded.

Or the set will be GIVEN AS A PREMIUM ENTIRELY FREE OF CHARGE for a club of only TEN NEW SUBSCRIPTIONS for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD at $1.50 each per year

Your own Renewal for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD and ONE NEW Subscription for $2.25. Your own Renewal and TWO NEW Subscriptions for $3.00

The Christian Herald for 1912

THAT famous divine, Joseph Parker, once remarked that the "front seats of his auditorium were in the Rocky Mountains and the back seats in the Himalayas." CHRISTIAN HERALD readers may say with Wesley, "The World is its Parish," for its activities literally embrace all lands. In the coming year, it will set before its readers the widest and most attractive variety of entertainment and instruction provided by any weekly magazine in the world.

"BRANDER CUSHING'S AMBITION"

By CHARLES M. SHELDON, Author of "In His Steps"

This new and powerful serial story, "Brander Cushing's Ambition," is a splendid and dramatic presentation of two of the greatest of our latter-day problems. It is a story that will grip the hearts of its readers with interest, and will awaken their enthusiasm and admiration and hold them fascinated to the end. There is a beautiful love story running all through it. No more thrilling serial than "Brander Cushing," and no nobler characters than Sidney, his heroic son, and Pax Marston, the beautiful daughter of the Admiral, have ever appeared in modern fiction. See this issue of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. If you are not reading it you should begin at once.

REMARKABLE FEATURES FOR THE COMING YEAR:

Cyrus Townsend Brady

the author of so many successful historical novels, has written for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD a stirring tale of the Frontier in the days when the life of the settler hung hourly in the balance. This story, which is full of the heroism, and, be it said, the spirit of self-sacrifice which characterized those days, will be continued through a number of issues of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. It is an absorbing feature which will hold your attention from first to last.

Other Stories by Famous Authors will be announced during the year, among the contributors being Wilfred Grenfell, the Arctic hero and philanthropist; Eleanor H. Porter, author of Margaret and Marco; Florence Morse Kingsley, Cyrus Townsend Brady, Susan M. Griffith, Miss E. L. Gebhard, Amelia E. Barr, Irving Bacheller, and many others.

A New Agricultural Development

Professor O. S. Morgan, of Columbia University, is preparing for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD a series of articles which will have a particular application for every city and town in the country. It concerns the supply and demand of vegetable and fruit products as between cities and towns, and the producing sections in their immediate neighborhood. It contains a suggestion for abating somewhat the increasing cost of living. This series will be begun in early spring, and will be continued through several numbers.

Our Women Contributors

Special attention will be paid to the Women's Department of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and our Contributors' Staff this year will be larger than ever before, among them being Madeline S. Bridges, Kate Upson Clark, Miss Janet Porter (who conducts the Department for the Young), and Margaret E. Sangster, the counselor of the whole CHRISTIAN HERALD Family.

In the Footsteps of St. Paul

Dr. Francis E. Clark, now traveling in the Orient, has undertaken to write "A Journey in the Footsteps of St. Paul," exclusively for our readers. Dr. Clark is the founder of the Christian Endeavor Society. He will visit the "Seven Churches of Asia" and will record his impressions. His articles will be finely illustrated with photographs.

Our Bible Question Series

This attractive and helpful series of difficult Bible questions, which was extremely popular this year, will in 1912 be conducted as a regular monthly department. Every reader will have an opportunity to join this great Class for Bible Study.

Special Articles by Famous Writers will be a prominent feature for 1912. These will include Clayton Sedgwick Cooper, an authority on Bible propaganda, Professor Edgar J. Banks, Professor Mason P. Young, famous in Oriental travel; Rear-Admiral Charles D. Sigsbee of the Maine; Hon. Charles McFarland of the Federal Council of Christian America, who will write on the "Relation between the Church and Social Service"; John L. Harbour, E. Ryerson Young, son of the famous Canadian explorer, and others.

The American Pulpit

which has always been a strong feature of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, will in the coming year be represented by sermonic contributions from the leading preachers of all the Protestant denominations. The fifty-two greatest sermons of the year will appear in its pages, among the contributors being Rev. J. H. Jowett, C. M. Sheldon, Rev. C. H. Parkhurst, the Metropolitan divine; Dr. James Burrell, Rev. J. Wilbur Chapman, Professor R. A. Torrey, Rev. A. C. Dixon, Bishops Quayle and Warren, J. Balcom Shaw, Charles F. Aked, C. A. Eaton, and Newell Dwight Hillis.

Art Masterpieces

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD possesses facilities for artistic printing such as no other religious family magazine can claim. During the coming year it will print, once a month, famous Art Masterpiece Covers, beautifully reproduced in colors. Copies of these splendid reproductions, without lettering, will be made on extra size paper especially designed for framing. These extra copies can be secured for a merely nominal amount of postage. This collection of twelve of the World's Greatest Art Treasures will alone be worth more than the entire subscription price.

Special Article by Government Entomologist

Dr. L. O. Howard, Chief of the Bureau of Entomology, Washington, D. C., has promised to write for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD an article on economic phases of the insect problem. Dr. Howard's work in the extermination of the Malarial Mosquito and the Typhoid Fly is widely known, and what he will have to say concerning other insect pests and how to get rid of them will carry with it the conviction of authority.

Our Missionary Contributors

There is no other paper with so large and varied a staff of missionary contributors as THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. In every land it has its correspondents who write of the actual life of the missionaries, giving not theories but facts. All illustrate their letters with photographs taken with their own cameras. These contributors give a special value to the paper as a journal of world-wide missionary interest.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, whether considered from its spiritual side or from the side of its mechanical make-up, is brighter and better than ever before, and during the coming year no pains will be spared to maintain this high standard. Every department will be conducted with the very keenest appreciation of the desires of our readers to have us produce a clean weekly newspaper for the home. Our aim is to make THE CHRISTIAN HERALD the very embodiment of religious and moral uplift, and so we ask you to help us extend that influence for good until it is felt in every home in the land.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD ALMANAC FOR 1912

just compiled by us especially for our subscribers, contains, besides the regular Almanac features, a very complete compendium of valuable religious information. It contains a large amount of general statistics, particularly about the United States. It is lightened up by short stories, poems, anecdotes, wit and humor, making altogether a delightful and valuable year-book.

A COPY GIVEN FREE WITH EACH YEARLY SUBSCRIPTION, NEW OR RENEWAL

Brander Cushing's Ambition

Continued from page 1187

warped out, and in less than five utes Mr. Marston was on board. I did was to hold on to him until two men of the crew came to my stance.

Naturally I climbed back on the , and being a little wet decided to ke for home as fast as I could. It dark and the crowd on the dock rushed back when the hawser pped ashore. I had been sitting at extreme end of the dock and when mbed out I found I had landed the r side of the freight partition, re passengers are not permitted. as entirely alone. Lucky for me gate had been left open, and I ran took a car and got home. That's

Most extraordinary," quoth Admi- Marston, looking earnestly at ney. "Of course I did my utmost ind you, but without avail. It is nge you did not see what was in papers."

I seldom read them."

Well, I owe you a hat, old man," Ed. "Pay to-morrow. My life, Can't pay for that. Not worth h either, sometimes." This last in wer tone. But he stretched out his d across the table to Sidney and ney took it, thinking Ed's aunt ned shocked at the blunt display of ing across her china and between silver candlesticks. Sidney dated n that minute a strong liking for boisterous young officer.

fter they had gone into the wing-room Admiral Marston took the story again.

I can't get it out of my head how part you took in such an event d miss getting into print. Surely must have spoken of it to some ?"

I don't think so."

Not to your father?"

I think not, sir."

Most extraordinary. Do you do e things every day, that they be- e so commonplace?"

idney laughed. Pax Marston was king at him, her blue eyes soft with t most entrancing of all looks, the e of awed hero-worship. He would e been more stupid than this story cribes him if he had not seen and it.

Why, father, don't you remember account in the Star day before yes- day? Mr. Cushing did get into the ers that time."

Ah, yes. That terrible naval fac- y fire," said Mrs. Marston. "What onderful thing you could save some hose girls!"

Say, that was dandy—your finding t board and all that!" cried Ed rston.

Sidney was overwhelmed with re- sts to tell more. His confusion reased under the hero-worship that rounded him. He tried to make nt of it all. But the moment he an to talk about it he saw again, as had seen every night since in his ams, those silent bodies falling, ling, falling. Would they never se falling?

He must have told the story with at effectiveness, after all. For en he finished, Pax and her mother re crying, and even Ed looked ive.

'I'd like to get hold of the duffers t owned that old fire-trap," he said. d put 'em on a raft and use 'em for arget, and fire just close enough to 'em till I hit 'em."

Admiral Marston looked very un- fortably at his nephew. Evidently admiral knew Brander Cushing's erest and ownership in the factory. d did Pax know it? Evidently she , for she was one of those young ies who read daily papers thor- ghly. She turned red and anxiously nced at Sidney. But he had not ard or heeded Young Marston's re- rk. Again those bodies falling, falling, falling. Would they never cease falling?

Before he went away that night, after basking in the warmth of a hero-worship that he had never known at home, because his father took for granted the athletic and unusual, Sidney made an appointment with young Marston to go down to the testing-grounds where some new armor and explosives were being tried out. Then in the afternoon the young men were to join the admiral and Mrs. Marston and Pax on an excursion of inspection of harbor defenses down the river. As this was to be made on one of the government cruisers, and the occasion would in all probability make it possible for him to have a little more personal conversation with Pax, Sidney anticipated the day with great delight, inasmuch as the business matters at the patent office would be delayed the rest of the week.

How many people, outside of a few experts, really ever know anything about the fearful and enormous equipment for warfare going on in this world two thousand years after the birth of the Prince of Peace? How many, for example, know that this Christian nation owns a murdering machine fifty feet long, weighing 260,000 pounds, consuming 612 pounds of smokeless powder per charge, firing a projectile weighing 2,400 pounds through twenty-three and a half inches of Krupp steel armor, and having a range of almost nine miles—a monster butchering machine!

The United States Government has a sixteen-inch cannon. It can throw a shot weighing 2,000 pounds to an extreme range of twenty-one miles, and has an effective range of twelve miles. It has been fired four times.

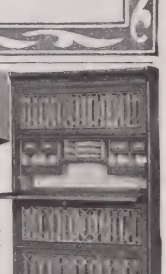
A single battery of modern artillery can hurl 1,450 rounds upon ten regiments of men while they march one mile and a half. These 1,450 shells, arranged with time fuses to burst at the target, would sweep ten thousand men with 275,000 bullets and ragged iron scraps. Bloch says:

"In 1870 an ordinary shell, when it burst, broke into from nineteen to thirty pieces. To-day it bursts into 240 pieces. Shrapnel in 1870 scattered only thirty-seven death-dealing missiles. Now it scatters 340. A bomb weighing about seventy pounds, thirty years ago, would have burst into forty-two fragments. To-day, when it is charged with peroxilene, it breaks into 1,200 pieces, each of which is hurled with much greater velocity than the larger lumps which were scattered by a gunpowder explosion. It is estimated that such a bomb would destroy all life within a range of about two hundred yards of the point of the explosion. With the increase in the number of bullets and fragments, and in the forces which disperse them, increases also the area which they affect. Splinters and bullets bring death and destruction, not only, as in 1870, to those in the vicinity of the explosion, but at a distance of 220 yards away, and this though fired from a distance of about two miles. In a time when rifle and artillery fire were beyond comparison weaker than they are now, those who were left unhelped on the battlefield might hope for safety. But now, when the whole field of battle is covered with an uninterrupted hail of bullets and fragments of shells (at night, too, with a searchlight equipment), there is little place for such hope."

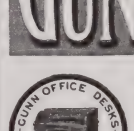
Our two young men, both sons of Christian gentlemen, members of the Church and reared in civilization, enthusiastic and intelligent, students of guns, armor, military tactics and war in general, went out together next morning to the experiment firing-stations, in high good spirits with themselves and one another.

To be continued

This is a Crescent gold-filled watch case enlarged to show detail. You will find "gold-filled" watches sold by all sorts of jewelers at all sorts of prices. If you buy on price or guarantee stamp you are pretty sure to get a shoddy case.



You can tell a reliable case by the depth of the engraving and engine-turning—and by the "Crescent" or "Jas. Boss" trademarks stamped inside.



Deep engraving always indicates a thick gold-wearing surface. In a trashy case the gold is not thick enough to stand deep cutting. The design is shallow cut or merely burnished on.

Don't be misled by irresponsible "guarantees" stamped inside the case. A true warranty of value and service is the "Crescent" or "Jas. Boss" trademark. They are standard with the fine jewelry trade and have been for fifty years.

The Keystone Watch Case Co.
Established 1853
Philadelphia

GUNN SECTIONAL BOOK CASES

You will save money by putting these bookcases in your home. The handsome designs, the rich finish, the removable non-binding doors, the absence of disfiguring iron bands, make them far better than the old-fashioned kind.

Our prices are lower than others and high quality is guaranteed. Write for our artistic Catalog C H, with colored illustrations, showing Sanitary Clawfoot, Mission and Standard styles. Sold by dealers or direct.

Gunn Furniture Company, 57 Victoria St., Grand Rapids, Mich.

$1.00 STOP FRETTING
OVER YOUR XMAS PRESENTS
The most desirable, most suitable, and least expensive of all CORRECT GIFTS is a dainty

"LENOX" Combination Xmas Box
Sent to any address prepaid and insured for ONE DOLLAR

Contents of Box designed for MEN:
(1) 3 pairs 6 months guaranteed "Lenox" Hose, choice Black, Tan, Navy, Grey, - - - Value $1.00
(2) Beautiful "Lenox" All Silk Flowing-End "Four in-Hand" Tie to match, - - Value .50
(3) 1 pair of guaranteed quality Suspenders, Value .25
ALL FOR ONE DOLLAR. Total Value $1.75

Contents of Box designed for WOMEN:
(1) 3 pairs 6 months guaranteed "Lenox" Satin Finished Lisle Hose, Black or Tan, - - - Value $1.00
(2) 3 beautiful corner embroidered Pure Irish Linen Handkerchiefs of superior quality, Value .75
ALL FOR ONE DOLLAR. Total Value $1.75

Don't forget to state the size and shades desired.
We refer to Dun's, Bradstreet's, or any bank in N. Y. City
LENOX SILK WORKS, Dept. 26 5 W. 31st St., New York
We need good Agents.

The very finest expression of the Holy Scriptures — Perfect in every detail

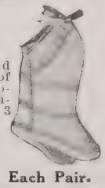
Your Bible should be selected from the world-famous International Series. 600 styles of clear type, strong binding, illustrations and study helps — Bibles to meet the need of every Christian worker.

International Bibles
We will be glad to send you free our complete, illustrated catalogue on request.

THE JOHN C. WINSTON CO.
1011 Arch Street
Philadelphia, Pa.

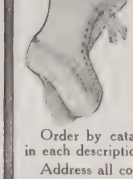
Mothers:

THE BABY BOOK is resplendent with attractive values in wearing apparel for children from infancy to six years of age.



What a pleasure and an advantage to the mother to select in the quiet of her own home everything in children's wearing apparel she may desire and to have the assurance that every article of her purchase will be entirely satisfactory.

One order from the Baby Merchandise Department will prove to you beyond a doubt that our children's wear is sure to please you. You can depend absolutely on our styles being right, the workmanship and fit of the garment are right and the wearing qualities the best that can be obtained. We guarantee to give you better merchandise for the same price or the same merchandise at a much lower price than you can buy elsewhere.



The infants' bootees listed below are only a few of the many instances of the remarkable values quoted in THE BABY BOOK, a copy of which we will be pleased to send you upon receipt of an order for one or more pairs of bootees.

19c Each Pair.
No. 29W3606 Blue.
No. 29W3607 Pink.
Hand Crocheted Wool Bootees in pretty striped pattern with beading and ribbon ties at ankle and top. Fancy edge at top. Mailing weight, 3 ounces.

65c Each Pair.
No. 29W3614 Blue.
No. 29W3615 Pink.
Fine Hand Knitted Knee Length Bootees of fine Saxony yarn; shaped top with ribbon lacing. Mailing weight, 3 ounces.

39c Each Pair.
No. 29W3608 Blue.
No. 29W3609 Pink.
Fancy Hand Crocheted Bootees of soft Saxony yarn, with lacing effect down front, and fancy top. Mailing weight, 3 ounces.

Order by catalog number specified in each description.

Address all correspondence to Eliza Emerson Co.

Department 29

Sears, Roebuck and Co.
Chicago

Near-Brussels Art-Rugs, $3.50

Sent to your home—express prepaid

Sizes and Prices
9 x 6 ft.	$3.50
9 x 7½ ft.	4.00
9 x 9 ft.	4.50
9 x 10½ ft.	5.00
9 x 12 ft.	5.50
9 x 15 ft.	6.50

Beautiful new attractive patterns. Made in all colors. Easily cleaned. Guaranteed to wear. Woven in one piece. Reversible. Straight from the makers and sold direct at one-profit. Money refunded if not satisfactory.

Send for New Catalogue showing goods in actual colors. Free.
ORIENTAL IMPORTING CO., 691 Bourse Bldg., Philadelphia

The Rich Man and the Poor Man

Continued from page 1180

our friends of the Socialist belief preach continually that if men only have sufficient wealth, good homes, good food, good surroundings, they will be happy, and the millennium will dawn; but they forget that there are thousands of people in the world who have all of these things already and are not happy. Neither are they useful. No scheme for human betterment will ever succeed in bringing blessedness or happiness or the spirit of thanks until the individual himself is a redeemed person and is independent of things.

There is a story told of Emerson that one night a crazy man broke into his study and said: "Mr. Emerson, I have had a revelation from on high that the world is coming to an end tonight." "Well," said Emerson calmly, "what of it? We can get along very well without it." And that is true of any man who has in himself a consciousness of eternal things which never can be destroyed.

The Others

It is of course true that for the fullest expression of thanksgiving in our lives, we must be doing everything in our power every day to better the lives of others. No man can go home from this thanksgiving service and sit down to a full meal and praise God completely without having done all in his power to help better the conditions of other people. There is no thanksgiving in the heart of a man who shuts others out of his sympathy or his helpfulness. It is the old spirit of the Pharisee, "I thank Thee that I am not like other men." In other words, no man can bless God every day unless every day he is trying to bless men. The thankful spirit can not be found in the heart of any one who is simply satisfied with his own surroundings. I think any man who says, "I thank God that I pay my debts, I take good care of my family, I clothe my children well, I see that my wife has what she needs in the kitchen, I am not stingy with my children when they need anything"—if that is all the man is thankful for, it is a poor thing. It is the fullest thanksgiving when one can say truthfully and humbly: "I have provided for my own, but I have tried with all my might to help those who are in need, to feed the hungry, to remove the causes of poverty, to rub the saloon off the map, to do my part as a good citizen to see that laws are observed and to help the great multitude to have more abundant life." When one can truthfully say that, there is thanksgiving in such a heart.

Everyday Thanks

"Every day will I bless Thee." There was no special day set apart in the psalmist's time as Thanksgiving Day. Every day was Thanksgiving Day. There may be a danger for our habits and our thoughts in special festivals of the year. Why should there be an accumulation of kind feeling at Christmas? Would it not be better if it were spread over the year? Why should we have to be reminded by a special festival that Christ rose from the dead? Why not think of that every day? Why should we have one particular day to renew our patriotism, and another to think of Abraham Lincoln, and another special day in the year to remember the Pilgrim Fathers, and another to remember the discoverer of America? Why not accustom ourselves to remember all these great things every day of our lives? Thanksgiving is not a spasmodic affection. Real thanksgiving is a constant stream which flows through a life. "Every day will I bless Thee," one day as much as another, and it would be a good habit for us all in the beginning or close of the day to sum up its mercies; for each day in real life is a day which contains great things for which to thank God.

The Great Lesson

But let us learn the great lesson of all, that thanks to God do not spring out of the things which we possess, but rather from the attitude which we have toward him. A redeemed life is always a thankful life whether it be outwardly rich or poor. We cannot stop the song of praise which rises from the martyr's lips. Anywhere you put a Christian, a real disciple, he will sing. Whether it be what the world calls joy or sorrow, whether it be riches or poverty, whether it be success or failure, the real child of God cannot help blessing him. Let us learn this great lesson of redemptive praise, and be able to say with the psalmist, not simply, "Once a year will I give expression to the accumulated thanks of the year," but "Every day will I bless Thee, and I will praise thy name for ever and ever." Thanks be unto God, who giveth us the Redeemer of the world, Jesus Christ, our Lord.

General Notes

—RECENT DISPATCHES to Washington, D. C., announce that rich potash deposits have been found in the West by scientists of the Department of Agriculture. This discovery, Secretary Wilson says, will mean a saving of $12,000,000 a year to this country, as heretofore the United States has been spending about that sum in buying its potash from Germany.

—A DISPATCH FROM Augusta, Me., dated November 6, said: Maine stays dry. Governor Frederick W. Plaisted and his council decided to-night to accept the corrections in the vote of four towns, cast in the special election in September, again reversing the result. Returns on election day, September 11, indicated a majority of about 300 against the repeal of the prohibitory amendment, but when the Secretary of State's returns were compiled a few days later, they showed a majority for the other side. Official returns addressed to the Governor and Council were opened and they did not agree with those received by the Secretary, showing a majority of 26 for repeal. It was found by comparison, however, that in four cases the figures of early returns were reversed, and in each case the clerks claimed the error to be in the official figures. After hearings on the subject of accepting corrections, the Governor and Council took the matter under consideration, with the resulting announcement to-night that Maine retained constitutional prohibition by 758 votes.

—THE SITUATION in China continues to grow more acute. The revolutionary party has met with almost unbroken success in its military operations and is now in possession of the greater part of seven provinces and has captured such important cities as Chingkiang and Shanghai. The feeling in the south is more bitter against the Manchu dynasty than in the north. The rebellious subjects of the lower provinces claim that they will be satisfied with nothing but the abdication of the present reigning family. The throne has granted without reserve all the demands of the national assembly and has conceded the establishment of a constitutional monarchy. The revolutionary party does not lack efficient and capable leaders, and though they are in many instances divided by great differences of opinion, all are working for the modernization of the country. The revolution is causing great upheavals all over the country. The railways are largely in the hands of the revolutionists, and are operating on reduced schedules. In the city of Hankow, which the imperialist troops seem bound to destroy, fire raged almost unchecked for several days. An area two and one-half miles by about three-quarters of a mile was devastated. Fighting between the rebels and the Manchu troops was going on all through the burning area. Canton has been threatened by the rebel troops, and most of the police and citizens have declared for the revolution. The British authorities have taken steps to protect the foreign concessions, and a number of British cruisers and gunboats are in Chinese waters where they can be called upon for assistance. In Peking all is chaos. The Manchu court is reported to be ready to fly for safety at any moment, and is holding a guard ready to protect the fugitives and throne treasure if such a step becomes necessary.

Furs of Beauty
Furs of Style
Furs of Quality

THIS unusually dressy set of furs combines beauty, style, quality, utility and economy. It gives the maximum warmth and reflects that graceful, genteel appearance only found in "Quality Furs."

The set consists of our No. 712 Shawl Collar and No. 714 Pillow Muff, made of Siberian Bear, in rich blue-gray, or lustrous black, with long silky hair. It is a fur of lasting quality. The shawl collar, trimmed with four large tails, is of ample proportions, and fits gracefully over the shoulders. It is lined with guaranteed satin to match. The large pillow muff, about 18 inches wide, is filled with soft down and lined with guaranteed silk.

Buy Without Risk

Money refunded if you are not pleased; we guarantee satisfaction.

We prepay delivery charges to all parts of United States.

Order direct from this ad. Send for Our Special Fur Catalog.

It gives the latest Fall and Winter Fur Fashions of Paris and New York. It's Free. In it you will find furs for every lady. The set shown is only one of hundreds. Write a postal to-day. Do

Shawl Collar	$4.50
Pillow Muff	4.50
Special Price for Both	8.50

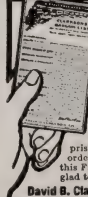
NATIONAL APPAREL CO.,
Dept. B, 11 West 17th Street, New Yo

Unique Calendar of the Southland for 1912

The Dixie Book of Da

Entertaining and instructive da quotations that reveal the roman folklore, humor, literature, and h tory of the South.



Distinctly Southern but national in interest

Cover with handsome photogravures; inside sheet covers one week and has space notes. Two colors throughout.

Price, $1. Order through your bookstore sent by mail on receipt of price.

The Page Publishing Association
Dept. A, 849 Park Ave., Baltimore,

GET THIS FREE BOOK ABO BOOKS

ARE you a book lover? The will enjoy this book about You will send for it because it w you more live information about a titles, bindings and editions th ever saw before in such concise for will want this book too because it on any book or set of books you may I watch out for bankrupt sales, publi overstocks, etc., and my prices are fr ly below cost of production, and alway the prices of my competitors. You will ra prised at how little good books cost wh order them from me I ship on approv this Free book about books first—then you glad to buy.

CLARKSON'S Cut Pri

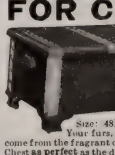
David B. Clarkson, 1131 Clarkson Bldg., Chica

LITTLE BEAUTY NIGHT LA



65 c

One filled with ker it will burn 40 Absolutely odo Handsomely cons ed of brass, n plated. Provided wick to last s years. Can be used trics, railways, cl nursery and sickro At your dealer's o mail (postpaid) 65 SILVER & COMP 320 Hewes St Brooklyn, N. Registered trade-mark

AGENTS WANTED

FOR CHRISTMA

Size: 48½ in. long; 20½ in. wide; 17½ in Your furs, blankets, linens, laces, silks and wo come from the fragrant depths of a Piedmont Southern Red Ce Chest as perfect as the day they were laid away. Absolute pro tion from moths, mice, dust and damp. Very decorative a most acceptable of all Christmas gifts. Shipped direct from f tory, at factory prices, freight prepaid, 15 Days' Free Trial for The Stove of Red Cedar" and big catalog showing many sty sizes and prices of Chests, Upholstered Wardrobe Cedar Che PIEDMONT RED CEDAR CHEST CO., Dept. 22, Statesville,

PRAYERS For Public Worship, Pr Devotion and Personal Min

A Complete Guide to Devotion. This book is helpful to t home and public use. Cloth, gold stamp, postpaid to address, $1.00. M. E. MUNSON, Pub., 77 Bible House, New

Thanksgiving in the Cozy Corner

Charades, Old Ballads and Quiet Games

WE are not pretty careful to guard against it the late afternoon and evening of Thanksgiving Day, n the feasting is over, is likely to a bit heavy, and the grown-ups r the effort and strain of the day apt to depend upon the young folks entertainment. There is scarcely ng winter evening throughout the re season when charades and ying out" old songs and ballads be half so fitting as at Thanks- ng. Perhaps it would be well to e some slight preparation, such as acking the attic for old-time bon- , shawls, slippers and fans, hel- s, swords, toys and guns, by way ostumes and "properties." Play- out old songs and ballads really be made the loveliest merriest of entertainments. e one should sing the song or te the ballad slowly and dig- dly and not laughing a bit. rd Ullen's Daughter," "The ee Fishers," "Lady Clare," d Mistletoe Bough," "Young hinvar," "The Ballad of the ter Man," "Evangeline," "The lier's Farewell," "Home, Sweet ne," "Bonnie Doon," "Wait- " "Longing," "Darby and n," "The Girl I Left Behind " "Coming Thro' the Rye," reet Peggie in the Low-Back " "The Courting," "The De- ed Lover," "Tommie Snooks and sie Brooks," "When I Was a Bach- I Lived by Myself," "The Village cksmith," "The Owl and the Pussy " "Barbara Frietchie," "A Life on Ocean Wave," "My Old Kentucky me," "The Last Rose of Summer," mie Laurie," "The Light of Other s," "The Old Oaken Bucket," are jects from which charades and ing tableaux can be delightfully ked up.

For Pantomime Parodies

The Ballad of the Oyster Man," ung Lochinvar," "The Mistletoe gh," "The Three Fishers and Lady re" are in most household collec- s of poetry, and while they are not y funny in themselves they bur- e delightfully. For example: e big boys sitting in small tubs or hes-hampers rocking very seriously ut among blankets and shawls and s that some one is shaking to look waves is a surprising and nice ure of e fishers went sailing away to the west, to the west as the sun went down;

thought of the woman who loved him the best, etc.

he boys will fan energetically, with e palmleaf fans, sails made of calico dkerchiefs tied to a cane, and try at same time to row with oars made of omsticks, all to be tumbled over at on an imaginary beach where e very much excited little wives ng their hands and attempt to re- citate them, the pantomime will be edingly funny. A big boy seated n a rocking horse, brandishing a rd, or a gun, or a big stick, and sed like a knight of old, with a te worsted plume floating from his ad-brimmed hat and a large red rt sewed upon his cloak, going ough impressive and grotesque tomime, while some one reads the owing verse, can be made delight- y laughable:

young Lochinvar is come out of the west:
ough all the wide border his steed was the best:
save his good broadsword, he weapons had none:
rode all unarmed, and he rode all alone.
aithful in love, and so dauntless in war, e ne'er was a knight like the young Loch- Invar.

he romantic old songs should be e soberly and poetically pictured, course. If some one with a charming voice can be gotten to sing "The Soldier's Farewell," for instance, to a guitar accompaniment, while a soldierly-looking boy bids farewell to a dainty slip of a girl in Colonial costume the effect can be made very lovely indeed.

The entire entertainment will be delightfully artistic and funny and interesting as well if you will manage it right and do not spoil it by beginning with too much hilarity.

The Most Famous Baby Picture
By Sir Anthony Van Dyke

A Thanksgiving Prayer

FOR days of health, for nights of quiet sleep; for seasons of bounty and beauty, for all earth's contributions to our need through this past year, good Lord, we thank thee. For our country's shelter; for our homes; for the joy of faces, and the joy of hearts that love; for the power of great examples; for holy ones who lead us in the ways of life and love; for our powers of growth; for longings to be better and do more; for ideals that ever rise above the real, good Lord, we humbly thank thee! For the blessedness of service and the power to fit ourselves to others' needs; for our necessities to work; for all that brings us nearer to each other, nearer to ourselves, near to thee, we thank thee, O our Father!—Selected.

A Charming Quiet Game

GATHER a basket of leaves from every tree, bush, shrub and plant in the neighborhood. No two leaves must be alike. Provide each player with a slip of paper and a pencil. Hand one leaf to the first player, who passes it on to the next, and so on, until each leaf has made the round of the players, each player writing the name of the leaf that he supposes it to be on his card. The player who guesses the largest number correctly wins a beautiful bunch of flowers and autumn leaves.

Such a Pretty Christmas Gift

COZY CORNER girls are writing now for suggestions for Christmas gifts. Here is a very delightful one:

The Woman's Exchanges and fancy work tables in the large department stores are displaying many charming doll workbags. These have the ordinary round bottom of pasteboard, to which the bag is sewed in the usual way. Fastened to one side of the top so as not to interfere with the drawstring is the half body and head of a doll, dressed in a big bonnet, with a waist made of the material of the bag, the bag, of course, forming the skirt of the doll's dress. When finished the workbag looks like a dainty little lady of the Civil War times, perhaps, or of Colonial days, when hoops and frills were fashionable. Old-fashioned silks or brocades, India prints, cretonne or flowered satin make lovely doll workbags, and I have also seen a "mammy's workbag" made of bright bandana handkerchiefs and a turbaned black dolly with a checked apron. These dolly workbags are so easily made and so effective that I believe many of the Cozy Corner girls will be pleased with the suggestion for Christmas gifties.

A Special Thanksgiving Message

THANK you many, many times, my dear boys and girls, for the heaps of delightful letters that find their way day after day into the Cozy Corner. I have told you before, you remember, that it is largely due to your own enthusiasm and interest that the Cozy Corner is as bright and attractive as you seem to find it. I want to see to it that you find plenty of good things from week to week in the Cozy Corner to be thankful for. Send me as many letters as you care to send; I love them all. I shall be thinking of you on Thanksgiving Day, and a very large part of my own thankfulness will be for so many happy nieces and nephews, all working and playing together in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Cozy Corner.

Wishing you all a hearty, happy Thanksgiving,

Our Good-Night Verse

I will give thanks unto thee, O Lord, for the greatness of thy mercy reacheth unto the heavens, and thy truth unto the clouds.

Lovingly and faithfully yours.

The Aunt in the Cozy Corner

Modern Missionary Heroes

FORTY-TWO years ago Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Clark, of Indiana, two young Baptists, embarked upon a sailing vessel on what was then a long and venturesome voyage for Assam. Their route was to the south of Africa, around the Cape of Good Hope, through the Indian Ocean and the Bay of Bengal, and then overland until they reached the hill country of Assam on the borders of Tibet. Forty years ago the people of this region were savages, and the conditions of life were such as to entail many hardships. Especially was this true in the case of a delicate young woman. With faith and courage they began their work, and without a murmur endured untold privations for the sake of Him who had put it into their hearts to go with the message of his love to those for whom he died.

What a story of God's power in the lives of men and women these two could tell! Indeed, they are telling it. The people among whom they worked were brutal and immoral, but of a brave and independent spirit, and very friendly when they learned that those who asked for their friendship were genuinely friendly. They quickly responded to the Gospel message, and when they really gave themselves to God, endeavored to follow literally the teaching of Jesus. Dr. and Mrs. Clark have lived to see a regenerated community from savagery and vice to a real civilization and a Christian morality. There are twenty Baptist churches in the region, with two thousand members. They have an association with native officers, conducted in an intelligent manner and doing a good work as a co-operative body.

One Dollar
and
A Good Chance

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD will pay a good profit and many useful and handy prizes

To Any Boy
(From 7 to 14 years of age)

We say to any bright lad who is willing and anxious to please:

"Make yourself useful by becoming, with our help, acquainted with all the details of our business, beginning right in your home neighborhood; and as fast as you become capable we will recognize your services in some way."

NOW TRY

The Christian Herald Will Help You

You Need no Money to Start

You will receive your first supply of copies Free. We will tell you how and where to sell them at a good profit—besides Prizes.

Many boys earn a regular weekly income for a little time spent after school hours.

EVERY BOY

SIGN HERE AND MAIL TO-DAY

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York Date.....

Please send me a Free start in business and tell me how to make one dollar and prizes.

Name .....

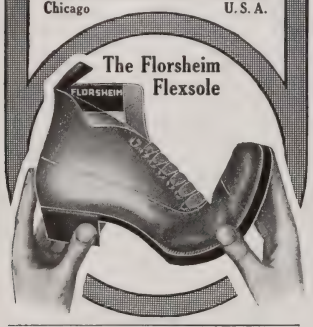
Address .....

Town..... .....

Age..... State.....

The Florsheim SHOE

LOOK FOR NAME IN STRAP



The Florsheim Flexsole—for tender feet—comfort like an old shoe from the start. A light, flexible, specially designed Shoe.

Ask your dealer or send amount to cover cost and express charges and we will have our nearest dealer fill your order.

Most styles $5.00 and $6.00

Write for our free booklet "The Florsheim Way of Foot-Fitting," showing styles that are different.

The Florsheim Shoe Company
Chicago U. S. A.

$1 English Knock-about Hat

A stylish service-able hat. Genuine Fur Felt. Folds into compact roll without damaging. Can be shaped into Alpine or Telescope. Silk trimmings. Colors: Black, Steel Gray, Brown. Actual value $2.00. Sent postpaid promptly on receipt of $1.00. State size and color wanted. Money refunded if not satisfactory.

Packed in Beautiful Holiday Boxes

PANAMA HAT CO., Dept. C, 830 Broadway, New York City

TYPEWRITERS FACTORY REBUILT

Save $25 to $50 on any make of Typewriter. Our Factory Rebuilt Typewriters are perfect in quality, condition and looks. Durable and reliable in construction and serviceable in every way. Buy from the largest factory in the world with branch stores in leading cities. We guarantee for one year against defect in workmanship and material. Write for catalogue and address of nearest branch office.

American Writing Machine Co.
345 Broadway, New York

Your Money Ought to Earn 5 Per Cent

For 17 years this Company has paid 5 per cent on money entrusted to its care. In all that time there has never been a day's delay in the payment of interest—or in the repayment of principal when due, or demanded.

You can open an account at any time—you can withdraw at any time, without notice, and without loss of interest. Interest is paid for every day your money is in our care.

Ask for the 5 per cent Book today, while you think of it

Calvert Mortgage & Deposit Co.
1046 Calvert Bldg., Baltimore, Md.

Stocks as an Investment

IN AN article which appeared in a recent issue of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD we tried to explain the difference between stocks and bonds. Even at the risk of repetition, it may be well, before going on, to emphasize the distinction.

A bond is a promise to pay; a stock is an equity. Bonds, secured loans, and mortgages on real estate represent a borrower's promise to pay a fixed sum on a stated date. Stocks represent a residuary share in the assets and net earnings of a corporation after payment of its working expenses and other obligations. The value of this share may be great or small, it may grow or decrease in value, but under no circumstances can the holder of such a share compel any one, much less the company itself, to take back the share.

An Illustration

If you buy, let us say, a $1,000 railroad bond, you know that the railroad, if not bankrupt, will pay the face value of the bond when it becomes due, or "matures," as it is called. Now, if you spend the same, or any other, sum in the purchase of railroad stock, and you subsequently wish to get your money back, you cannot go to the company that issued the stock and compel it to buy; your only way will be to find some private individual or other concern willing to purchase at the ruling price, which may be more or less than what you paid.

While you may have $1,000 represented by stock, and your neighbor the same amount, represented by a bond, in the same concern, your positions will be entirely opposite, though your money interest is exactly the same. The man with the bond is a creditor of the company, and has no voice or control in its management, nor any cause for interference so long as the stated interest is paid when due. On the other hand you, the owner of the same amount of stock, have become a partner in the business, with the power of exercising a proportionate share in the enterprise, and sharing in the same proportion in its profits and losses. In other words, your neighbor has a promise to pay, and you have an equity, which may be defined as a claim after all preceding obligations have been met.

Varying Factors

The foregoing distinction is easily understood, but in recent years certain factors have come in that tend, somewhat, to obscure the simplicity of the theory. With the amazing growth of the country, and the corresponding development of great corporations, such as railroads, these enterprises required more capital to meet the needs of their growing business. In the old days this capital was secured by new bond issues, but in later years it was found that this method could not be carried on without destroying the proportion, or balance, between bonds and stocks, which was necessary to give the bondholders an adequate equity. In this condition it was found necessary to secure the extra money needed by the issue and sale of additional stock.

In selling this additional stock the railroad managers were met by a new and certainly a difficult problem. While it was essential that more money should be available, they found it well nigh impossible to sell sufficient stock on the basis of a purely speculative venture. To get over the difficulty, and to give their new stock an investment value, many expedients were resorted to by the railroad heads. In some cases "preferred" stocks were issued. These stocks took precedence of all others, and became a first lien upon the assets, after the payment of all obligations, and were entitled to a stipulated dividend before the other or common stocks obtained anything from the earnings.

In other cases, where stock was issued to raise money, an attempt was made to give the new stock an investment value by guaranteeing stability of income returns. It was planned in good years, when as high as fifteen per cent. was earned on the stock, to pay five or six per cent. and to hold the surplus in reserve, so as to keep up the same average returns when the net income for stocks had declined to two or three per cent.

An Unexpected Effect

It will be seen that when a stock is preferred or in any way guaranteed as to interest, it at once loses its character as an equity, and becomes a conditional promise to pay, and to that extent it takes on the character of a bond or other secured lien. This effect was certainly not contemplated by the devisors of the new plan for raising money by the sale of preferred stocks, or of stocks in any way guaranteed, and the result has been to obscure the at one time sharply defined distinction between bonds and stocks.

The recent attitude of the courts has further tended to obliterate the old distinction. Some time ago a case was brought before the courts, in which it was contended that the charges of a certain railroad were too high. In this case the judges seem to have taken the ground that stocks and bonds should be classed together in order to determine the actual capitalization of the corporation, and that the fairness of the charges should be determined by ascertaining if a lowering of the rates would leave sufficient to pay a fair return on the investment made.

At present it is difficult to judge of the outcome of this changed attitude toward stocks. However, it may be stated, with some certainty, that the tendency of the large corporations to fix the dividends on stocks will do much to weaken their speculative character, while, at the same time, adding greatly to their desirability as forms of investment. Still, there is another side to this question. If the maximum return on stock is to be limited to six per cent. and charges reduced to patrons, so that they will get the benefit of increased earning power, the position of the stockholder will not be entirely enviable, for he has no guarantee against possible loss.

GOSSIP IN THE PANTRY

THE Cabbage bowed her queenly head
The Ham boiled through with rage,
The Salt ran down the cellar
For counsel with the Sage;
The old Potato winked his eye,
The Pepper sneezed a tear,
The Ginger burned up with disdain,
The Corn pricked up her ear.
The Steak alone in sympathy,
Did smother back a scoff,
The Eggs were so much mortified
A dozen scrambled off.
The entire pantry neighborhood
Seemed to be all awry;
The naughty Cold-Sliced Tongue had told
A Concentrated Lye!

—McCall's.

NOTICE OF EXPIRATION

Once each month we attach, just under this notice, a subscription blank and notice of expiration for our subscribers whose subscriptions expire at any time during the month. If your copy has this subscription blank attached, please use it to renew at once. If you sent renewal within the last two or three weeks, pay no attention to the blank.

When renewing, indicate on the blank with your remittance whether you are subscribing for any of our new premium books, Women of the Bible, $2; Samantha at Coney Island, $2; or The Pilgrim Ship, $1.85, with your subscription, or a straight year's subscription at $1.50.

Do not forget you can have YOUR OWN RENEWAL AND ONE NEW SUBSCRIPTION FOR $2.25, or, YOUR OWN RENEWAL AND TWO NEW SUBSCRIPTIONS FOR $3.

Send money by postal or express money orders.

Convertible 6% Not... at Par

We offer and recommend... par and interest the Three-y... Convertible 6% Coupon G... Notes of a public service corp... ation having an exclusive 20-y... franchise in a city of over 200,... population. This issue is secu... by bonds equal to 237% of ... total amount of outstand... notes, and the net earnings ... plicable to interest on the is... are more than five and one-h... times the amount required. F... particulars on application.

Ask for Circular No. C-142

Guaranty Trust Compa... of New York
28 Nassau Street

Fifth Avenue Branch 5th Ave. & 43d St. — London Office 33 Lombard St., E...

Capital and Surplus - $23,000,0...
Deposits - - - 161,000,0...

Highest Interest Best Security

Amounts of any size ($25, $50, $100, $200 or multiples) can be invested temporarily or permanently. Your ... available when wanted. Endorsed by ... est financial authorities everywhere.

6% NET INTERE...

Principal and interes... secured by select Mortgages o... Preferred Real Estate

If your savings or any other money is drawing less than 6% net, or is not as secure as Old Mother Earth herself can make it—send postcard for Booklet. Read it.

A. C. LESLIE CO.
Suite 117, Bakewell Law Bldg., Pittsbu...

GUARANTEED MORTGA...
For Large and Small Investors

Don't think, because your capital is small, that it can earn only 3½ per cent. or 4 per cent. It used to be so—the small investor for hundreds of years had no chance beside the capitalist. Our

First Mortgage Trust Bond...
On New York and Suburban Real Estate

put you exactly on a par with the wealthy investor. You have the same security and the same certain returns—5 per cent. to 6 per cent. You have the same opportunity to withdraw your capital if you should need it.

Under Supervision of New York Banking Department
Write for our Booklet

NEW YORK MORTGAGE ...
Dept. D, 1476 Broadway, New York Ci...

Trust Fund Investm...

Have you a sum of money that should be invested where it will be safe ... any doubt and pay a living interest ra...

If you have, you need our F... Mortgages. They are safe, easily ... and pay 6 per cent. interest.

All dealings with us are confidential; we don't talk about your business to anyone.

Write for our Booklet "A."
It will be sent free on request.

WELLS & DICKEY COMPA...
Established 1878. Capital and Surplus, $700,000
Security Bank Building, MINNEAPOLIS, MI...

An Automobile Thanksgiving

By KATE UPSON CLARK

HATE 'em!" good old Deacon Phipps was in the habit of saying, never he saw an automobile. m the first moment the new inven- appeared, scaring his steady old es almost to death, and breaking one of his best farm wagons, con Phipps had no patience with kind of a motor vehicle.

s time went on, and many of his hbors bought automobiles, his es became wonted to them and ed never a hair when they whizzed but the good deacon did not relent. enever one passed him on the road, owing, perhaps, a shower of dust ud upon his modest carriage, and ing behind it a trail of ill-odor, he ld mutter (under his breath) ds which no good deacon should ; ever use.

he deacon and his wife grew old, their six children all married, ex- ing Rhoda, the youngest, who d at home to take care of them. four sons were prosperous, and older daughter had married a very man and lived one hundred or e miles away. Two sons had be- e farmers and lived quite near. was a merchant in a large town naps fifty miles distant. The rth one was a minister, settled in same town with the merchant ther. To the infinite disgust of con Phipps, all of these sons, ex- ing the minister, owned automo- s, and Thomas, the merchant, act- y sported three or four. When his ur found this out, he came almost the point of breaking off relations h Thomas.

n the old days, the family had used gather on the day before Thanks- ng, and the large, airy chambers the ample Phipps homestead could ommodate them all. Now the chil- n and the grandchildren had reased in number until such gath- gs were no longer possible. The les and aunts had died or had be- e infirm. There had been some tty lonely Thanksgivings at the pitable Phipps farm.

t was during the week before the at day that Deacon Phipps was sit- before the open fire in his big, fortable sitting-room, and ponder- over this melancholy fact.

'Tain't right," he grumbled to his tle wife, who sat knitting beside "'Tain't right to have families ttered so at Thanksgiving. I wish could get our folks all together, an, just once more. Here you an' re vergin' onto eighty, an' we hain't our folks all together for goin' on year now. Here's this great se, dinin'-room fit to seat thirty, this room to spill over into for as ny more, and countin' Sister Judy Brother Ben, all the sister an' ther we've got left, bless 'em!—ex- t Betty, an' she's tied to the house her broken hip, an' always will be, likely—all put together they only nt up forty-one, but we can't get together.

"Well," he mused on, "we'll try to a dozen or so of 'em, an' call it a nily party, but you an' I an' Rhody the help are strong an' hearty, an' ld take care of 'em all, if they uld only come. But I don't see any 'No, there isn't any way," sighed good wife, "but you hadn't oughter nplain, Silas. We've got a sight o' ssin's, an' we'd oughter think o' se we've got an' not hanker after se we can't have," which was good trine, though it could not stop deacon's grumbling.

Miss Rhoda Phipps was quite equal the task of taking care of the old ple. A strong woman helped her the kitchen, and there were neigh- rs near by who were ready to do rs work. Job, the good middle- ed man who had taken care of the rses for many a year, was no mean hand at household as well as stable service, and at this special Thanksgiving season Miss Rhoda kept them all busy, until the pantries were piled thick with dainties. Mrs. Phipps thought that there was too much food prepared.

"Why, Rhody, what do we want with twenty apple pies and six turkeys and ten chicken pies and a gallon of cranberry sauce?" she cried. "We never in the world can eat them up before they spoil! As near as I can make out, there are only about ten coming, anyway."

But Miss Rhoda said she "would risk it," and laughed her mother back to her post beside the fire.

By ten o'clock Thanksgiving morning the whole farmhouse was in speckless order. Aunt Judy and Uncle Ben had promised to come early, and so had son John and his family. Deacon Phipps was restlessly peering up the road, long before the proper time, and Mrs. Phipps was almost as impatient as he.

Presently over the brow of the hill came a great touring-car. The deacon scowled, but as he heard, first the sweet Gabriel horn, and then the rough roar of the Klaxon, his face relaxed a little. Who were in the car? It was not the family of son John. Surely it was Thomas and his minister brother, with several members of their families, and Mrs. Phipps fairly cried with joy as she saw them.

"There is another load just behind us," they shouted, as they drew up before the door.

"Another load!" There were half a dozen loads before the final toll was taken, and when two strong, big Phipps sons lifted out from one of the cushioned limousines poor, lame, old Aunt Betty, who could not have dreamed of coming in anything except such a softly padded vehicle, the tears were dropping all over Mother Phipps's best white lace jabot.

Such a Thanksgiving! Every single one of the Phipps children and grandchildren was there! The good deacon's voice trembled with joy as he asked the blessing, and poured out his thanks before God.

"But you know, father," said Thomas Phipps, slyly, "there are several of us who couldn't possibly have come if it hadn't been for those automobiles that you hate so."

The deacon ahemmed, and bristled a little, but in the face of the loud merriment which greeted this perfectly true reminder, his few rather growling remarks could not be heard.

"You know there really isn't much danger from automobiles nowadays, father," proceeded Thomas Phipps diplomatically. "The chauffeurs are better taught than they used to be, the machines can be stopped more easily—oh, in every way they are improved."

"Improved!" shouted the deacon, unable to restrain himself longer. "You can't pick up a paper without readin' about some shockin' accident through carelessly driven automobiles. Improved! They can't be improved. They are inventions of the Evil One himself. You can't tell me! I read the papers."

"Wait a minute, father!" laughed Thomas, amid the eager looks of all the others, who were evidently full of suppressed excitement. "We—well—we—we feel as though we all wanted to see more of you and mother than we have seen lately, but we don't feel safe to have you traveling around on the cars any more, and your horses can't take you as far as most of us live, so we have clubbed together and have bought you the strongest and handsomest limousine car that we could find. We have put a sum at interest in the county bank to pay for the keeping of it, and we have had Job taught how to run it. You know he

Continued on next page

Careful Selection of Bonds

In making investments, not only the tangible property and the earnings of the companies behind bond issues must be considered, but the future growth of the territory in which these companies operate, must be assured. Nowhere is this more true than in the consideration of public utility bonds—a type fast increasing in favor, combining as they do the highest income yield consistent with safety.

The growth, success, and earning abilities of public utility corporations depend largely upon the stability of growth of the cities in which the companies operate. Another essential feature is the character and ability of the men who direct the policy and physical operation of these companies.

In making your selection of the public utility bonds offered you, we suggest that you consider the following facts:

The average increase in population of American cities from 1900 to 1910, as given by the United States Census Bureau, was 34.9 percent.

The population of the principal cities served by the water works companies whose bonds this house handles increased in the same period 47.0 per cent.—or 12.1 per cent. above the average. These water works companies serve over 70 municipalities in this country, including such cities as Birmingham, Ala.; Chattanooga, Tenn.; New Castle, Pa.; Joplin, Mo.; Racine, Wis., and East St. Louis, Ills.

In the same period, the increase in the cities which furnish the income of the traction lines whose bonds we handle was 69 per cent—34.1 per cent. above the average of all American cities.

The properties behind every issue of bonds we offer are invariably subjected to the great test of growth of population—not only the past growth, as shown by the United States Census, but also the promise of future growth as shown by new and visibly developing industries. In addition, every issue is passed upon by the best legal and engineering counsel and by expert auditors. Every test which our experience dictates must be passed by the bonds we offer before we purchase them for our own account.

Judge for yourself what this scientific study of the future of these public utility corporations means to you. You can't afford to take chances with your savings, and you want good income return. Only by obtaining expert advice can you be assured of the largest yield consistent with safety.

We will gladly aid you in solving your investment problem. Whatever the bond issue may be upon which you want advice we shall be pleased to consult or correspond with you.

Let us send you our circular giving a plain, simple analysis of well-secured water works, hydro-electric, traction, and general public utility bonds which we are now offering for conservative investment to yield from 5% to 6%

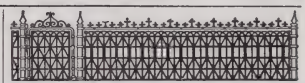
From a large attractive list of municipal bonds which we are now offering, you can make your selection of securities which conform to the requirements of the United States Government to secure deposits under the Postal Savings Bank Law.

Write to-day. Address Dept. V

J. S. & W. S. KUHN, Inc.

Bank for Savings Building, PITTSBURGH, PA.



CHICAGO	PHILADELPHIA	NEW YORK	BOSTON
First National Bank Bldg.	Real Est. Trust Bldg.	37 Wall Street	Kuhn, Fisher & Co., Inc.

The Sensational Book, "Typewriter Secrets" has stirred the typewriter world to a frenzy. It tells about the high prices on typewriters, the so-called rebuilts and the value of secondhands. Tells you how you can get a good standard Visible typewriter at a price never heard of before; how you can have it on trial without deposit. Just write "Send the book"—it's free. It is wonderfully interesting, even if you are not in the market.

Typewriters Distributing Syndicate, 159 E Y N. State St., Chicago

FENCE For Lawns, Churches, Cemeteries, Public Grounds. 100 Patterns. Write for special offer and our free handsome Pattern Book.
THE WARD FENCE CO., - Box 904, - Decatur, Ind.

CORNS come out by the roots when A-Corn Salve is used—the only sure way to cure the . No pain, no danger of blood poisoning, 15 cents at druggists' or by mail.
Giant Chemical Co., Philadelphia

This is the experience of N. P. Hansen, a native of Denmark, who went to Fresno County, California an emigrant.

One lives in California, life is so pleasant out there.

When you have made up your mind to sell your farm in the East and go to Southern California and buy a small piece of ground, so that you may live in luxury and enjoy life while working your farm, travel on the Los Angeles Limited over the

Chicago & Northwestern

(403)

Union Pacific

Electric Block Signals — Salt Lake Route — Excellent Dining Cars.

If you want information on California write

GERRIT FORT, Pass. Traffic Mgr. Union Pacific R. R., 1425 Dodge Street, Omaha, Neb.

ARE YOU DRIFTING

into the crowd of weak, weary, depressed; or are you filled with vitality and energy?

Health is the foundation of success.

Nerves, Brain, and Body should be staunch—dependable.

Scott's Emulsion

the best of food-tonics, is the firm footing for health.

ALL DRUGGISTS 11-54

Duplex Envelope System

RICHMOND

The Laymen's Missionary Movement urges upon all churches the use of

PRAYER TOPIC DUPLEX ENVELOPES

on the back of which is printed the uniform Prayer-schedule adapted by the Movement for 1912. These envelopes are made only by the originators of the Duplex Envelope System. Order direct, or if through an agent, specify Duplex-Richmond.

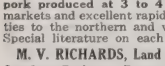
UNLESS ITS Duplex RICHMOND, VA. IT'S AN IMITATION

Send for Free "Prayer Topic Unit" 11

DUPLEX - RICHMOND, VA.

AN OPEN WINTER

For the Man Living in the Southeast



PLEASANT summers and mild winters make the Southeast the ideal home country. Wonderful opportunities for investments in land which will soon be worth double its present cost. Its producing qualities are limitless. Prices range from $15 an acre up. Two to three crops from the same soil per season. Fruit, truck, alfalfa, corn, wheat, cotton, etc., yield large profits. Poultry raised at small cost. Beef and pork produced at 3 to 4 cents. Ample home markets and excellent rapid transportation facilities to the northern and western city markets. Special literature on each State. Write

M. V. RICHARDS, Land and Industrial Agent

Southern Railway, Room 19, Washington, D. C.

AGENTS---"$80 IN 8 DAYS

Working in the Noon-Hour Only."

That's the report of Mr. C. E. Warren, one of our hustling representatives. There is big money in selling Novelty Knives, Razors, etc. Transparent handles with society emblems, photos, address, etc. Quick sellers. Experience unnecessary. We teach you how. Exclusive territory. Fine samples furnished to workers. Send no money. Write quick—Today that is better than any other preparation for healing cuts, ulcers or wounds of any sort. Get it from your druggist, or a bottle will be sent by mail for 25 cents.

Novelty Cutlery Co., 262 Bar St., Canton, Ohio

OXALBITOL

AN ANTISEPTIC DRESSING

OXALBITOL CO. Honesdale, Pa.

Rémoh Gems

Not Imitations

The greatest triumph of the electric furnace—a marvelously reconstructed gem. Looks like a diamond—wears like a diamond—brilliancy guaranteed forever—stands filing, fire and acid like a diamond. Has no paste, foil or artificial backing. Set only in 14 Karat Solid gold mountings. 1-30th., the cost of diamonds. Guaranteed to contain no glass—will cut glass. Sent on approval. Money cheerfully refunded if not perfectly satisfactory. Write today for our De-Luxe Jewel Book—its free for the asking. Address—

Remoh Jewelry Co.
448 N. Broadway
St. Louis, Mo.

HARVEST HOME

W. Lomax Childress — Hubert P. Main

Copyright, 1911, by Hubert P. Main

ELECTION RESULTS

THE elections that were held throughout the country on November 7 were remarkable only as they showed the wide prevalence of anti-political-machine feeling. In New York State the Republicans and Fusionists swept the State, though the Tammany ticket was elected in New York County. In New Jersey the Republicans won the State legislature by a small majority. Massachusetts re-elected its Democratic governor, Eugene N. Foss; but the Republicans returned a majority of the State assemblymen.

In Rhode Island Aram J. Pothier, the Republican governor, was re-elected for his fourth term, and the State assembly will be controlled by a Republican majority. In Maryland Philip Lee Goldsborough, the Republican candidate, was elected governor by about 8,000 majority. Mr. Goldsborough failed to carry his ticket with him, and the assembly will be about evenly divided by the two parties.

James B. McCreary, the Democratic nominee, was elected governor in Kentucky, and carried his party ticket for the legislature to success with him. Throughout Ohio the Democrats were generally successful, though a Republican mayor was elected in Cleveland. In Cincinnati the Republican ticket, which had been indorsed by the President, was overwhelmingly defeated. The Democrats carried Mississippi, Virginia and Kansas, the elections being hardly more than ratifications of the primaries.

Philadelphia elected an Independent mayor, and the smaller party of the Socialists made large gains in the Middle West and in some parts of New England. In San Francisco the election turned largely on the labor question, and a strong vote was polled against the so-called Labor Party. In almost every instance the vote ran against the established party machines and bosses.

An Automobile Thanksgiving

Continued from preceding page

has been away a good many afternoons lately. Well—he has been learning how to run a car. You can trust him, and now you and mother can heat a big soapstone and climb into your limousine and come and see us all, and we expect you to do it. Now what do you say to that, father?"

What could the old man say?

He turned red, stammered, looked at his wife, who was smiling significantly, and then had the grace to accept and thank his children for their munificent gift.

All of Deacon Phipps's neighbors laugh a little when they see him riding by in his splendid automobile. But they are wise enough to sober up when they catch his eye.

"Little Moonflower"

This beautiful Tale of Childhood in the Far East is a true story from Real Life and will be sent FREE to any reader of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD who sends us a postal asking for it. It's a neat little illustrated pamphlet and is extremely interesting. Address

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York City

Don't Keep Chickens—Chickens Keep You

Don't you ever doubt it—there's profit, in hens. It all depends on knowing how to get it out of them. Joel M. Judd, the "Egg King," owner of the famous Tancocas Farm, tells HOW in his book,

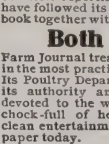
"The Million Egg Farm"

He traces his career in the poultry business from the beginning down to last year, when he marketed eleven hundred thousand eggs at a profit of close to $20,000.00. Foster tells his experiences in terse, straight-forward language that anybody can understand, makes his methods so plain that anyone who conscientiously tries can succeed to apply them. This book is unquestionably the best and most practical guide to success in the poultry business ever published—helpful to the beginner as to the man who numbers his birds by the thousands.

Farm Journal

has distributed thousands of copies of this book among its subscribers, and has numbers of letters reporting the success of those who have followed its teachings. We offer you this book together with Farm Journal for four years

Both For $1.00



Farm Journal treats of all branches of farming in the most practical and understandable way. Its Poultry Department is widely famous for its authority and value, and its columns devoted to the womenfolks and children are chock-full of helpfulness, cheerfulness and clean entertainment. Send for the book and paper today.

Farm Journal, 184 N. Clifton St., Philadelphia

LIVING-MUSIC-BIRDS

REGISTERED U. S. PATENT NO. 50[illegible]

The Musically Educated Canary

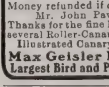
We guarantee live arrival at express office. Why does this bird sing better than any other? Because it is taught to sing, having gone through our regular school of training. Singing GERMANY. Sings differently from any other canary. Sings by artificial as well as day light. Notes are long melodious, soft, rich and of infinite variety and sweetness.

BRINGS HAPPINESS INTO EVERY HOME

Guaranteed Singers

Sold on 5 days trial.

Money refunded if don't sing to your entire satisfaction. Mr. John Favek—LaCross, Wis. Writes: "Thanks for the fine little Soloist you sent me. I have several Roller-Canaries but your L. M. B. beats them all."



Illustrated Canary Booklet, Catalog and Proof free.

Max Geisler Bird Co., Dept. E3 Omaha, Neb.

Largest Bird and Pet Animal house in world.

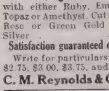
LADIES' USEFUL XMAS GIFTS

Our large, exclusive line of Popular Priced HOSIERY, HANDKERCHIEFS, and ART JEWELRY, now offered, Direct to You, by mail at a saving of 30% to 50%

Set No. 577 J.—14 Karat Gold 2-inch Bar Pin, with two hands to match, in Rose, English or Gold finish, the set

Set No. 810J.—14 Karat Gold Plated 3-inch Sash or Belt Pin, set with either Ruby, Emerald, Sapphire, Topaz or Amethyst Cut Stone, in Roman, Rose or Green Gold or in Oxidized Silver

50c

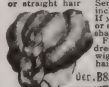


Satisfaction guaranteed or money refunded.

Write for particulars of Special Xmas Outfits at $1.75, $2.75, $3.00, $3.75, and our new Five Catalog. Agents Wanted.

C. M. Reynolds & Co., Dept. A, 156 5th Ave., Chicago

I TRUST YOU TEN DAYS. SEND NO MONEY.



$2 Hair Switch Sent on Approval. Choice of Natural or straight hair

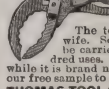
Send a lock of your hair, and we will send a 22-inch short stem fine human hair switch. If you find it a big bargain, remit $2 in 5 days or sell 3 and GET YOURS WITH FREE. Other shades a little more. Inclose 5c postage. Free beauty book showing latest and best dressing—also high grade switches, pompadours, wigs, puffs, etc. Women wanted to sell hair goods. ANNA AYER,

Dept. B83 22 Quincy Street, Chicago

AGENTS BIG PROFITS

Any agent can make it with us a half day's work selling our FALCON TOOL

The tool built expressly for the wife. Solid steel. Light in weight. To be carried in pocket. A Tool with hundred uses. Guaranteed. Get started now, while it is brand new to your community. We will our free sample to workers and new selling plan.



THOMAS TOOL CO., 524 Barny St., DAYTON, O.

Elastic Stocking

From pure gum rubber, woven absolutely to your measure, at the same price you pay for poor-wearing, ready-made goods.

Our Stockings are hard to be made. We self-measurement testimonials and ABOUT VARICOSITIES. We furnish all supplies. We us your Worcester Elastic Stocking & Truss Co.

58 Front Street, Dept. 9, Worcester, Mass.

WANTED MEN

Prepare as Firemen, Brakemen, Electric Motormen, Train Porters (colored), Conductors. Hundreds put to work—$65 to $150 per month. No experience necessary. Thousands More Wanted. Enclose stamp for application Blank and Book. State position desired.

International Railway Corr. Institute
Dept. 16 Indianapolis, Ind.

hanksgiving at Bowery Mission

ONGST the earliest celebrants of Thanksgiving will be the men of Bowery Mission. As the clang of midnight bells ushers in this pa- ic day, a motley and forlorn p will have gathered at our doors. will be our guests at the first d Line Breakfast of the season. homeless brethren, nine-tenths of American citizens, on this day part for thanking God for unpre- ented national prosperity, are here he cold harsh streets without a to cover them.

obably, however, in the whole e of Thanksgiving observers, will be more truly grateful than poor distressed men. For, as o'clock strikes, and the doors are ed, they will step into the light warmth of the splendid breakfast , and will be greeted by strong, stian brethren, who will speak s of cheer and comfort to them; the hot coffee and substantial will assure them that there are hearts who have not forgotten on this day of national praise. intend to provide breakfasts for thousand homeless men each ing until Easter Sunday, 1912. nine o'clock will come the distri- m of baskets, containing sufficient isions for a dinner for ten per- , to the poorest families of the Hundreds of applications have dy been received, and each one is fully investigated. One of our intelligent workers will have onally visited every home. The careful inquiries will be made so prevent overlapping the work of institutions, and the Bowery ion baskets will go to the very iest.

10 o'clock, while the sturdy ers are busy downstairs packing boxes for the Thanksgiving din- a Brotherhood praise meeting will be held in the Brotherhood Room, which will be as nearly like an old-fashioned Methodist lovefeast as the most ardent follower of Wesley could wish.

At 7 o'clock in the evening the doors of the large hall will be opened, and in due time the annual Thanksgiving meeting will proceed. In the meantime the crowd left outside will be admitted to the breakfast room in orderly fashion, and will receive their dinner in a box, until one thousand have been supplied.

The meeting will be addressed by three of our converts, who will speak respectively of, first, Patriotic Thanksgiving; secondly, Business Thanksgiving; thirdly, Spiritual Thanksgiving. This will naturally lead to the testimony part of the meeting, for which the Mission is so famous. Special Thanksgiving hymns will be sung.

Everything promises one of the most enthusiastic and jubilant of Thanksgiving Days.

It is to the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD that we chiefly look for the wherewithal to keep up this truly Christian work. We realize that we are simply your agents and almoners. At every opportunity we tell these poor and needy folks of the kind hearts in the great CHRISTIAN HERALD Family that think of, and pray, and provide for them. Especially will we do so at Thanksgiving time, so that as you sit around in your own happy family circle, you may realize that you have helped some lonely, friendless mortal to have a share in your Thanksgiving joy.

J. G. HALLIMOND,
Superintendent.

All checks and money orders in aid of the Bowery Mission and its work should be sent to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York City.

nother View of Joshua's "Long Day"

AY I, as one of your subscribers, be permitted to say a few words t "Joshua's Long Day"?

our correspondent, in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for October 25, says the and moon literally stood still on wonderful day. Of course, the stood still, unless we are to adopt Rev. Jasper's theory, that "The do move." Not quite so certain t the moon. It is wonderful how tics have sneered, how theologians puzzled and worried over a phe- enon as easily explainable as a sand other phenomena of nature. not a question of the sun standing but of the earth. If the day was thened by any solid body standing then the earth must have ceased volve for a time.

ny one who will carefully study divine Book will soon see that God s to all of his intelligent creatures nt matters and things as they ap- to those creatures. Our Saviour of the wind, "The wind bloweth re it listeth." We know the wind no choice in the matter. We say he sun, "He is setting," and if we d on the shore of a wide expanse ater and watch him go down, we hardly resist the thought that he tually sinking into the water. So n God inspired Joshua to say, n, stand thou still upon Gibeon; thou, moon, in the valley of on," was it necessary for the h to cease her daily motion? Let ee.

have stood on the shore of Chesa- e Bay, where it is said to be over teen miles wide, and at times have bedding hanging in the windows he houses upon the opposite shore. other times even the houses them- es were not visible. Only the dark outlines of the woodland could be seen. I have stood on the shore of Choptank River, and looked across from Talbot County to Dorchester, ten miles away. At times it looks as if you could almost throw a stone across; at other times it looks its full distance. The sailors call it "looming up." Let us hear what some of the sailors say about these wonderful appearances.

A sea captain, together with all of his crew, once declared, on his return from a voyage, that he had seen the Peak of Teneriffe "looming up, 'way up in the air," when by his reckoning it was at least four hundred miles to the east of him. It was laughed at as a sailor's yarn; but the captain stuck to it as long as he lived. And do we not know that water has been seen in the Sahara Desert, apparently but a few hundred yards away, when it was really many miles distant? Now, it would have been infinitely absurd to suppose it to be necessary for God, in order to be consistent, to have inspired Joshua to say, "Let there be a wonderful mirage, produced by the strata of the atmosphere being so arranged as to refract the light of the sun, so that he may continue to shine upon us even after he, in the usual recurrence of the earth's rotation, should have been hidden from our view." No, the command was, "Sun, stand still!" and the sun appeared to stand still. "Moon, stand still!" and the moon appeared to obey.

It is needless to discuss this question, for it is interminable. All that we are concerned about is, that it was unnecessary to stop the motion of the earth, or any of the heavenly bodies, and God does not work unnecessary miracles.

JOS. A. ROBINSON.
Royal Oak, Md.

The Beautiful Christmas
Scribner

By Henry van Dyke
"Half-Told Tales." Full of poetry and fancy, and each with a lesson for the times. Beautifully illustrated by Garth Jones.

By Richard Harding Davis
"The Invasion of England." What happened when the Germans were reported on the English Coast. Illustrated.

By Edith Wharton
"Xingu." A witty and most amusing satire on certain seekers after "Culture."

Dickens's Children
A series of four paintings by Jessie Willcox Smith, beautifully reproduced in color.

A Berkshire Winter
by Walter Prichard Eaton. The coming and the passing of the snow in the New England Hills. Illustrated by Walter King Stone, printed in tint.

Other Short Stories, Poems, etc.

If you are in any doubt about your reading for 1912 a glance at the new Scribner Prospectus, sent free, will convince you that there is at least one magazine you will not care to be without.

Hundreds are subscribing every day, beginning with October, to have the first of A. E. W. Mason's new serial, "The Turnstile."

$3.00 a year; 25 cents a number
Address Desk 3, Circulation Department, Scribner's Magazine, New York

Called Higher

Mrs. J. Bunker, of Berea, O., was called to her reward on June 13 last.

Mrs. Ada I. D. McGregor (27) died at Fort Collins, Col., on July 11 last.

Mrs. Mary Robinson Wienbar, aged 37, was called to her reward July 16, 1911, from her home in Wellington, Kan.

Mrs. Sarah E. McNamara (78) was called to her eternal rest from her home in San Antonio, Texas, on July 25.

Mary E. Kumler (71), of Seven Mile, O., was called home on March 26, 1911. She was a devoted Christian mother.

O. A. Boynton, one of the early pioneers of Etwa, Minn., passed away after eighty-nine years of active Christian service.

Mrs. Clara U. Hart (71), of Lyons, Ia., was called in March last to the reward of a life of patriotic and benevolent service.

Mrs. Chastine Harris (85) passed away January 14 last at her home in Auburn, Pa. She was for many years a reader of this paper.

James W. McBain (58), a native of Nova Scotia, but long resident in Napa County, Calif., was called to his reward on June 10.

A. B. Furgeson and his wife, of Paxton, Ill., were called to the long home within ten days in May last. Both were over eighty years of age.

Mrs. E. F. Oliver (87), of Bowdoinham, Me., passed to the great beyond on March 30 last. She had been a subscriber to this magazine for over twenty years.

Mrs. J. E. Huggett, of Reading, Mich., passed to her reward July 20, 1911, aged 69 years. She was a constant reader of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for a number of years.

Rev. J. H. Horner (73), of Gordon, Neb., a faithful worker for Christ throughout his long life, was called home April 4, 1911. He was a reader of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

Caroline M. Dunbar, of Monroe, Mich., departed this life February 19, 1911, aged seventy-six and one-half years. Sixty years a worker in Christ's vineyard; a subscriber to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD thirty-four years.

Making Ready for Congress

Continued from page 1179

be best to let the hall of the House remain as at present.

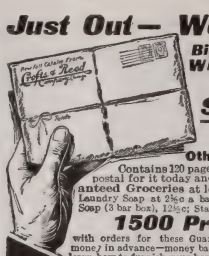
But even the present chamber will not be big enough for the new membership if a swivel-chair and a desk are to be allowed to each member. Our Congressmen do not take kindly to the suggestion of the parliamentary bench, like that used in England, although they may be forced to come to it in time. Meanwhile, there is a compromise suggested whereby the chairs will remain but the desks will be removed, and instead a "desk rail"—a continuous shelf about eleven inches in width—will be substituted, extending clear across the hall in front of each row of chairs and affording the members a resting-place for documents and writing-pads. This arrangement will give room for the new members and it will provide more aisle space. The change will cost only about $30,000. Operations will hardly commence before July 1, 1912, and it is much more likely that there will be a postponement until after the short session, which will end with the Presidential inauguration on March 4, 1913.

This winter at the White House will be characterized by the usual activity which always precedes a nominating convention and a Presidential campaign. The Presidential Mansion, like the Capitol, has been rejuvenated since summer, but there are no radical innovations. Some of the historic trees on the White House grounds have been treated by "tree surgeons," and the time-honored White House stables have been supplanted by new quarters for the presidential horses and motor-cars. Mrs. Taft, who returns to the White House somewhat improved in health, will again be assisted in the discharge of social duties by her only daughter, Miss Helen, who has decided not to return to college.

Mrs. Peter Wiggs' Thanksgiving Party

Continued from page 1183

and her suetty pudding made. I must get her recipe for that suetty pudding; it's the best I ever ate." And not long after: "There hangs the red signal; that says Dolly Ann's folks are all well and tickled to death at thought of coming." And once more: "There, pa, is her bright colored scarf afloat; that means her cake is all baked and has turned out just fine! Well, I do say this is something to be extra thankful for."



And how sped Mrs. Wiggs' own party in memory of her absent children? Oh, you should have seen that long table full of bright young girls and grateful young men, Mary's and Richard's guests, and heard their loving Thanksgiving talk, listened to their music, and helped in their games, to appreciate it. And then, Jerome's evening banquet and harvest for the poor, where Mrs. Green fairly distinguished herself by bringing a wagon load of stuff, and doing wonders in making people comfortable and happy. She and Mrs. Wiggs rode home in company, and as Mrs. Wiggs alighted at her own gate, Mrs. Green reached down and caught her by the hand.

"I just want you to know," she whispered, "that this is the very best Thanksgiving I ever had in my whole life. It sounds kind of awful—I'd hate most folks to hear me say it—but I'm happier than I've been for years, even if Nathaniel is dead."

Mrs. Wiggs gave her hand a hearty shake. "I guess God understands," she said.

—THE REV. DR. PETER H. MILLIKEN has been appointed pastor for strangers at the Marble Collegiate Church, New York. Dr. Milliken was pastor of the First Reformed Church of Philadelphia for twenty years, and became connected with the Marble Collegiate Church on November 15, 1910.

Just Out— We Want to Send You Ou

Big New WINTER CATALOG and Style Book. It will Save You Big Money on Groceries, Clothing, Furniture, Shoes and Other Household Supplies

Contains 120 pages of money saving items. Write a postal for it today and see how you can get our Guaranteed Groceries at less than store prices. For instance: Laundry Soap at 2½c a bar; Baking Powder at 7½c a can; Toilet Soap (3 bar box), 12½c; Starch 5c a box—everything at a big saving.

1500 Premiums Given with orders for these Guaranteed Products. Thirty days' trial—no money in advance—money back if not satisfied. Write for our Catalog and learn how to furnish your home throughout without a cent of extra cost on our money saving Factory-to-Home Plan.

Given Free with $10 worth of Our Guaranteed Products

CROFTS & REED CO., Dept. C770, Chicago

Plan includes Free Red Letter

Looking toward Christmas

Teachers Bible for you

Sunday School Teachers and your classes of boys are—many of you—engaged at this time of the year in collecting a little money with which to bring Christmas Happiness and Good Cheer to many families whose great need is known to you.

The Christian Herald has a team-work" plan for your class of boys which is simple in execution and easy of accomplishment.

While you need no money to put it into operation, the plan will very materially help your Christmas Class Fund.

When writing state how many boys in your class, also their average age.

Address: Dept. L, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York

AGENTS! BIG PROFITS

Sell Brandt's Newly Patented Automatic Razor Stropper. The only invention that puts a perfect edge on any razor in 20 seconds. Works automatically. For OLD style razors or SAFETY Blades. Makes one blade last a year. Any one can use it. Guaranteed for life.

Sharpens and Keeps Sharp Any Razor in the World, OLD Style or SAFETY.

Harry Bartow sold 40 stroppers in 18 hrs. 15 min. You can do as well. No selling experience needed. It sells itself. Every man wants one. Be the first in your locality. Write for prices, terms and territory. Be quick.

C. BRANDT CUTLERY CO., 84 West Broadway, New York

KEEP YOUR RAZOR SHA

3 in One

Don't blame the razor if it dulls quickly, be it's your fault. Rub a few drops of 3-in oil on your razor strop. When leather is strop as usual. Any razor will cut easier, and stay sharp longer. After using, draw between thumb and finger moistened with 3-in

This prevents rust, keeps edge smooth and always sharp and ready for immediate use. Don't your face. Use 3-in-One on your razor and shave

FREE Write for liberal free sample and scientific circular. Try it yourself.

ONE OIL COMPANY. 42 CR Broadway New

PATENTS How to GET Every Dollar Your Invention is Worth. Send 8 cents stamps for new 128 page book of Vital Interest to Inventors.

R. S. & A. B. LACEY, Dept. 36 Washington, D. C.

A BRAIN WORKER

Must Have the Kind of Food That Nourishes the Brain

"I am a literary man whose nervous energy is a great part of my stock in trade, and ordinarily I have little patience with breakfast foods and the extravagant claims made for them. But I cannot withhold my acknowledgment of the debt that I owe to Grape-Nuts food.

"I discovered long ago that the very bulkiness of the ordinary diet was not calculated to give one a clear head, the power of sustained, accurate thinking. I always felt heavy and sluggish in mind as well as body after eating the ordinary meal, which diverted the blood from the brain to the digestive apparatus.

"I tried foods easy of digestion, but found them usually deficient in nutriment. I experimented with many breakfast foods and they, too, proved unsatisfactory, till I reached Grape-Nuts. And then the problem was solved.

"Grape-Nuts agreed with me perfectly from the beginning, satisfying my hunger and supplying the nutriment that so many other prepared foods lack.

"I had not been using it very long before I found that I was turning out an unusual quantity and quality of work. Continued use has demonstrated to my entire satisfaction that Grape-Nuts food contains the elements needed by the brain and nervous system of the hard-working public writer." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

"There's a reason," and it is explained in the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

The BEST Li

Cheapest and best light t stores, factories, churches and p Makes and burns kerosene. Eq electricity or acetylene. Cheaper sene. Over 200 styles. Agent Write for catalogue.

THE BEST LIGHT 3-70 E. 5th St., Can

Mend the Lea

AGENTS WANTED

in your Granite, Tin, Aluminum a Dishes, Kettles, Pans, etc.,

with PECKS Soft Metal RI

Anyone can do it. Quick and ea solder, cement or bolt. Fit any s Send for sample box of 25 assorte 10c postpaid. Regular package 2 PECK & CO., 258 Main St., Batavi

Amazing Pr

MADE IN MUSHR

Anybody can make big raising mushrooms year in cellars, sheds, boxes, etc., in spare I tell you where to sel Write to-day for Free Illus. Instruction

HIRAM BARTO 326 West 48th St., Ne

Rock of Ages

Beautiful picture in Colors and Gold. Tremendous seller. Agents wanted. One sample for 4 cents to help pay postage and advertising, additional samples 10c each. 80c doz. postpaid.

FREE

J. WENDELL 21 South Clinton Street, CHICAGO

75 Pieces 35 cts. pure silk paid

Write to-day for our handsome assortment of pure silk pieces—different colors—suitable for "Crazy" pillow cover or small quilt. Can't be duplicated at stores under $2. Money refunded if not satisfactory. Send stamps or coin

Schwartz-Espin Importing Co., 607 Locust Street, St. Louis, Mo.

Print Your Own

EXCELSIOR

Cards, circulars, books, newspaper. Press $5 Larger $18. Rotary $60. Save money. Big profit printing for others. All easy, rules sent. Write factory for press catalog. Type, cards, paper, &c. THE PRESS CO., - Meriden, - Connecticut.

BLYMYER CHURCH BELLS.

UNLIKE OTHER BELLS SWEETER, MORE DURABLE, LOWER PRICE. OUR FREE CATALOGUE TELLS WHY.

Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati, O.

CATALOGUE OF SPLENDID, HELPFUL, INTERESTING BOOKS for Christian Herald Readers. Sent free on application to M. E. Munson, Pub., 77 Bible House, New York

25 CHRISTMAS POST CARDS All Different in Gold & Beautiful Colors Regal Mfg. Co., Desk 8, Battle Creek, Mich. 10c

★EUROPEAN TOURS. Secure one by enlisting your friends' interest in our delightful trips. Write for program and details to-day. Cash commission also. REV. GEORGE F. NASON, Box A984, Wilmington, Del.

CAL. Honey on Trial, freight paid. 10 lb. Large sample free. Last honey nuts, trout etc., free. Spencer Apiaries Co., Box 52, Nordhoff, Calif.

TYPEWRITERS

VISIBLE WRIT or otherwise

L. S. SMITHS, OLIVERS, UNDERWOOD ¼ to ½ M'F'RS PRIC Shipped ANYWHERE for Free T RENTED allowing Rent to A

PRICES $15.00

First Class Machines Fresh from the M'f'rs—Write for Illustrated C Typewriter Emporium, (EST. 1892) 34-36 LAKE ST.

BUILDING WITH GOD*

Sunday School Lesson by Dr. and Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts

NEHEMIAH moved upon Jerusalem, an army of one, after a march of four months on the y from Babylon. He rested three ys, so he tells us (Neh. 2: 11)—the ole of this chapter should be read— d then went out to reconnoitre in e night; "neither was there any ast with me save the beast I rode on. . . . I viewed the walls of rusalem, which were broken down, d the gates thereof were consumed th fire." In passing some places, had to alight, for "there was no ace for the beast that was under me pass" (because of the ruins). Dr. seph Parker commenting upon this perience of Nehemiah says: "He ok his own measure of the situation ruins, ruins softened by moonlight, ins aggravated by shadows, ruins en by a lonely man, ruins looked at a heart that meant to destroy them, id bring back every beam of ancient ory. If we could paint that picture e might entrance the world." Nehe- iah returned to the city by night, but id no one of his expedition until such time as he deemed it wise to gather e priests, the nobles, the rulers and e people together. "Come, let us uild up the wall of Jerusalem, that we no more a reproach," came his words te a clarion call. In sweet antiphony e people responded, "Let us rise up nd build." There was, however, a scord. It came from Sanballat, one the "governors," and his henchman, obiah. It grieved them exceedingly at there was come a man to seek the elfare of Israel, and they tried the eapon of scorn. But the people re- lied, "The God of heaven, he will rosper us."

Nehemiah's Obstacles

It will be found most interesting to ead the whole of the third chapter of ehemiah, about how he apportioned he people to the work to be done. The sts of hard names in this chapter hould not deter one from reading it. Miss Sarah Smiley said about reading similar chapter, "I thanked God for ach hard name, because God had hought it worth while to put it in his ook, and no one who had served was orgotten." But Sanballat and Tobiah ontinued shooting arrows of scorn and idicule: "What are these feeble Jews oing? Will they make an end in a ay? Will they revive the stones out f the heaps of rubbish? If a fox go p, he shall break down their stone all!" But the people kept right on ith the building, until all around the ity the wall was continuous and half he height it was intended to be. San- allat grew more aggressive; he sought llies among the Ammonites, the Ara- ians and Ashdodites, and they all ame up to fight against Jerusalem. he hands of the Israelites weakened, nd some of them even said, "We are ot able to build the wall." But the one man," Nehemiah, said not so. He as courage for all, wisdom for all, strength for all. He encouraged them n God, saying, "Be not ye afraid of hem; remember the Lord who is great nd terrible." Nehemiah showed his reat generalship in the way he re- rganized his forces (read Neh. 4: 15- 1). Instead of yielding to their weak- ning, he redoubled their labors and ermitted neither himself nor them to ake off their clothing nor to lay aside heir weapons while they slept, in order hat they might be ready to meet the nemy at any moment. But the enemy, nstead of attacking the Israelites in he open, four times made attempts o capture Nehemiah by treachery. Sanballat five times sent a letter to Nehemiah asking him to come to the plain of Ono for a conference. Each time Nehemiah returned the answer, "I am doing a great work, so that I cannot come down." Then Sanballat's treachery took another form. He learned of a priest in Jerusalem who could be bribed, and with him Sanballat arranged a trap by which Nehemiah might possibly be caught. Shemaiah was the name of the priest. He tried to persuade Nehemiah to go into the temple for safety because Sanballat and his allied forces were come. Nehemiah was instructed by God that Shemaiah was false, and he replied: "I will not go in."

Another difficulty Nehemiah had to meet was disaffection among the builders, because they had no time to plant grain, nor to get money for taxes. But Nehemiah arranged with the rulers that their taxes should be remitted, and made arrangements for food until such a time when they could plant. By result of strenuous effort the wall, between three and four miles long, was completed in fifty-two days.

The Nehemiah Type

There is room in the world for other people of the Nehemiah type, both men and women. The State needs them, the Church needs them, God needs them. Walking in the night through the streets of the town, Samuel Wesley heard the alarm of fire. He presently reached his own house, and found that it was burning. He hurried to the rescue of his wife and children. Gathered in the street, the father and mother proceeded to count their children. One was missing—a boy of six, little John. The father rushed back into the burning house, and found the stairway so nearly consumed that it was impossible to reach the nursery in the second story. He fell on his knees and committed to God the spirit of the child. But the boy had climbed upon a box that stood before the nursery window, and those outside had caught sight of his face. Quickly men were hoisted on each other's shoulders, and reaching the window, the boy was snatched out just as the roof fell in. The little life thus marvelously saved was lengthened to nearly ninety years, and the great Methodist branch of the Church was organized.

A life worthy to be classed with that of Wesley was that of Christian David. He came as a refugee from his home in Moravia to the German province of Silesia, fleeing from religious persecution, because he had been given a Bible and had found comfort in reading it. He secretly led a little colony of two families in 1722. And thus the foundation was laid for a missionary effort which has astonished the world. The missionary work was begun when the population of the colony was only six hundred. The proportion of missionaries to the membership of the Moravian Church is larger than in any other denomination. We must refer to one other, Richard Baxter. Dr. Cuyler has said of him: "For half a century that man gave himself to the service of Jesus with a perseverance and industry that shames such loiterers as you and I." On every Sabbath day he preached two sermons; on two days of the week he spent seven hours instructing the children of the parish, omitting none on account of poverty or obscurity. He devoted one day in the week to their bodily welfare. He spent three days in studying and writing, preparing one hundred and sixty volumes, among them the Saint's Everlasting Rest, which has helped so many people on the way to heaven. It is known that his life alone changed the town of Kidderminster from vice

Continued on next page

* The International Sunday School Lesson for December 3, 1911. Nehemiah Rebuilds the Wall of Jerusalem. Neh. 4. GOLDEN TEXT: "Watch ye, stand fast in the faith, quit you like men, be strong." I. Cor. 16:13.

In the Bell Democracy

Membership in the telephone democracy of the Bell System means equal opportunity for every man, no matter who he is or where he is.

Each member of this Bell democracy has the same chance of communication, limited only by the distance the voice can be carried.

However remote, whether in the adobe house on the Rio Grande, on the Montana sheep ranch or in the isolated New England farm house, the Bell telephone is an open doorway to the Universal Bell System.

From each Bell outpost run lines that connect it with the central office—that nerve center of the local system.

Long distance and toll lines connect these nerve centers and furnish clear tracks for telephone talk throughout the land.

12,000,000 miles of wire are the highways over which 20,000,000 telephone talks are carried daily.

The Bell System binds together the social and business activities of a people in a shoulder-to-shoulder march of progress.

AMERICAN TELEPHONE AND TELEGRAPH COMPANY
AND ASSOCIATED COMPANIES

One Policy One System Universal Service

PATENTS That Protect and Pay
Advice and Books FREE
Rates Reasonable. Highest References. Best Services.
WATSON E. COLEMAN, Patent Lawyer, WASHINGTON, D.C.

PATENTS SECURED OR FEE RETURNED.
Free report as to Patentability. Illustrated Guide Book, and List of Inventions Wanted, sent free.
VICTOR J. EVANS & CO., Washington, D. C.

Read This Letter

We Ship the Same Day Order Is Rec'd.

Save $5.00 to $40.00 On Your Stove Purchases

SPLENDID Kalamazoo Stoves and Ranges sold direct from the factory will net you a $5.00 to $40.00 saving—sometimes more as shown in this letter. No dealer, jobber, middleman or salesman makes a cent on Kalamazoo stoves and you pocket their profits and get the best—America's Standard Stove.

Kalamazoo Range Bet. ter than $80 Stove—and Over $40.00 Saved.

125 Broad Street, Lyons, N. Y.
April 16, 1911
Gentlemen: The Kalamazoo Range ordered of you arrived all in good order. It is as near perfect my wife says, as a stove can be. It bakes far better than the stove she used before, which cost $80.00.
Yours respectfully,
WM. C. FLERO.

Cash or Credit

Pay on terms that meet your convenience on 30 Days Free Trial, 360 Days Approval Test, Freight Prepaid and Shipment made same day order is received. 170,000 satisfied customers prove our proposition.

Big Stove Book—FREE

A price for every purse among our 400 styles and sizes, illustrated and described, against the dozen styles your dealer has. Brimful of inside stove facts that the dealer himself doesn't know. Get the how and why of the Kalamazoo proposition. Send NOW—ask for catalog No. 103.

Kalamazoo Stove Company, Manufacturers

RADIANT BASE BURNER Kalamazoo, Michigan "A Kalamazoo Direct to You" And Gas Stoves Too

You Can Weigh

Exactly what You Should Weigh

You can be Strong—Vigorous—full of life and Energy.

You can be free from Chronic Ailments—every organ of your body strong as nature intended.

You can have a Good Figure—as good as any woman.

You can have a Clear Skin.

I no longer need to say what "I can do," but what "I HAVE DONE." I have helped 49,000 of the most cultured, intelligent women of America to arise to their very best—why not you?

NO DRUGS NO MEDICINES

My pupils simply comply with Nature's laws.

What My Pupils say:

"Every one notices the change in my complexion; it has lost that yellow color."

"Just think what you have done for me! Last year I weighed 216 pounds, this year 146, and have not gained an ounce back. I am not wrinkled either. I feel so young and strong, no rheumatism, or sluggish liver, and I can breathe now. It is surprising how easily I did it, I feel 15 years younger."

"Just think! I have not had a pill or a cathartic since I began, and I used to take one every night."

"My weight has increased 30 pounds. I don't know what indigestion is any more, and my nerves are so rested! I sleep like a baby."

"Miss Cocroft, I have taken off my glasses, and my catarrh is so much better. Isn't that good?

"I feel as if I could look every man, woman and child in the face with the feeling that I am growing—spiritually, physically and mentally. Really I am a stronger, better woman. I don't know how to tell you or to thank you."

Reports like these come to me every day. Do you wonder I want to help every woman to vibrant health and happiness? Write me your faults of health or figure. Your correspondence is held in strict confidence. If I cannot help you I will tell you what will.

My free book tells how to stand and walk correctly, and contains other information of vital interest to women. Every woman should have it. Write for it. If you do not need me, you may be able to help a dear friend.

I have had a wonderful experience, and I'd like to tell you about it.

Susanna Cocroft

Dept. 18, 624 Michigan Ave., Chicago

Miss Cocroft is the best authority in America upon the regaining of woman's health and figure thro Natural, Scientific means.

FREE THIS ALADDIN LAMP FREE

BURNS KEROSENE (Coal Oil)

Outshines city gas or electricity. Simple, noiseless, odorless, clean, safe, money-saving. Guaranteed. Write nearest office for catalogue M and learn how to get an Aladdin Mantle Lamp FREE.

AGENTS T. H. BALL SOLD 850 on money back guarantee, not one returned. Stacey sold 12 in one hour. Newsom sold 32 in 10 calls. Gibson sold 48 in 6 days. Sells itself. Needed in every home. Our Sunbeam Burner fits other lamps. Complete line for homes, stores etc. Ask for our liberal agency proposition.

MANLE LAMP CO. OF AMERICA, Dept. 2B

Offices at—Chicago, Ill., Portland, Ore., Waterbury, Conn., Dallas, Tex., Winnipeg, Montreal, Canada

FREE FANCY WORK CATALOG

Largest, most complete and up-to-date catalog of its kind ever published. Over 1500 illustrations. Shows our unequaled line of Eyelet, Tinted and Silk Embroidery Designs, Stamped Linens, Pillow Tops, Battenberg, Braids, Perforated Patterns and Stamping Outfits, Needlework Supplies. Also large assortment of Infants' Wear, Hemstitched Linens, Damask Table Cloths, Napkins, Towels, Handkerchiefs, Lace Curtains, Novelties, etc. Don't miss this FREE offer and write a postal today asking for "CATALOG H."

FRED HERRSCHNER, 6453 Marshfield Av. Chicago, Ill.

HOLIDAY COMBINATION

2 Xmas Greeting Letters with Envelopes for	10c.
or 6 assorted in Fancy Box for	25c
10 Xmas Post Cards	10c
6 Superior Xmas Post Cards	10c
10 New Year Post Cards	10c.
Any three 10c. packages for	25c.
Special Assortment of High Grade Post Cards 100 for 60c.

MADISON ART COMPANY, - - MADISON, CONN.

Ladies' Aids and other church organizations are paying off debts and raising money through our Special Church Aid Plan Write for it Address SPECIAL WORK DEPT., Capitol Brush Co., Hartford, Conn.

Sunday School Lesson

Continued from preceding page

and ignorance to a community that was sober and industrious, a large part being converted and godly. On Sabbath evening one might hear hundreds of families singing psalms or reading the Bible in passing along the street. Dr. Cuyler adds: "Such was one life, the life of a man, much of the time an invalid."

At a six weeks' revival meeting one little boy was the sole visible result! But that boy grew up to be the great apostle of modern missions, Adoniram Judson. It is said, "To him God gave Burma, and he gave Burma to God."

Some one is probably saying, "These men you have referred to have all been 'in the limelight.'" If that is so, it is because the limelight is God's light. What a list of immortals the angels of God might show us written in God's book of remembrance!

The Rubbish

We turn again to the builders on the wall of Jerusalem. They lost their grip because of the rubbish. It was so great they despaired of ever getting it into shape. If Nehemiah had not been there, and had not been the courageous character that he was, they would have given up. It would be hard for us to conceive of the pile of rubbish which the Israelites had to use as a quarry out of which to rebuild the walls of the city. Some of us no doubt have seen a city wholly or in part destroyed by fire. In a very short space of time those cities rose from the débris to be more beautiful than before. But Jerusalem for the most part had lain waste for sixty years. We can hardly wonder that when the builders had their wall half-way up, and they had probably used the best stones, they became somewhat discouraged and said: "There is so much rubbish that we are not able to build the wall." But, encouraged in God by Nehemiah, they did go on, using the stuff they had, until the wall was completed.

In building national or individual character it must be done from "the stuff we have." The great Anglo-Saxon race to which we belong has been developed from comparatively small groups of tribes, some of them very unpromising ones at that. It is only through centuries of building with God that our race has become one of the most enlightened, most humane, and most religious of all peoples. Our own beloved land is an example. In less than three centuries we have increased from one ship's load to upwards of ninety millions of people! In large part this has come about through immigration. We cannot all claim to be descendants from the Mayflower! The immigrants that have come to us have, some of them, been as unpromising and as godless as our own heathen forefathers, yet we have made them over—Americanized, Christianized them as we have built them into our body politic, and now we have a land that is nearly all sunshine and a flag with many stars. But there is more building yet to be done, and that which is built must be strengthened. The United States must be made stronger morally and religiously, and we are responsible for this rebuilding. We are doing it through all organizations that make for civic betterment, moral uplift and religious development. It is our duty, our patriotic duty to belong to as many societies of this sort as we can.

But in all this national building let us look to ourselves. We shall need to be good and true in order to make ours a Christian nation indeed.

Have we "rubbish" in our individual character? If one finds that he has a bad ancestry, let him not be discouraged in his own character-building. Let him say: "If I am handicaped, I will nevertheless, God helping me, make a strong character of myself."

The climax of our lesson is now reached in the Golden Text: "Watch ye, stand fast in the faith, quit you like men, be strong."

The Lesson Taught to Children

Make use of a box of blocks by having a number of children each place a block in a little wall that all will together build; then tell the story of the people of Jerusalem who built the wall under the direction of Nehemiah. At this juncture they will be interested to see the Bible Picture Roll which has on it a representation of the Israelites at work.

Teach them the song of the "Little Builders":

> Little builders all are we,
> Building for God's eye to see,
> Building from our hearts within,
> Thoughts of good, or thoughts of sin;
> Building with the deeds we do
> Actions ill, or pure and true.
> Oh, how careful we must be > Building for eternity!

(The tune may be found in Special Songs and Services, by Mrs. M. G. Kennedy.)

The teacher would do well to draw a wall of blocks on the blackboard, printing in each block the name of some good thing a child should do, in each case being dictated by a child, so that the whole wall on the blackboard will represent the thought of the children themselves.

Among the Workers

—St. George's P. E. Church, New York, which has one of the largest parishes in the world, is arranging to celebrate the hundredth anniversary of its foundation.

—Any one knowing the address or present whereabouts of Solomon Augustus Brooks, Miss E. E. Scales, and Willis H. Josas is requested to send the same to The Christian Herald.

—Mr. Sidney Whittemore, president of the National Federation of Gospel Missions, recently visited Philadelphia, and spoke at the following institutions: "The Whosoever Gospel Mission, Germantown; Bethesda Mission, Rescue Home, Brotherhood Mission, Wayside Gospel Mission, and Sunday Breakfast Association. There were over one hundred requests for prayer at the various meetings.

—The installation of Rev. Francis Raymond Sturtevant as pastor of the First Congregational Unitarian Society, of Taunton, Mass., took place on October 17. The installation sermon was preached by Rev. Charles Edward Park, First Church, Boston, Mass. The right hand of fellowship was given by Rev. William B. Geoghegan, of the First Congregational Society, New Bedford, Mass. Addresses of welcome were given by Rev. Lincoln B. Goodrich, Taunton, Mass., and the Rev. George H. Reed, Belmont, Mass.

—The American Seamen's Friend Society, No. 76 Wall Street, New York, has an institute at No. 507 West Street, which is devoted entirely to the welfare of sailors. The institute is located right at the doors of the great transatlantic piers, and as a consequence it has become the rendezvous of deep-water sailors from all over the world. One branch of the varied activities is concerned with the welfare of boys. On the average ocean liner there are at least a dozen youngsters, whose ages range from fourteen to twenty years. Other craft have from one to six boys. When it is remembered that these youngsters are strangers in a strange land, it is evident that there is need for even more watchful care and intelligent supervision than for the average boy. The boys' department of the Institute has been established less than three years, yet it is becoming well known.

—Missionary W. C. Wilcox, Bethany Mission Station, Estcourt, South Africa, writes giving the results of a unique experiment in land colonization among the natives. With limited capital he bought at first 200 acres, divided it into 25 lots, and sold it to the natives. Then he bought 326 acres, 200 of which he cut into five-acre lots. He has already sold one-half of them to the natives. Not long ago, a delegation of men from a neighboring town called upon him, having been sent by their church, and requested his help. Mr. Wilcox paid them a visit and was surprised to see the houses which the people themselves had built. But they were as "sheep without a shepherd." They were all on private farms and subject to banishment at the will of their landlords. The natives wanted Mr. Wilcox to buy these farms from their owners, and cut them up as he had done at other places, and then sell them to the natives, who could build homes upon them. He was reluctantly obliged to refuse their petition.

A Great "Queen"

Horse Story

"KATE and QUEEN"

By Prof. Jesse Beery

King of Horse Trainers

Equals the famous "Black Beauty" in human interest—surpasses it in practicability. 'Kate" a victim of poor handling is vividly contrasted with "Queen" who was more fortunate. You sympathize with one—rejoice with the other—even as you sigh for the slum waif and laugh with the child of fortune.

Prof. Beery has skillfully woven into this intensely interesting and true story, many valuable suggestions for handling horses—a result of a lifetime's experience.

Special Offer to Horsemen

Prof. Beery desires that every horse owner, trainer, breeder—everyone interested in horses—should read this great story. To make it possible, for a short time he offers every interested horseman a copy, worth $1.00, for the remarkably low price of

25c Postpaid

If you have even a passing interest in horses—if you own, train or breed them, you will gather from it a fund of knowledge worth many times the small price. Send for a copy today. Enclose stamps or coin.

FREE With each book we send free a beautiful colored picture of Queen—oil painting effect—suitable for framing. Order today. Address

PROF. JESSE BEERY

Box 505 Pleasant Hill, Ohio

Vapo Cresolene

(ESTABLISHED 1879)

"Used while you sleep."

for Whooping Cough, Croup, Asthma, Sore Throat, Coughs, Bronchitis, Colds, Diphtheria, Catarrh.

A simple, safe and effective treatment avoiding drugs. Vaporized Cresolene stops the paroxysms of Whooping Cough and relieves Croup at once.

It is a boon to sufferers from Asthma.

The air rendered strongly antiseptic, inspired with every breath, makes breathing easy, soothes the sore throat and stops the cough, assuring restful nights.

Cresolene relieves the bronchial complications of Scarlet Fever and Measles and is a valuable aid in the treatment of Diphtheria.

Cresolene's best recommendation is its 30 years of successful use. Send us postal for Descriptive Booklet.

For Sale by All Druggists

Try Cresolene Antiseptic Throat Tablets for the irritated throat, composed of slippery elm bark, licorice, sugar and Cresolene. They can't harm you. Of your druggists or from us, 10c in stamps.

The Vapo-Cresolene Co., 62 Cortlandt St., New York

or Leeming-Miles Building, Montreal, Canada

GUARANTEED Freight Paid

Our Gold Coin Stove Guaranty is to take back the stove at our expense, any time within a year and refund your money if you are not satisfied.

Freight is prepaid; safe delivery insured, ready to set up—cyclopedia published. Send for our Free Catalogue, Price List and Offer.

Our prices are $5 to $20 less than any dealer's prices. The stoves are only of the very best—and so guaranteed.

Gold Coin Stove Co. 11 Oak Street, Troy, N. Y.

ALL FOR 20¢

Three beautiful 12-inch LINEN Centerpieces, Holly, Eyelet and Daisy designs, 4 Doilies and our catalog showing over 600 designs of art embroidery goods are 70 different EMBROID'RY STITCHES. All delivered for 20 cts.

P. W. KELLER CO., Waterloo, Iowa

ZOBO THE MUSICAL WONDER.

YOU CAN PLAY IT Without Learning.

Sing into the mouthpiece. Zobo does the rest. For Home, Church and Sunday School Entertainments. Full information FREE on request.

STRAUSS MFG. CO., 355 Broadway, Dept. 19, New York

Young People's Societies

Reproducing the Model*

AND look," said God unto Moses (Ex. 25:40), "that thou make em [all things] after their pattern, hich was shewed thee in the mount." Thus from the earliest times God s never left his children without tterns for their guidance. In the imitive ages he raised up the patri-chs, faulty men, yet, as worshiping perfect God and striving after right-usness, presenting a model for con-ct. They sinned but they repented. ey taught their children the true ligion, and thus was developed the nderful Jewish race, which led the orld in the pursuit of spiritual pur-y and righteousness, up to the time the coming of our Lord. Moses was rectly instructed of God. Through m came the moral law, still the chief ide of human virtue. Not only was e to build a tabernacle to the glory of od, according to the measurements ven directly from heaven, but into s hands were confided those tables of one upon which were graven ade-uate rules for the upbuilding of per-ct human characters.

A long line of holy men were raised p throughout the ages to supplement nd make plain to the dull eyes of umanity the commands of the deca-ogue. At last, when the earth was repared for his coming, nearly all nds being gathered under the one reat sway of Rome, was bestowed pon us the crowning gift, the perfect lodel, for mankind to follow.

The greatest English poet has put nto the mouth of his most famous haracter a wonderful tribute to the uman form and mind: "What a piece f work is man—how noble in reason, ow infinite in faculty, in form and oving how express and admirable, in ction how like an angel, in apprehen-ion how like a god!" And yet with hese almost divine attributes of intel-ect and soul, and with every quality eeded to imitate the perfect Model, ankind, as a whole, follow almost ny other rather than that.

The imitation of Christ means the rucifixion of the flesh and the exalta-ion of the things of the spirit. It eans the constant development of hose qualities which mark off man rom the lower animals. The pleas-ures of sense; the love of the world; the cherishing of the "thing-life," to the harm of the "thought-life" and the soul-life; these are the lures of Satan to keep us from following after the Master; and to the vast mass of man-kind, they appeal with well-nigh irre-sistible force.

"I am the bright and morning Star," said our Saviour. It is as though he not only walked before us as a pattern of holiness, but as though a light shone around him to let us see that pattern clearly; and is there not, in the man who truly strives to be like him, also a light, as of a star?

The late Dr. Parsons Nichols spoke eloquently of such men and the light by which they walk, and which they in turn shed around them. "As a man sees, so is he. His vision is the measure of his power. This is the secret of the world's great leaders—Moses, David, Paul, Luther, Knox, Cromwell, Washington. We need such leaders now. We need in the church men whose minds are lifted up into the sweep of God's omnipotent purposes. The spirit of the heavenly vision gives birth to power, to confidence.

It is said that one must look long and fixedly upon any object before it can be graven on the mind. The artist studies with a keen and earnest gaze the face or the landscape which he proposes to paint. Before we can become truly like our Master, we must study his features as the Gospels have portrayed them. Thus only can we grow into his likeness.

* Topic of the Epworth League for Sunday, December 3. TEXTS: Eph. 4: 11:16; II. Peter 1: 3, 4.

Great Lives: Paul*

THE city of Tarsus, in which Paul was born, was at that time the rival of Athens and Alexandria in learning. Its schools were very famous. Even if the great apostle to the Gentiles were not instructed in these schools, he must have gained much in taste and culture from the very atmosphere where they flourished.

It is quite certain that he knew Greek and was familiar with the Greek version of the Scriptures, when he was permitted in the Holy City to sit "at the feet of Gamaliel," and thus acquire that intimate knowledge of Jewish law and literature which he used later in a masterly manner to confound the enemies of Christ.

The mere fact that he was born in Tarsus did not make him a Roman citizen. He had probably inherited this distinction, a great privilege for a Jew to possess in that day, from some ancestor who had rendered a service to the Roman state. His trade of tent-making he had learned as a Jew, for the Jews almost universally taught their sons some handicraft. In the utter disregard of gain which the apostles showed, and their desire not to burden their converts, the frequent practice of his trade was undoubtedly a great convenience to Paul, besides setting a good example.

We see Paul first, as Saul, joining in the persecution of Stephen, and "consenting unto his death." It was a crisis in the life of the ardent and intense Benjamite. Whatever cause he espoused, he entered into with the full force of his fiery nature.

Most vividly is his conversion described in his own words in the Acts. We seem to see the light from heaven, the blanched faces of Saul and his companions, and their speechless cowering upon the ground. Then comes the command to go to Damascus and there be told what he should do.

How or why the name "Saul" became "Paul" is unknown. Commentators suggest that the new title commemorates the beginning of his Christian ministry. It would be natural that he should then wish to be known no longer by the name under which he had so grievously sinned against Christ. It is supposed that when, after a period of preaching in Damascus, he fled from it under threats of persecution, he went into Arabia and tarried there for many months, striving, perhaps, by seclusion from the world to fit himself the better for his great work.

From Arabia he returns to Damascus. Then he goes to Jerusalem and there he becomes associated with Barnabas. Later came his great mission to Antioch, where the Gentiles first received the Gospel. Follow him on his travels as he goes from place to place. Read his matchless sermons and epistles. The last of these (II. Timothy) was written from Rome, when its inspired author was confined in a prison.

Whether Paul was twice or but once imprisoned there, is a point not yet decided by Bible students. Dr. McClintock thinks that the evidence of two imprisonments is most reliable, and "the concurrent testimony of ecclesiastical antiquity" is that he was beheaded at Rome at about the time of Peter's crucifixion there. It was a wonderful career, without which our Bible and the world would have been immeasurably impoverished.

* Christian Endeavor Topic for Sunday, December 3. TEXT: II. Tim. 4: 1-8.

Note.—In the essay upon "John," in our issue for October 25, 1911, above the sentence stating that our Saviour and the apostle John were Levites, a line should have been inserted crediting this theory to a well-known German cult, which professes to have found through tradition and research more Levitical ancestors of Christ than Judaic; the single line of Judah having been traced in order to show that prophecy had been fulfilled.

A Christmas Present That Doesn't End With Christmas

But goes right on during the entire year: coming 12 times to the one you give it: a year's subscription to THE LADIES' HOME JOURNAL. It is only a dollar and a half. Not much to you, perhaps, but more than some women can afford. Wouldn't it be a welcome visitor to them? We have an artistic Christmas card that goes with the gift, to be received on Christmas Day, saying that it is from you.

Can we solve at least one Christmas-present question for you in this way?

We stand ready.

THE CURTIS PUBLISHING COMPANY
INDEPENDENCE SQUARE
PHILADELPHIA

When Women Pay Over 2 Million Dollars A Year for One Thing

That article must have merit. It is hard to realize that they do. But it is so. Over one million and a half women now buy THE LADIES' HOME JOURNAL each month at 15 cents or $1.50 a year. Figure it out for yourselves. No other magazine in America commands such an expenditure by American women. Nor is this the spasmodic expenditure of a single year. For over ten years now the circulation of this magazine has not been below or even touched 12 million copies a year—always more.

A million a month for half a decade: a million and a quarter for months—now over a million and a half: in actual numbers, a million and 700 thousand.

That is growth!

Have you seen it recently?

For 15 Cents You Can Have It

THE CURTIS PUBLISHING COMPANY
INDEPENDENCE SQUARE
PHILADELPHIA

The Silver Plate That Originated in 1847

No brand of silver-plate has ever achieved the fame or established the wearing-quality reputation of that originated by the Rogers brothers in 1847.

1847 ROGERS BROS. XS TRIPLE is the mark that assures you genuine worth and beauty in silverware.

This is the highest grade of triple plate. Our process of finishing closes the pores of the silver so that it is worked into a firm, hard surface that will stand years of the hardest kind of wear. This process has given 1847 ROGERS BROS. silverware the well-earned title of

"Silver Plate that Wears"

Guaranteed by the largest makers of silverware in the world.

Most Popular for Gifts

Table Silver—Spoons, Forks, Knives, Serving Pieces—or a Combination Chest, are very acceptable Holiday Gifts. Sold by leading dealers everywhere.

Send for illustrated catalogue "L-57"

MERIDEN BRITANNIA COMPANY
(International Silver Company, Successor)
Meriden, Conn.
NEW YORK CHICAGO SAN FRANCISCO HAMILTON, CANADA

Christian Herald

SUBSCRIPTION, $1.50 PER ANNUM
PUBLISHED 52 TIMES A YEAR

COPYRIGHT, 1911, BY THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

NEW YORK, NOVEMBER 29, 1911

VOL. 34—NO. 48. PRICE 5 CENTS
OFFICES: BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK

The Children's Loaf

From the Painting by D. F. Laugée

OUR · MAIL · BAG

Questions and Answers

J. T. J., Newburg, Ind. I shall be pleased if you can throw some light on Ex. 31: 17, especially the last word, "refreshed."

It has been claimed by some scholars that the last clause was an interpolation by some early scribe or translator, but it is upheld by modern commentators just as it stands. One cannot easily conceive of the divine energy being spent, nor is it necessary to put such a construction on the word. Another interpretation is that the inspired writer used this phraseology to signify to men that the seventh day was to be a period of rest and refreshment and of abstention from labor.

Ella D., Portland, Me. 1. What is the total numerical strength of the Mohammedan power throughout the world? 2. Is such a thing as a "holy war" possible in these days?

1. There are about 200,000,000 Mohammedans (M. Fournier de Flaix, the distinguished statist, ten years ago estimated the number at 176,000,000): 90,000,000 of these are under British rule, chiefly in India, Burma, Egypt and England's East African colonies. 2. Their interests now are so diverse that it would be difficult if not impossible to unite them in a "holy war" or universal crusade under the Crescent. The Moslems of Syria, of Abyssinia, of Central Africa, of India, Malaysia, and other points far distant from Turkey in Europe or in Arabia could only with great difficulty be persuaded to engage in such a movement as sensational correspondents sometimes write about, knowing that it could only result disastrously.

W. C. M., Toronto, Can. Please inform me where trees which produce a vegetable butter are cultivated.

There are twenty-two different vegetable oils, many of which are referred to as butters. The commonest are cocoa butter from the chocolate tree, Dika butter from the Barteri tree, Otoba butter, Shea butter and Ghee butter. The trees producing the seeds from which these fats are extracted are cultivated in India, Java, Africa, Mexico and many other tropic and subtropic countries.

L. E., Salem, Mass. What did the placing of twelve stones in the midst of Jordan (Josh. 4: 9) signify? It is said "they are there unto this day." Are they there now?

In verse 2 of the same chapter, a memorial of twelve stones had been laid to commemorate the place of the passage. From time to time as they journeyed, the Israelites set up these memorials, usually consisting of twelve stones to represent the twelve tribes. The stones that were set up in the bed of the river are not mentioned by Josephus, the Jewish historian, who lived in the first century A.D., but they may have been in existence in the time of Ezra, under whose authority the sacred books were arranged and compiled in the fifth century B.C.

Mrs. B. F. R., Murfreesboro, Tenn. Please explain Mark 4: 12.

The passage means that they were in spiritual darkness, which they had obstinately preferred to the light and healing which Jesus had brought nigh to them. Their eyes, though seeing in a natural sense, were judicially sealed up by their own choice and unable to perceive the things seen and understood by those who, with eyes and ears voluntarily opened, welcomed the Gospel. See the corresponding passage in Matt. 13: 13-17.

A. B., Youngstown, O. The fact of Jonah's personality is satisfactorily established. He lived in or before the reign of Jeroboam II., about 820 B.C. There has been much discussion concerning the book of Jonah, which is both historical and prophetic, and some have regarded portions of it as an allegory. The miraculous character of the book has many times been attacked, but the attitude of orthodox scholarship is that it should stand as a whole as we find it in the canon of Scripture, as a remarkable illustration of the sin of not obeying God. To enter into all the criticisms upon the Book of Jonah would be too large a task for THE MAIL-BAG.

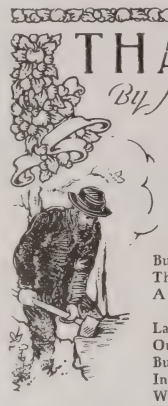
G. P. M., Martinsburg, W. Va. Please give your views of the following: "Then shall the dust return to the earth as it was, and the spirit to the God who gave it." If the body returns to the earth and the spirit to God does the soul sleep until the resurrection? If not, what part of us sleeps? The old writers say they fell asleep and were buried with their fathers. Paul says: "David fell asleep."

The passage to which you refer is one which is variously repeated in Scripture and which pictures the common fate of mortality. See its first expression in Gen. 3: 19. This was after the fall. For the other side of the picture read I. Cor. 15th chapter and especially verses 42 to 50. Also the explanatory passage in verse 22, "As in Adam all die so in Christ shall all be made alive." The ancients, though there were many among them who saw the light and walked in it, were largely in spiritual darkness. The great disclosure of the Gospel by which "life and immortality were brought to light" had yet to come. Consequently, they dwelt much on the sad and unrelieved aspect of human life. Yet even in those comparatively dark days, God had his bright and shining witnesses, his prophets and righteous men and women whose faith and zeal were accounted for righteousness. Paul's exposition in the chapter already mentioned is the most complete treatment of the subject of life, death and resurrection. David "falling on sleep" is simply the old reverent phraseology of the Bible writers. David himself had a foregleam of the other life, when, speaking of the death of his little son, he said, "I shall go to him but he shall not return to me" (II. Sam. 12: 23).

Reader, Rainbow Lake, N. Y. We are repeatedly told in the Bible that there is none perfect; no, not one. They who claim otherwise delude themselves. We may, however, hope to come to a condition in which sin, though it may still assail us, will cease to have dominion over us; but we will not fail to feel its impotent buffetings. This is what Paul meant when he said: "What I would not, that I do," meaning that it was the war of the flesh against the Spirit. If our sins are covered (forgiven) we are no more under dominion to sin, though it may still trouble us. See I. John 1: 8, 9, 10.

NOTICE OF EXPIRATION

Once each month we attach, just under this notice, a subscription blank and notice of expiration for our subscribers whose subscriptions expire at any time during the month. If your copy has this subscription blank attached, please use it to renew at once. If you sent renewal within the last two or three weeks, pay no attention to the blank.



When renewing, indicate on the blank with your remittance whether you are subscribing for any of our new premium books, Women of the Bible, $2; Samantha at Coney Island, $2; or The Pilgrim Ship, $1.85, with your subscription, or a straight year's subscription at $1.50.

Do not forget you can have YOUR OWN RENEWAL AND ONE NEW SUBSCRIPTION FOR $2.25, or, YOUR OWN RENEWAL AND TWO NEW SUBSCRIPTIONS FOR $3.

Send money by postal or express money orders.

THANKSGIVING

By Harry Joseph Heltman

NOVEMBER'S here and almost gone, the wind is blowin' chill,
And I do not have the money, the 'tato-bin to fill;
I'll have to chop my winter fuel, nights, over in the slash,
For coal is high, and other things is usin' up the cash.
The corn-meal's coarse, the butter's scarce, and meat—why, that's a treat;
But we've got to have the shoes to cover up the little feet.
The old cook-stove is goin' fine, and chinks is nailed up. Say!
A fellow must economize on dollar ten a day.

Last year this time, our little Bill, he up and went away:
Our hearts was broken sure—I never will forget that day.
But somehow God, in his great way, gave helpin' for the pain;
In just one week he sent us Nell, to make earth bright again.
Wife hasn't been so well since then; and doctor bills run high,—
It hurts to see her sufferin', and I often have to sigh;
But her smile, it's sweet as angels'; and them seven kids is fine:
Why, sakes alive! that house of ours is brim full of sunshine.

To-morrow is Thanksgivin' Day: I pretty nigh forgot.
I'll set my traps to-night, out where a rabbit can be caught.
Who cares for basted lamb, or duck, or turkey cold, for lunch?
That roasted rabbit'll be a feast for me and all my bunch.
I'll take that dime that I had saved to buy a pair of gloves,
And get some cranberries for sauce, the thing that mother loves:
I'll trade for butter, with that corn I'd saved for later use—
Oh, that will be a sure 'nough spread, not simply an excuse.

Guess I'll draw that money from the bank, it's such a bit,
To cheer somebody else will beat all hollow, savin' it.
Let's see! Now there's old Mother Jones, she's poor as poor can be;
I'll send her flour and just throw in a good half-pound of tea:
And Uncle Jimmy Thomas, he's not had a joy for years,
He's so poor he can't afford the salt to spice his lonely tears.
He ought to have some bacon, and some good wholesome bread.
Well, I must say my prayers, then set my traps and go to bed.

Dear Lord, for me to-morrow is the glad Thanksgiving Day;
I have so much to thank thee for, that cheers me on my way:
Why, just inside my little home there's blessin's by the score,
And in everything I do, or where I go, there are some more.
So help me to be kind to them, less lucky than I be;
The fellow that's in hard luck, Lord, just send him round to me;
I'll help him. Now accept my thanks for my blessin's, for I'm sure,
When I see how much that I possess, it is hard to be poor.

O. F. B., Long Lake, N. Y. Is it right to translate the Hebrew word chodesh, "moon" or "month"?

The Hebrew terms for "month" and "moon" have the same close connection as their equivalents have in our own language. Chodesh (new moon) expresses the idea of a lunation and also the recurrence of a period which begins definitely with the new moon, being derived from chadash (new). Yerach is derived from yareach (simply, the moon) and refers to the orb, irrespective of periodicity.

Mrs. M. E. McD., Clayville, Va. Is it true that the Ark has been found?

There have been claims of such finds at various times, but none have ever been properly substantiated.

B. McD., Saginaw, Mich. If one, after conversion, relapses into sin, need he expect forgiveness?

Yes, if he is sincerely repentant and seeks divine strength to resist his sin and put it away from him. God knows the weakness of the flesh and he will supply us with daily strength if we ask him. Though such a one fall he will not be "utterly cast down," if he turn to the source of strength and support. To sin against knowledge, i. e., to continue in our offense when we know it to be sin, is a dangerous condition, and one only to be remedied by resolutely laying hold of the divine promise to fortify us in temptation and by turning our back on the besetting sin and avoiding contact with it by every means in our power. God does not keep those who do not desire to be kept. If we come to him contrite and earnest and ask forgiveness in Jesus' name it will assuredly be granted.

A reader in Oxford, O., sends us a note which says: "Captain David A. Murphy, managing editor of the Oxford Herald, has in his sanctum seven historic canes, the gifts of friends North and South. He has received, from time to time, over 250 presents, some of rare value. On being promoted to first lieutenant and adjutant in 1865, he was presented with a horse, sword, sash, belt, shoulder straps and spurs. His other gifts include household furniture, gold watches, clocks, rings, chains, lockets, books, sculptures and precious autographs. He thinks good health at seventy years the best gift of all."

Miscellaneous

C. J. H., New Haven, Conn. The word "again" in the creed relative to the resurrection simply emphasizes the fact and does not imply its repetition.

C. A. L., Hammondsville, O. The words are interchangeable and are used in both forms. The Revised Version has "forgive us our sins" (see Luke 11: 1-4).

Inquirer, Gainesville. The three new cardinals chosen by the Church of Rome for the United States are Archbishop Farley of New York and O'Connell of Boston, both native Americans, and Monsignor Falconio, apostolic delegate at Washington, Italian born. Falconio will serve in Rome, the others here.

E. M., Edinburg, Ill. Attorney David Paine, 31 Nassau Street, New York, answers your question as follows: "Under the laws of Illinois, the wife is entitled to her dower in her husband's real property, unless she has been a party to some agreement whereby it was provided that for a sufficient consideration she give up her rights of dower. If such agreement was made before marriage, she is bound by it; if made after marriage, she can elect to stand by the agreement or claim her dower."

NEW YORK, NOVEMBER 29, 1911

THE · CHRISTIAN · HERALD

A WEEKLY ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER FOR THE HOME

A GENERAL VIEW OF THE LAND SHOW IN MADISON SQUARE GARDEN, NEW YORK

UNCLE SAM'S HORN OF PLENTY

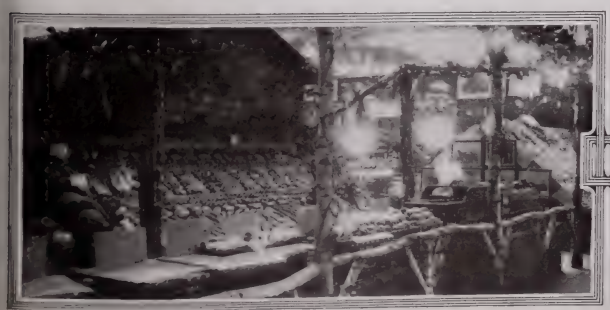
THAT old question, Which is the best part of the United States to live in? was answered very effectively by the New York Land Show, held in Madison Square Garden, New York, during the ten days beginning November 3. The great hall was jammed from cellar to roof with exhibits presided over by vociferous exploiters of various States and sections of the country, and after one had made the round of the main hall, the galleries and the basements, nothing but prejudice would have prompted a decision in favor of any one section. All, for one reason or another, seemed equally good.

"Come with us to the Northwest and help us raise apples like these," urged the representative of one railroad. "You cannot do it in the East."

He indicated row after row of great rosy cheeks, greens, yellows and russets, beauties every one, and every one so big that the hands of a large man could not have closed completely around them.

"That's right!" agreed an exploiter from Virginia. "We don't raise such big fellows in the East, but ours, if smaller, are sweeter and juicier and we can put more pound weight in a crate because the chinks between ours are smaller, and where you pay fifty cents a crate freight to the Eastern market, we pay only nine."

"Ever hear of Kansas?" boasted another booster, who stood under a bunch of cornstalks twelve feet high. "You Easterners don't know what big farming is. Go West! Go West!"



"Why should we," retorted another, "when we've got hundreds of farms right here in New York State going to waste for proper development?"

"New York State!" snorted still another. "Why leave home? Over on Long Island, over the East River, mind you, there's enough undeveloped land to raise crops sufficient to feed every soul in New York City. I tell you it isn't land that's wanted, it's brains."

It would appear that crop raisers with brains are scattered pretty much all over the United States and Canada. S. Wheeler, a farmer from Saskatchewan, won $1,000 in gold for raising best wheat. Another, James Todd of Montana, won a $1,000 silver cup for the best one hundred pounds of wheat grown in the United States during 1911. W. H. Dorin, who sent in the thirty best ears of Indian corn, and won another cup, lives in Virginia, whereas the prize for the best oats went to Messrs. Patton and Hartman of Montana. The barley prize went to R. Eisinger,

Continued on page 1220

A Section of the New York State Exhibit

A Maple Sugar and Syrup Exhibit from New England

The American Pulpit

A SERMON BY

Rev. J. W. Jowett, D.D.*

THE ABIDING COMPANION

TEXT: John 14:18—"I will not leave you orphans (or "desolate"). I come to you."

WHAT was the condition of the men to whom these words were first spoken? Our Lord's words were always relevant to the immediate need; and if we can realize the need of that moment we shall appreciate the riches of the Master's promise.

First of all, the men had been quarreling. They had entered the Upper Room in a state of sullenness. They had contended one with another as to who should be greatest in the kingdom of God. The contention had become very heated, and at last had issued in a sultry silence. When they reached the door of the guest chamber every man refused to be the servant of his brother, and the water and the towel were left untouched. Now quarrelsomeness of this kind, while heating the temper, lowers the moral temperature. But a second thing had happened. The vague purposes of Judas had condensed into actuality, and he had gone out into the night to sell his Lord. The moral temperature was thereby still further reduced. Then an ominous word had been spoken about Peter. The Master had quietly rebuked his somewhat presumptuous confidence, and had predicted an open denial before the sunrise. And last of all, the Master himself had just told them that he was going away. They were shocked and bewildered. They could have said with the psalmist: "All thy waves and thy billows have gone over me," and the proud palace on which they had fondly gazed in their dreams had given place to a rickety tent, and even this was being torn away, and they were being left shelterless, homeless, desolate. And it was just in conditions like these, when the whole of their life was filled with gloom, and coldness, and foreboding, that the Master uttered his comforting words: "I will not leave you orphans." "Ye shall not be without loving guardianship and care. I will not desert you, nor leave you on the bleak hillside, on stormy and wind-swept wastes. I come unto you."

Our Orphanhood

These precise conditions may not be repeated in your life and mine. And yet the mood of the disciples reappears in all our lives, and we have need of the same consolations. We know the bleak hillside. We know the exposed moor when there is no one near, and the envious wind cuts us to the bone. And we all share the disciples' need of a "hiding-place from the wind, and a covert from the tempest." Let us remind one another of some modern conditions in which we may feel the chills of orphanhood.

Let me mention, first of all, the fear of bereavement. The anticipation of bereavement is almost as desolating as the actual bereavement itself. The approach of the thing we fear is very fearful. Death creeps up the street towards our home, and we foresee destruction, and we are heard to say, "I don't know how I shall get through it." I think that the fear of bereavement sometimes casts a deeper gloom than the actual presence itself. There is no artist who paints more sombre pictures than Fear. He uses the darkest colors. There is no relief in his conceptions. He gives us no ray of dawn. There is no companionable presence on the lonely road. There is no lamp at the turning. And so we may be deep in orphanhood before death is at the door. And here is the Evangel—our Lord will come into that black season of fear. "I will not leave you orphans."

The Presence of Bereavement

And then there is the presence of bereavement itself. When death has actually arrived, and gone, and taken our loved one away, there is great need of some strong and consoling presence. There is the season when the last service has been rendered, and there is nothing left but "just to clear up," "to look through his things," "to put things straight!" Everything we touch opens a door into a once-filled but now empty world! And when all this is over we have to face the road again! That is a desolating experience, and it is just here that our Master comes with his friendship. "I will not leave you orphans."

And then there is the orphanhood that comes from the contemplation of defeat. This kind makes the soul feel very lonely and desolate. We are face to face with some big task, and we fear we have not the requisite strength. "Defeat stares us in the face!" It is easy to face a big thing when there are comrades by our side, and bands are playing, and drums are beating, and victory is in the air. But it is when we are alone, and the enemy straddles across the entire way, and there is no cheering band, when we seem to move to sure disaster, it is then we want the mystic presence of the companionable God.

When Defeat Comes

And then there is actual defeat itself. We have done our best and yet we have failed. And still worse, we slipped into some pitiable mistake, and because of the slip we have lost the goal. And we cannot get back and do it over again! Cold depression settles upon us, the ways of life are filled with the moanings of men and women who would like to retrace their steps and do things over again. And the way is blocked! Well, just there, in that heavy, oppressive darkness, the friendly Christ will come. "I will not leave you orphans."

And lastly I will mention the desolation which frequently follows the season of festival. Who does not know the feeling of gap there is in the house when the bride has gone? Who does not know the feeling of staleness when we turn back to the old road after some season of rare and radiant joy? Perhaps we have had a precious hour with some rarely expected friend; or perhaps we have had a momentary taste of rare success. And then we have to go back again to the gray road, and the drab work, and the lonely pilgrimage. Yes, that is often a time of desolation, and our Great Companion knows it.

These are only a few examples of many gloomy seasons which enshroud and chill the souls of men. Let us now turn more intimately to the promise of the Master. "I will come to you." It is very beautiful. The Revised Version drops the future tense and renders it as a continuous presence, "I come to you." It is a perpetual coming, a coming that never ends. Let us mark the significance and beauty of the words.

The Ever New Arrival

We have all experienced the supreme delights of a home-coming. A child has returned from school for holidays. The son or daughter has come back from the work in the distant city, or a parent is home again from much journeying in far-off lands. And what joy there is in it all, and what exuberance of spirit, and what thanksgiving! But in one and all of them the freshness wears away. We get accustomed to their presence and the gracious surprise passes away. I was in London when Lord Roberts was welcomed home from South Africa. How all London turned out to share the rapturous reception! A few weeks later I saw Lord Roberts in the Strand walking unheeded through the crowded way. The delight of the home-coming had spent itself, and we were now accustomed to his presence.

But the coming of the Master is to be like an ever-fresh arrival. He wants us so to experience his presence that it shall be as though we had the feast of his coming every moment. He wants every new emergency to be the occasion of a fresh surprise of grace. He wants every blessing to be as new to us as though we had never been blessed before. It is his will that we should be always finding him, always making a new discovery. And therefore it is the mind of the Master that we should retain certain things through all our days.

First, he wants us to keep the first sense of sweetness. It ought to be impossible for us to s

> Where is the blessedness I knew
> When first I saw the Lord?

He wants the early blessedness to remain with us all its strength and winsomeness. He wants us retain the first surprise and to relish his prese every hour.

The Joy of "First Love"

And secondly, he wants us to retain our first se of wonder. One can feel the wonder of the apos Paul in every one of his letters. Redeeming gr never became a commonplace. The Evangel ne became such a customary condition that he cea to hear its music. When he is following an abstr argument the glorious strains of eternal love wa his soul anew, and the argument breaks into a d ology—"Oh, the depth of the riches!" Yes, it is t Lord's will that we should wonder every time look upon his face.

And thirdly, it is our Lord's desire that we shou retain our "first love." He wants it to be as thou we were always "falling in love" with him. The is nothing so pains him as to see the blight of t customary upon our souls, and to see our affectio wither before it. "I have something against th that thou hast lost thy first love." He would have keep it always, like lovers who live their wedded li in a courtship that never loses its sweetness and i song.

And in all these ceaseless comings what will t Master do? What is to be the outcome of the perpetual visits? "Because I live, ye shall li also." That is to be the outcome. We are not be vanquished by any circumstances, howev gloomy or deadly they may be. Nothing is to pro fatal to our higher life. We are to be deliver from spiritual death. Whatever our circumstanc may be, however hard, oppressive, or lonely, we a not to be buried beneath them, and our spiritu powers are not to be suffocated or destroyed. W may be "in the world, yet not of it." His presen will surround us by invincible protectives, and ou security is to be complete.

And then his perpetual coming will deliver u from moral death. I only distinguish this kind death from spiritual death for the sake of ment clearness. It is perfectly true that if we are spiri ually alive we shall be morally quick and vigilan "Because I live" with you ye shall be morally i vulnerable. Dark circumstances shall not make u bitter, or careless, or resentful. Failures shall n make us vicious; successes shall not make us prou The immoral contagion which is about us shall n come nigh our tent. We shall be shielded from ev compromise and subterfuge and duplicity. We sha be protected against the councils of the ungodly, an kept from the way of sinners, and saved from th seat of the scornful.

The Assurance of Victory

And lastly, his perpetual coming will deliver u from physical death. We shall share his victor over the grave. We shall "not be holden of it. Death shall only get a worn-out robe. I like thos words of Martin Luther which he addresses to prou Death himself: "Knowest thou not that thou dids devour the Lord Christ, but wast obliged to give hi back, and wast devoured of him? So thou mus leave me undevoured because I abide in him, an live and suffer for his name's sake. Men may hun me out of the world; that I care not for; but I shal not on that account abide in death. I shall live wit my Lord Jesus Christ."

And the guarantee and the assurance for all thi promise is this, "because I live." If we are th Lord's by faith, then between us and the Lord ther is a vital, indestructible relationship, and while h lives we cannot die.

*Pastor, Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church, New York.

FULFILMENT

THE maiden prayed: "God make me beautiful,
Endow me with such fairness that the world
Shall see and own me fair. Oh, grant me power
As great as Egypt's Queen, that men, all men,
Shall call me beautiful beyond compare."

The woman prayed: "God give me power of song;
A voice to thrill and hold the hearts of men,
And make them subjects—slaves of each caprice;
Or fires that rage within—I'd find a vent
In song—Oh, grant me, God, the power of song."

And God seemed not to hear; but gave her Life
To live. To maid and woman, sorrows fell
That filled each day and night with pain, until
Of all was left her but a woman's soul,
That yet had learned its lesson well; then came
A beauty in her face unknown, undreamed.

So great her power she feared its wrong appliance.
And prayed each day for light and strength.
And music stole into her voice—deep notes
That thrilled men's lives and stirred weak souls to act;
And then her power was great beyond compare.
Thus God inscrutable doth answer prayer.

ESTHER J. RUSKAY.

Mr. Carnegie's Latest Gift

ON NOVEMBER 10 Mr. Andrew Carnegie at a meeting held in his home on Fifth Avenue, New York, formally turned over $25,000,000 to the Carnegie Corporation of New York, which was organized under a charter granted by the State legislature to promote the advancement and diffusion of knowledge and understanding among the people of the United States. The new corporation is intended to carry on the work of founding libraries, aiding technical schools and institutions of higher learning, scientific research, useful publications, hero funds and such other work as Mr. Carnegie has been doing individually. Mr. Carnegie, who is still in excellent health, suggested this corporation more than a year ago, in order that he might be relieved of some of the responsibilities which his charitable work entailed. He is now easily the leading individual philanthropist of the world. Among his most recent gifts were $10,000,000 for International Peace Endowment, and the extensions of his Hero Fund to France, Germany and Norway. His various donations for philanthropy and education are as follows:

Hero funds (United States, France, Germany, Norway)	$9,000,000
Carnegie teaching fund	20,000,000
Carnegie Institute at Washington	22,000,000
Colleges in United States and Canada	20,000,000
Colleges in England	7,000,000
Trust for Scottish universities	10,000,000
Dunfermline trust	5,000,000
Carnegie Institute of Pittsburg	22,000,000
Relief fund for steel workers	4,000,000
Bureau of American Republics	1,500,000
Peace Temple at The Hague	10,000,000
Libraries	56,000,000
International Peace Endowment	10,000,000
Corporation of "Carnegie Corporation"	25,000,000
Total	$215,500,000

A Prayer in Old Age

O MOST merciful God, cast me not off in the time of old age; forsake me not if my strength faileth. May my hoary head be found in righteousness. Preserve my mind from dotage and imbecility, and my body from protracted disease and excruciating pain. Deliver me from despondency in my declining years, and enable me to bear with patience whatever may be thy holy will. I humbly ask that my reason may be continued to the last; and that I may be so comforted and supported that I may leave my testimony in favor of the reality of religion, and of thy faithfulness in fulfilling thy gracious promises. And when my spirit leaves this clay tenement, Lord Jesus, receive it. Send some of the blessed angels to convey my inexperienced soul to the mansions which thy love has prepared; and oh, may I have an abundant entrance ministered unto me into the kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. Amen. (Psalm 71: 9, 18, and 73: 23-26.)

[This prayer was used by the Rev. Dr. Archibald Alexander, of Princeton, N. J., daily during the last year of his life. It is sent to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD by Rev. C. A. Votey, of Detroit, Mich.]

Our Readers and Ourselves

Dear Friends:

YOUR fellowship, your hearty sympathy and your generous cooperation have been very pleasant to us—and very helpful—during the past year. It has seemed that the world-wide Christian Herald Family has drawn even closer together than heretofore in its unity and enthusiasm of purpose and its splendid accomplishments in 1911.

What is The Christian Herald, after all? Certainly it is far more than a weekly periodical. We have worked hard to make it the very best, most loved and most helpful home paper in the world. Perhaps our earnest efforts have brought it nearer to that high place. Do you think so? Let us sum up briefly: It has to-day a larger circulation than ever before. Its field of work and influence is wider. Its power for good has been multiplied. It is giving you 400 columns more of reading matter than heretofore. The strongest, ablest, most commanding sermonic department of any weekly in the world is right here in your paper every week. You have here the very flower of pulpit eloquence and spiritual exposition, representing all Protestant denominations. Important illustrated articles set forth each week the great world-movements of progress and uplift. Special articles of inspiration, comfort, instruction and entertainment are never lacking. Stories, also, have their proper place, and next year's program is exceedingly attractive in this department.

All these are important in making The Christian Herald so necessary in your homes, even if there were not a far more vital reason. We have greatly enjoyed the work of making your home paper. It is a delightful task to prepare such a paper from week to week and to send it out, warm with love, and eager to carry blessing to so great a family every Wednesday. But that is n't all. It is far more, as we said, than just a weekly periodical.

What is it, then? It is a vital part of yourself, of your own life. Also, it is part of our personality and life, as its editors and publishers. First of all, and most of all, however, The Christian Herald is you!

Did you ever think how every man and every woman lives only by expressing himself or herself in some outward form? Every good thought finds its value to the world only in its definite outward expression, and every good act is the tangible expression in the world of a good thought. Your favorite journal is the definite, tangible, glorious expression of your thought. Without you, its faithful, warm-hearted and generous subscribers, The Christian Herald would not be.

We have loved and labored, too; but without you, our labor would have been in vain. You have cheered us and inspired us in the upbuilding of our home paper. You have "provoked us to every good word and work," and your splendid cooperation has sent these good words and works on their errands of blessing around the world.

You are the one great necessity in making The Christian Herald the great power for good it has been and now is in the world. It is you who have made its abounding charities during 1911 extraordinarily successful. Without you, no great shiploads of food would have steamed into the ports of famine-stricken China to give free bread to the starving. Without you, this journal would never have been able to carry helpfulness and saving to the human derelicts of the Bowery Mission. Without you, the beautiful Children's Paradise at Mont-Lawn would not have echoed with the joyous laughter and the sweet songs of thousands of children from the hot, steaming slums of the city. All through the list of noble works for the blessing of mankind "In His Name," the paper itself has been you—the expression of your thought and your love. We have guided, that is all.

We look forward with eagerness and confidence to the coming year for the continuance of our fellowship. We hope our Family Circle will not be broken by a single departure. We earnestly want every member to answer to the roll-call for 1912. Many others will join us, but we cannot say good-by to any who are now with us.

Of course, there is another side to our relationship, and we hope you feel that it is an important side for you. While you have loyally helped this journal to carry blessings into many thousands of needy homes throughout the world, has it, in return, brought a blessing into your home—into your life? Has it brought you inspiration, information, cheer, pleasure? Have its weekly visits meant anything of helpfulness or joy to you or to some one near you? Has it been a satisfaction to you to join with the thousands of other subscribers and to do your part in bringing heaven a little nearer to the earth, or earth a little nearer to heaven by means of our united efforts and benevolences?

Surely, yes! Don't you wish there were a million of us, working together in the same way? Don't you hope, with us, that not one of the present subscribers will drop away? After all, is n't this kind of work the most worth-while and joyous there is this side of heaven? Won't you reach out your hand now, through the mail, and just grip ours in a pledge of continued fellowship and work through The Christian Herald for 1912? We are counting on you.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

NEVER DOUBT

I MUST never doubt my Saviour,
Or his tender care for me;
I must know I have his favor,
Though his face I may not see.
To be anxious is to doubt him,
To be sad is unbelief;
Life is mockery without him,
Disappointment, shame and grief.

No good thing the Lord withholdeth
From the humble, upright heart;
Changeless peace his own enfoldeth—
Those who choose "the better part."
Let me live beneath the shining
Of the Sun of Righteousness,
Evermore the love divining
Of the Lord who lives to bless.

Vineland, N. J. MRS. FRANK A. BREEK.

How He "Made the Grade"

IN NORMAN DUNCAN'S new book, The Measure of a Man, there is a touching story of the passing of a rough but sterling character of the North woods. John Fairmeadow, the pastor of the woodsmen, visits the hospital where Long Jock McKenzie lies dying. He tells the sick man that the end is near.

"Near the landing, parson?" Long Jock asked, with a smile.

Fairmeadow nodded.

"Nearing the last landing," the lumber-jack repeated.

"Almost there, Jock."

The lumber-jack pondered. "I've a heavy load, parson," said he, presently. "I've a heavy load," he sighed.

Long Jock was a four-horse teamster, used to hauling logs from the woods to the landing at the lake. For years he had humored these great loads over the logging-roads—easing them on the down grades, calling to his horses on the up grades. And it seemed, now, that he fancied the last grade to be an insuperable one.

"Parson," he asked, "do you think I can make the grade?"

"With help, Jock."

McKenzie said nothing for a moment. Then he looked up. "You mean," said he, "that I need another team of leaders?"

Fairmeadow nodded.

"Another team of leaders," the lumber-jack repeated.

"The Great Leader, Jock."

"Oh, I know what you mean," said McKenzie. "You mean that I need the help of Jesus Christ."

Again Fairmeadow nodded.

"To make this grade," McKenzie added.

No need to tell what Fairmeadow said then to the Scotch teamster in his last extremity—what he repeated, according to his faith, about repentance and belief and the infinite love of God. Long Jock McKenzie had heard it all before—long before, at home, being Scottish born—and had not utterly forgotten, prodigal though he was. It was all recalled to him, now, by a man whose life and love and uplifted heart were well known to him — by John Fairmeadow, a minister of the old school.

"Pray for me," said he, like a child.

Long Jock McKenzie died that night. It was a gentle passing. He had said never a word in the long interval; but just before his last breath was drawn—while Fairmeadow still held his hand—he opened his eyes, looked up, and sighed for the minister to bend near.

Fairmeadow leaned close.

McKenzie whispered:

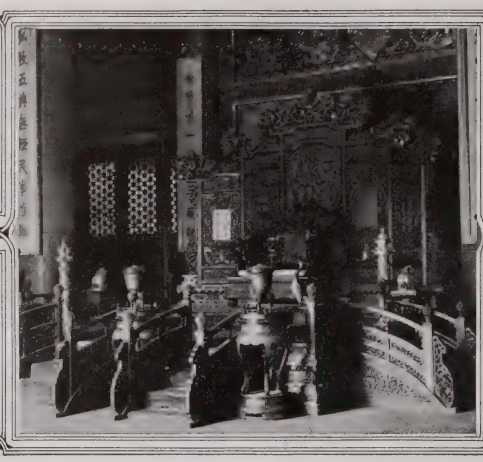
"Tell the boys—I made the grade!" And he passed over.

Anvil Sparks

..EVEN the smallest fault is a fault just the same.

..HE THAT hath lost his faith hath little else to lose.

..YOU cannot share your joy too much, nor your grief too little.



..DON'T write down your grievances; the sooner they are forgotten the happier you will be.

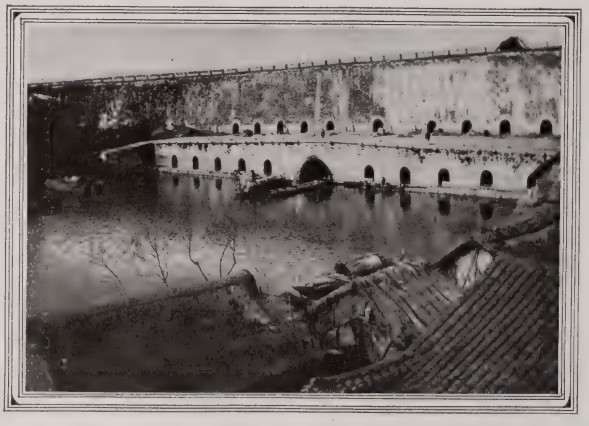
..WHEN you make a blunder, step ahead of it; and thus you will make it an occasion for advancement.

THE PASSING OF THE MANCHUS

A Manchu Lady of High Rank

Copyright by Underwood & Underwood

The Chinese Imperial Throne



A Manchu Lady of the Court at Peking

THE doom of the Manchu dynasty that has ruled China for two hundred and fifty years is sealed. Their dragon flag that through all the days of Europe's modern history has been the nation's symbol has gone down in the swirl of blood and fire of the revolution. The rising sun of a new era has appeared in the Flowery Kingdom and taken its place on the white flag of the revolutionary party. For years we have talked of the awakening of China. For years the sleeper has stirred and muttered in his sleep, but now is the awakening, and the written history of the world contains nothing to parallel its violence. The French Revolution was but a petty upheaval in comparison, for to-day almost every man in one of the world's largest countries, and undoubtedly the world's most densely populated country, is arrayed upon one side or the other in this momentous struggle.

It was in the tenth century that the people to whom the name "Manchu" is now given made their first appearance in Chinese history. They were wandering tribes of mixed Tartar and Mongolian descent and their first settled habitation was in the northwestern provinces, where by conquest they established the Leaou or Iron Dynasty. The next three hundred years were filled with fighting and aggression and at the end of that time the real ancestor of the present imperial family became the leader of his people, giving to them the name Manchu. In 1644 the Ta-Ming or Great Bright Dynasty, which was purely Chinese, was overthrown by the Manchus, who gave to their reigning family the name Ta-Tsing, or Great Pure.

For years there has been a steadily growing revolutionary feeling in China, and the hatred of the conquered Chinese for their Manchu rulers has never been allowed to die out. The present revolution is the climax of all these years of discontent. That it was not undertaken without thought for the future is plainly shown by the ease with which the successful insurgents have taken charge and established effective temporary governments in the cities they have captured. That they should have turned out in a single day the draft of an elaborate and effective constitution is evidence that careful preparation has been made for the success that has seemed so sudden and surprising to our foreign eyes. The real minds of China are behind this great revolution. Perhaps nowhere else on earth is there such an aristocracy of education and ability. We do not fully realize the immense part played by the students in the life of that country. Outside the Manchu dynasty they are the accepted aristocracy. A man's success as a student is a criterion for all his life. Upon it depend all chances of civil or military employment, social rank and political authority, and very largely his chances of wealth. China is now at the mercy of her students, for it is undoubtedly true that there is no man of the slightest weight or influence in public affairs, whether he be revolutionist or imperialist, who has not been in his youth a patient and successful student.

The revolution has become entirely a struggle of the Chinese against the Manchus. There is at the present time only one important Chinese in the ranks of the imperialistic party. He is Yuan Shi Kai, "the strong man of China," who, though he left Peking three years ago as a political exile, has now been recalled to make a final attempt to save the ruling house from destruction. He alone is able to wield influence with the revolutionary leaders. He seems to stand between the two parties, as it is believed that he is exerting his influence to induce the emperor to abdicate and thus bring the struggle to a close. Despite the fact that the revolutionists now control 14 provinces and that most of the great cities of commerce with whose names we are familiar are in their hands, the struggle may still be a long one. The coming of winter will undoubtedly bring to an end the movements of large bodies of troops, and unless a settlement is promptly made or foreign intervention takes place we may expect to hear of desultory and continued fighting throughout the winter months.

A Part of the City Wall of Nanking, the Scene of a Great Massacre

The city of Hankow has been the scene of a conflict that has extended over several weeks. It was first in the hands of the revolutionists, only to be recaptured by the imperialists, who burned a large section of the native city. Nanking, one of China's three ancient capitals, has been the scene of one of the most atrocious butcheries that history has ever had to record. On the night of November 10, the sun set upon a scene of fire, rapine, desolation and slaughter such as the world has seldom seen. Twelve thousand Manchu soldiers possessed the city and the Chinese were fleeing before them, terror-stricken and destitute. It had been the intention of the revolutionists to make a second concerted attack upon the Manchu stronghold, but delay was caused by the non-arrival of ammunition which was expected from Shanghai. The Manchus took advantage of the situation and sacked and burned a great part of the city, killing indiscriminately men, women and children who had anything white about their persons. They scoured the narrow streets, and any Chinese of modern tendencies who had abandoned his queue was immediately beheaded. The order appeared to be that any one wearing anything white, which suggested the badge of the reformers, was to be killed. A white pocket handkerchief marked its possessor for death. White shoes, worn by the Chinese as a sign of mourning, doomed the wearer. One correspondent cabled: "The horror of the massacre cannot be described. Fully a thousand lie dead to-night in this city of desolation. Fires started everywhere and a large section of the native city was burned. To-night the Manchus, driven to bay, cornered and glutted with blood, having despoiled the goods of 200,000 inhabitants, watch the flaming city from the heights of Purple Mountain and await the morrow."

The news of the massacre aroused public sentiment in Shaighai to a white heat and undoubtedly added greatly to the force of the revolutionists in the South. The revolutionary leaders state that each day is strengthening their organization and that it is now only a matter of a few days when every province will be separately organized and ready to send delegates to a national convention which shall nominate a president. Dr. Wu Ting Fang, the former Chinese ambassador to the United States, has declared for the revolution, and is urging upon foreign governments the recognition of the republicans as belligerents. Thirteen vessels of the imperial fleet which arrived at Shanghai just after the great massacre at Nanking hoisted the white flag of the revolution, declaring themseives no longer under the control of the imperial government. Yuan Shi Kai, who was finally induced to become premier of the country under a constitutional monarchy, is now the centre of all interest. He is the last prop of the throne and he alone can save the imperial family. In spite of all the efforts which are being made by the imperialists and the reformers, the throne continues to receive daily memorials and protestations from the provincial assemblies declaring their convictions in favor of a republican government with Yuan Shi Kai as president, or announcing their independence and severing their connections with the central government. There seems but small doubt that the revolution is to be successful whether it culminates in the establishment of a republican government or of a constitutional monarchy. The day of the Manchus is done as an autocratic power in China and the great problem that faces the country is the reconciliation of the widely separated provinces and widely diverse ideas of the various revolutionary leaders.

THE NATION'S NEW TARIFF BOARD

THE failure of the reciprocity agreement to receive ratification by the Canadian people has brought up for reconsideration at Washington a number of tariff questions. The President has shown his earnestness for tariff reform and is making further attempts to bring about a reduction of the gross inequalities which exist in the present tariff schedules. In this matter of tariff reform the lines of political demarkation have been to a great extent obliterated by the fusion of sections of the two parties to bring about the desired end. Mr. Taft has received support not only from the Republican but from the Democratic side of the house.

Copyrighted by Harris & Ewing

The New Tariff Board in Session in Washington Last Month

From left to right the members are Thomas W. Page, Alvin H. Sanders, Henry C. Emery, James B. Reynolds, William M. Howard

In October the newly appointed Tariff Board held its sessions in Washington. Of course neither the existence nor personnel of the board met with universal approbation, and it is not a surprise that a number of criticisms were made. During his stop in St. Louis, the President replied to these criticisms and commented upon the qualifications of the members of the board. Mr. Taft agreed with the critics of the board in granting the impossibility of securing as its members a group of men, all of whom should have expert knowledge upon the subjects of the tariff. The President believes that even if it were possible to obtain such men the advantage of having them on the board would be questionable. It appears to him that it is better to secure a board like that which he has recently appointed, composed of men who are in the habit of making investigations, analyzing evidence, and calculating costs.

It was with this result in view that the President appointed to the chairmanship of the present tariff board Professor Henry C. Emery, a trained economist. Professor Emery's associates on the board are Mr. Alvin Sanders, for many years editor of the Breeders' Gazette; Hon. James B. Reynolds, for four years an assistant secretary of the Treasury, in charge of the customs under President Roosevelt; Professor Thomas W. Page, of the University of Virginia, an economist of widely recognized ability, and former Congressman William M. Howard of Georgia. Though Mr. Taft is convinced that the present board is as impartial and independent as any such body can be, he still advocates the establishment by law of a permanent tariff commission which shall be appointed by the President, the appointments to be confirmed by the Senate.

IN THE LAND OF THE INCAS

IT IS pretty generally recognized in South America that commercial relations between the United States and the Southern republics have not kept pace with the growth of friendship and mutual confidence. Secretary Root's visit to South America tended to dispel doubts and gain confidence. During recent years, every day sees an increasing number of tourists and men on scientific research from the United States on their way to different parts of Peru and Bolivia.

A Peruvian Bibleman

As Peru becomes better known it will undoubtedly become a very popular country for those who wish to escape the severe colds of the northern winters. Amongst all the varied lands and scenes comprising the vast South American continent, there is none more richly endowed by nature, none whose history is more fascinating. Here nature appears on a grand scale. It was here that the Incas developed their great empire, spreading their influence and civilization as far north as Colombia and as far south as the borders of the Argentine and Chile. To-day, the dusky sons of the Incas are found in villages and hamlets, towns and cities on the great highlands of the Andes, isolated in thought, feeling and language. The great complaint, unfortunately, is that little definite information as to transit and centres of interest can be obtained. There is also a certain dread of yellow fever from infested ports, such as Guayaquil, Ecuador, where this dreaded disease seems to be endemic. But the direct boats from Panama for Peru do not touch at Ecuatorian ports at all.

The coast of Peru is washed by the blue waters of the Pacific Ocean. Callao and Mollendo are the two ports from which railroads lead over the high Andes. Callao is some 1,500 miles south of Panama, from which city weekly steamers run, occupying six days in transit and offering every comfort that a traveler could reasonably expect. Peru is a land of contrasts—the everlasting snows that crown the Andes, the sun-scorched deserts of the Pacific coast and the dense impenetrable forest region of the interior on the headwaters of the Amazon—a land of great mountains and deep valleys; a country of direst poverty, and yet one of the richest of all countries in its untapped mineral wealth.

Here the ancient and the modern blend—the Indian with his flock of llamas on the lonely heights of the Andes, the caballero mounted on his prancing steed, and the electric railway, the latest mode of rapid transit. The unwashed Indian in his rough home-spun poncho, the proud don of Spanish blood, dressed in the excess of fashion, the low-caste Cholo and the Chinaman and the modern European all mingle in the crowded thoroughfares of Lima.

Lima, with its fine old Spanish churches, its historic buildings, quaint scenes and balmy breezes, is a most fascinating city. Its hotels offer every comfort, and are not surpassed on the South Pacific slope. From it trains ascend the Oroya Railroad, the world's highest road, three times a week, calling at Chosica, a lovely mountain resort; Matucana, nestling among the high mountains; the Galera Tunnel, 15,665 feet above the level of the sea; Tamboraque, Casapalca and Rio Blanco, all important mining centres. From Oroya, the traveler takes train connections for the famous copper mines of Cerro de Pasco and for the Andean towns of Huancayo and Jauja, or mules for Tarma and the headwaters of the Amazon, for the wild forest and rubber regions.

The famous city of Arequipa, nestling at the foot of the peak of Misti, the wonderful Lake of Titicaca, an inland sea embosomed among the Andes, 12,500 feet high, and the historic city of Cuzco, the Athens of the Incas, are all reached from the port of Mollendo. From the archæologist's viewpoint, Cuzco is a city without an equal in Latin America. Here the traveler stumbles across ruins at every street corner—cyclopean fortresses, temples, palaces, monuments of an unwritten history and of a people whose sun has long since set in gloom. There is no finer stone-cutting anywhere in the world than some of the stone work of the Temple of the Sun and other old buildings.

But what is the place of the Bible evangelist in a land which illustrates so much that is found in Bible lands! When the Seventy received their divine commission they were sent out with word: "I have given you power . . . over the power of the enemy." Each colporteur now traveling in South America can tell how truly that has been shown in his daily tramp with the Bible. They are sent out now as then, each in his own degree to be a living force for the good of his fellow-man, putting into his hand the Book of books, while pointing with the index finger of his own life the truth of that Word which may become to his hearer a living force, the great central force of his being.

South America needs the Bible and the Personality to win and draw men to better things. The infinite and enlightening truth of Christ alone can break down the impregnable barricade of indifference, unbelief and superstition. His life and his death are the one inspiring theme of all Bible work and the one power to raise men to a higher level of moral and spiritual life.

With this in mind the Bible colporteur not only seeks to scatter God's Word broadcast over the land, but to bury it deep in the heart of the people of this continent, that, as deep unseen veins of gold traverse the foundations of South America's great Andean mountain chains, so these veins of untold love and grace may become the source of moral wealth and spiritual blessing to its peoples. Thousands can testify that the Word of God has proved its soul-saving power, and how in many a hovel and humble peasant's home men's faces and characters have been beautified by the reflection of the living Christ in his Gospel.

A. R. STARK.

Callao, South America.

A Herd of Llamas at a Mountain Station in the Peruvian Andes

OUR EDITORIAL FORUM

OTTO KOENIG, President GEO. H. SANDISON, Managing Editor THEODORE WATERS, Secretary

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly by "The Christian Herald," at the Bible House, Fourth Avenue, 8th and 9th Sts., New York City. The officers are: Otto Koenig, President and Treasurer, Bible House, N.Y.City; Geo. H. Sandison, Vice-President, Bible House, N. Y. City; Theodore Waters, Secretary, Bible House, N. Y. City.

Subscription Price, $1.50 a year, in advance.
Remittances should always be made in the safest manner available to the remitter. Register cash remittances.
Foreign Postage.—For each copy to be mailed outside the United States, Canada, and Mexico, add one dollar a year.

Change of Date.—It takes at least two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.
Expiration of Subscription.—The date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription ends.
Change of Address.—It requires three weeks' time to make the change. Give both old and new address.

Subscriptions may commence with any issue.
Letters should be addressed, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

Entered at Post Office, New York, as Second-class Matter
Entered as Second-class Matter at the Post Office Department, Ottawa

A Nation Getting Out of Pawn

AFTER the thing itself has been accomplished, the real facts concerning the causes of the revolution in China are now beginning to come out. Like our own revolution, it was directed against unjust and oppressive taxation. It began with the borrowing of $50,000,000 by the imperial government for Manchurian development, and an additional $50,000,000 for railroads. For repayment the entire revenues of three provinces were pledged. Before this, the people had a railway loan of $20,000,000, of which they had repaid $8,000,000. This they did with much hardship and pinching, and they knew the money was passing through the hands of greedy middlemen and tax collectors, who were bleeding them abominably. When they learned that on top of this they were to pay $100,000,000 more and that practically the whole empire was mortgaged in the interest of this huge exploitation scheme, all their other grievances were remembered and they protested to the government. Their appeals against being taxed to death were unheeded. Anti-loan societies were formed everywhere, taxes were kept back, and formal protest was succeeded by widespread plotting, rioting and open rebellion. One of the missionaries likens it to the English peasants' revolt under Wat Tyler. On September 8 the first blow fell at Chengtu in Szechuen, and the flame of revolt soon spread to other parts of the empire, ultimately causing the downfall of the oppressive reigning dynasty. A few days or weeks may see China a republic or a divided empire, but with a constitutional government. Her day of despotism has probably passed away forever.

A Plea for the Homeless

FOR many years past, the Bowery Mission has made a special effort to carry cheer and comfort to the hearts of the homeless and unemployed men and boys at Thanksgiving time. These poor fellows —and they are counted by the thousand—are for the most part deserving but unfortunate, and ill-success in finding work has made very many of them wanderers of the streets. Sleeping in a cheap lodging-house, or, where that poor shelter fails, huddling in some stairway or stable, they are indeed to be pitied. They are those who swell the ranks of the "Bread Line," and to whom a cup of hot coffee, a big bread roll and a warm place to sit in for an hour or two, seem like a gift dropped straight from the hands of a kind Providence.

This year, the Bowery Mission is again planning to give a Thanksgiving meal to as many of these poor fellows as possible. Once again, as on former occasions, it cordially invites the co-operation of the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD in this worthy benevolence. At this season, when in every home in our land, we gather around us our friends and dear ones to feast and rejoice with us and to thank the bountiful Father of all for his manifold blessings, we cannot forget the poor, the homeless, the wanderers, who are seeking the shelter and the hospitality of the old Bowery Mission.

This has been the most active year in the Mission's history. Its Free Labor Bureau has found nearly 4,000 men employment; its Industrial Settlement in the Bronx furnishes work for many others; its nightly meetings have been the means, under God, of winning many wayward men and boys to better lives, and of helping and strengthening them by kind word and deed.

Now the season is here when material help must be given to those who need it sorely. The Bread Line opens at Thanksgiving, and will be continued till Easter. On Thanksgiving morning at one o'clock the thousand homeless and famished ones who form the "Bread Line" will be served with rolls and coffee. At nine A.M. two hundred baskets, each holding a substantial meal of fowls, vegetables, bread, tea and coffee, will be distributed under the personal supervision of Superintendent Hallimond among two hundred poverty-stricken tenement houses. At seven P.M. twelve hundred dinners will be given to homeless men and lads in the Mission building.

We ask the CHRISTIAN HERALD Family Circle to help us in making this a memorable occasion. These are our brothers in misfortune. The Master himself has urged us to go out into the highways and byways and bring in the wanderers to the feast. You can, by your gifts and your prayers, help us to spread a table for them. You may wish to send a kindly message with your gift, and if so, every such message will be laid before that strange gathering and heartily and gratefully welcomed. There will be many a "wandering boy" there; many a mother's son, whose venture out into the big world has had a sorrowful issue, and has left him, like the prodigal in the parable, full of regretful memories of the abundance at the old home, of which he thought so little. You may know of some such wandering boy. There are thousands of them in New York and many of them will be there at the Mission table that evening, when the dear old home songs and hymns are sung and the old memories reawakened.

Send your gift, and your message with it, and send it early, so that you may have a share in this Christ-like benevolence. All contributions for the Bread Line and Thanksgiving Dinner to the Homeless should be addressed to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York. Every gift will be acknowledged and will bring a double blessing, both now and hereafter.

Mr. Carnegie and Dead Books

ANYONE walking around the reservoir in Central Park, New York, these bracing November mornings, may encounter a little elderly gentleman, spry and quick in his movements and with a merry twinkle in his eye that betokens good health and physical enjoyment. His hatbrim surmounts a cheery face, which has a snowy beard that is always neatly trimmed. He walks with a light, springy gait and shows the agility of one twenty years his junior. This is Mr. Andrew Carnegie, the educational philanthropist and multi-millionaire, who has just given $25,000,000 to endow another corporation for "the promotion and advancement of knowledge and understanding among the people of the United States, by aiding educational schools, libraries, scientific research and useful publications." The old ironmaster's latest gift brings the grand total of his benevolences for education here and abroad to $215,000,000. Just how much of this huge benefaction may be devoted to books and their housing may be left to conjecture. We are rapidly becoming rich in books, if not in literature. The library that rests its fame on a ponderous aggregation of good, bad and indifferent volumes, would render better public service were its shelves cleared of one-half their contents every twelve months. Mr. Carnegie himself, while expressing a reverence for books in general, has remarked with a touch of quiet humor that there are many volumes now in library use that should be consigned to the fire! Most people will agree with him. "Of the making of many books," says the old Bible, "there is no end." An authority has stated that there are 75,000,000 books in this country at the present time, most of which are out of date and practically useless. What large proportion of this literary junk is on the library shelves? They are not only useless but a hindrance to education, and why they are kept there is a mystery. One of the leading literary clubs in London lately sent eight hundred out-of-date volumes to the pulp mills. One shudders to think of the possibilities of a collection of books, scattered over many centres, and representing in value even a fraction of the immense bequests given by Mr. Carnegie, when we remember that a large percentage of them becomes useless within a very few years after publication. There is nothing more dead than an obsolete book, which represents ideas, principles and conclusions that have grown antiquated, or have been disproved and exploded. Edmund Gosse, contemplating the possibilities of our public libraries becoming cemeteries of dead books, suggested as a preventive measure that even the half-dead ones should be buried along with the totally defunct.

The Strike of the "White Wings"

SHORT-SIGHTED and ill-advised, the strike of the street-cleaning teamsters in New York is now nearly ended. They demanded a winter cessation of night work, although it would be a grievous infliction on the population to have such work done in the daytime. With equal reason, the railroad men, bakers, policemen, printers, post-office clerks and men of a hundred other vocations might make a similar demand. Nobody really loves night labor, but if there is one kind of work above all others that should be done while the community sleeps, it is the scavengering of a great city. Now, the municipality of New York is out $250,000 by the strike, the men lose their wages since the walk-out began, and every striker who has been a disturber of the peace, or has participated in the lawless scenes of the last two weeks, permanently forfeits all chances of reinstatement. Wiser counsels on the part of the strike leaders would have avoided a precipitate course, which makes the winter outlook a gloomy one for the men. Most of them would gladly have opposed a strike, but they were swept along in the current with the rest. Meanwhile, the littered condition of the streets has been a disgrace to New York and an open invitation to pestilence. A great municipality, which spends hundreds of millions in local administration yearly, ought to be better prepared for such an emergency.

General Notes

—GREATER LONDON, according to statistics just issued by the London County Council, has a population of 7,252,963 and an area of 693 square miles.

—PEACE ADVOCATES are somewhat puzzled over the President's recent utterance in which he declares that the United States stands for international peace but must go on building two new battleships yearly.

—ON NOVEMBER 11 and 12 the first serious storm of the present winter occurred. Heavy gales extended from Colorado to the Atlantic and from Maine to Texas, accompanied in many points in the West and Northwest by severe snowstorms. A number of shipwrecks are reported with some loss of life.

—THAT A CRISIS is coming which will test the value of the government's rate regulation system, and that if it fails, government ownership of railroads will be the sole alternative, was the opinion expressed by Presiding Judge Martin A. Knapp of the United States Court of Commerce, in a recent address in Philadelphia.

—JUDGE O'SULLIVAN of the Court of General Sessions, New York, recently summed up the causes of young men going wrong in large cities thus: Lack of moral or religious instruction in the schools; poverty at home; disinclination to work and lack of industrial training; bad associations on the streets at night.

—CHIEF STATISTICIAN GUILFOYLE, of the New York Health Board, is authority for the statement that overeating, lack of exercise and the increasing use of automobiles have greatly increased the death rate from heart disease. "The further we get away from the manner in which nature intended us to live," he says, "the more danger there is of this malady."

—BY THE terms of Joseph Pultizer's will, an aggregate of $3,000,000 is bequeathed for the encouragement of American genius, in the form of annual prizes for the best productions in art, music, editorial writing, fiction, biography, dramatic work, American history and reportorial work. There are also bequests for the School of Journalism. The prizes vary from $1,000 to $2,000.

—JUST A LITTLE over a year ago, Porfirio Diaz was rarely mentioned save as the "grand old man of Mexico." Now, the almost perennial President is well nigh forgotten. At the inauguration of Francisco I. Madero as President on November 6, not only the capital but practically the whole country was en fete. The republic is gradually becoming pacified, although there are still occasional outbreaks in remote sections.

Contents of this Number

Wednesday, November 29, 1911

	PAGE
Our Mail-Bag	1210
Uncle Sam's Horn of Plenty (Illustrated)	1211, 1220
The Abiding Companion. Sermon By Rev. J. W. Jowett, D.D.	1212
The Passing of the Manchus (Illustrated)	1214
The Nation's New Tariff Board (Portraits)	1215
In the Land of the Incas (Illustrated) By A. R Stark	1215
OUR EDITORIAL FORUM	1216
THE BIBLE AND NEWSPAPER (Illustrated)	1217
The Bowery Mission's Guest (Illustrated)	1218
To Save the Babies (Portraits)	1218
Brander Cushing's Ambition (Illustrated) By Charles M. Sheldon	1219, 1224-25, 1227
Our Boys and Girls (Illustrated)	1221
New York's "White Wings" Strike (Illustrated)	1222
Our Comfort Corner (Illustrated) By Margaret E. Sangster	1223
Sunday School Lesson. By Dr. and Mrs. W. F. Crafts	1226
Our Celestial Visitor By Samuel Phelps Leland, LL.D.	1227
Through Niagara in a Motor Boat (Illustrated)	1228
Young People's Societies	1229
Enthusiam in Peace Circle Work	1230

THE BIBLE AND NEWSPAPER

Conducted by FERDINAND C. IGLEHART, D.D.

Lincoln Memorial at Hodgenville

ON NOVEMBER 9 the Lincoln Memorial was dedicated at Hodgenville, Ky., by President Taft. The memorial is an imposing granite building standing on a little hill, at the foot of which is the spring that led Thomas Lincoln and Nancy Hanks, Lincoln's parents, to settle there. The memorial stands on the site where the newly wedded pair built a crude cabin of unhewn logs in the centre of one hundred and ten acres of poor land. The cabin had only one small room, a loft, a big chimney on the outside and a huge fireplace on the inside, a rough door on leather hinges, and not a single window. The original log cabin, which was in the hands of speculators who had it on exhibition, was purchased and is on the inside of the granite building, and through the centuries will be the most important feature of the memorial. People from all parts of the United States witnessed the acceptance of the memorial for the nation by President Taft. Ex-Governor Folk of Missouri, who is the president of the Lincoln Farm Association, opened the exercises, and to his laudation of Lincoln were added tributes by President Taft, Governor Willson of Kentucky, Senator Borah, and others. Among other things Mr. Taft said: "The explanation of Lincoln and his wonderful character from his origin and environment is almost as difficult as the explanation of Shakespeare. He was not slow, but he was cautious, deliberate, attentive. The lucidity and clearness of his thought manifested itself in the simplicity, directness and clearness of his style. He had imagination and he loved poetry. He had the rhythm of language, and though purely self-educated, these circumstances developed a power for literary expression that the world has come fully to recognize and enjoy. The great reason for the present memorial is the constant reminder it furnishes of the unexplained and unexplainable growth and development, from the humblest and homeliest soil, of Lincoln's genius, intellect, heart and character, that have commanded the gratitude of his countrymen for the good he worked with them and awakened the love and devoted admiration of a world." Clarence H. Mackay, who has been treasurer of the Lincoln Farm Association since Robert J. Collier bought the Lincoln home farm and put it into the hands of a voluntary association which was authorized to make of it a perpetual national possession, made an address. He said: "It is the gift of both the affluent and the lowly. It has come from a gift of $25,000 from one and from many thousands like the good woman who sent eighty cents to me for herself and seven children, and the two miners who from their Alaskan diggings sent me ten dollars in gold dust. The association has raised a total of about $383,000. The memorial is paid for and an endowment of $50,000 set aside for maintenance. It is a simple, direct tribute of a grateful people to the memory of a great American. It has been democracy's worthy tribute to a great democrat." On the one hundredth anniversary of Lincoln's birth the cornerstone of the memorial was laid by Theodore Roosevelt, and its dedication now gives to the nation the farm and the cabin as a lasting memorial. They built memorials to great men and events in olden times. The one Joshua built is here suggested:

That this may be a sign among you, that when your children ask their fathers in time to come, saying, What mean ye by these stones? (Josh. 4: 6, 7.)

Dedicating the Lincoln Memorial at Hodgenville, Ky., on November 9

Changed the Guideposts

On Hallowe'en night some boys thought they would have a jolly time and changed the guideposts at Livingston, N. Y., which gave no end of annoyance and pain to misdirected travelers, some of whom had to spend much of the night getting to their destination. The fun was dear, for the justice of the peace fined the boys five dollars apiece. There are moral and spiritual signboards which it is a sin and a shame for false teachers to change and cause men to lose the way. On the perplexing roadways of life the guideposts that are always sure are the ones that are marked with the sign of the Cross and the stained finger of Him who was sent

To guide our feet into the way of peace. (Luke 1: 79.)

Ocean to Ocean Flight

The greatest achievement thus far in aerial navigation was the flight of Calbraith P. Rodgers, from the Atlantic to the Pacific Ocean. Starting from Sheepshead Bay, New York City, on September 17, Mr. Rodgers reached Pasadena, Calif., seven weeks later. Atwood, who flew from St. Louis to New York, broke the world's record for long-distance flying, and received the applause of the civilized world. Rodgers in the most modest manner flew more than three times the distance Atwood did, and he easily holds the world's distance record. Rodgers met with many accidents on the way; one piece of his machine after another suffered wreck and had to be repaired or replaced. He was delayed at one place and another for one reason or another, but he kept bravely on, undeterred by bad weather, making an average rate of speed of about fifty miles an hour. Having reached Pasadena and virtually flown from ocean to ocean, Rodgers determined to make Long Beach his goal. In doing so he fell two hundred feet to the earth at Covina, wrecking his machine and injuring himself severely. The physician thinks he will be able to resume and finish the few miles of his journey within a week or so. Rodgers has achieved permanent fame, and has contributed a new chapter to the history of aerial navigation. The speed and distance of the swift flight of this birdman across the continent calls to mind the figure used:

The Lord shall bring a nation against thee from far, from the end of the earth, as swift as an eagle flieth. (Deut. 28: 49.)

Well-known Elephant Dead

Bazil the Great, better known as Carrie, which has been taking part in "Around the World" at the Hippodrome in New York, after five days of illness from pneumonia died. Carrie was about 150 years old. For sixty years she has been seen by children and grown people at the circuses and shows of the country. Sixty years ago John Robinson imported her. She was taller than Jumbo, but did not weigh so much. Her bones, like those of Jumbo, have been disposed of to the Museum of Natural History in New York. There are bones of extinct races of animals much larger than the largest elephants of our time. The behemoth of the Scriptures is believed to be the elephant of to-day.

Behold now behemoth, which I made with thee; he eateth grass as an ox. (Job 40: 15.)

Average Business Man Honest

The Rev. Reginald John Campbell, pastor of the City Temple, London, England, and one of the most noted ministers of Europe, delivered a lecture to an audience of 1,500 persons in the First Baptist Church of Philadelphia recently, in which he is reported to have said that a man cannot succeed in business nowadays and be honest. This is what the papers report he said: "Conditions in this world are such to-day that the business man must take gross advantage of his competitors or go to the wall. Competition is too keen. As a matter of fact, a successful business man in modern times cannot be honest." We trust the papers have misquoted him. The statement is extravagant. We do not agree with it at all. Such pessimism and harsh judgment seem out of harmony with Dr. Campbell's brilliant intellect and tender heart. There are heated competitions that lead to frauds, and there are fortunes that are made dishonestly, and there are enough of these wrongdoings to provoke the indignation of Dr. Campbell as a prophet. But it is ridiculously untrue to say that an honest man cannot succeed in business in America, in the face of the fact that a large majority of the men who have prospered have done so because of their wisdom, industry and integrity, and that our successful men pour out their money into every form of benevolence as they do nowhere else on the globe, and as they have never done in the history of the world; and in the face of the fact that business men of to-day are in the midst of a nation-wide movement to bring men, and especially young men, into the kingdom of Christ. Many as are the oppressions to be stopped, the wrongs to be righted, the dishonesties to be repented of and shunned, we cannot believe that our nation has so slipped out from under the control of a righteous God that only thieves can prosper. If such a condition were true, it would spell the defeat of representative government and extinguish the brightest lamp of hope for the race. We are not prepared to believe that the business men of the United States as a rule are deaf to the Mosaic injunction:

Ye shall not steal, neither deal falsely, neither lie one to another. (Lev. 19: 11.)

$422,000 Hidden Booty

Acting on information furnished him, District Attorney Charles S. Whitman of New York has begun a search for $422,000 hidden by the wrecker of the Federal Bank, in 1904. This sum was deposited under an assumed name in two safety-deposit vaults, where the money has remained since. The bank wrecker went to prison, but kept his secret. He died in prison, but before passing away he revealed to his wife the secret hiding-place of the money. The innocent widow, in making the facts known in the interests of justice, said: "I want nothing for myself as the result of this disclosure. I want the district attorney of New York to get the money and use as much of it as is necessary to pay off the outstanding debts of my husband's companies. What is done with the rest of the money is immaterial to me. It can be given to charity. I do not want any of it." The disgraceful end of the long-concealed dishonesty is expressed in these words:

As the partridge sitteth on eggs, and hatcheth them not; so he that getteth riches, and not by right, shall leave them in the midst of his days, and at his end shall be a fool. (Jer. 17: 11.)

THE BOWERY MISSION'S GUEST

Fanny Crosby, the Blind Hymn-Writer, Speaks at its Anniversary

Scene at the Anniversary Celebration of the Bowery Mission, November 8

THE thirty-second anniversary of the opening of the Bowery Mission was celebrated at the Mission, 227 Bowery, New York, on Wednesday evening, November 8. The actual anniversary occurred a day earlier, but as that was election day, the exercises were held the day following.

Every part of the large building was crowded, the men literally overflowing the auditorium, platform and balcony, and proving a most enthusiastic and demonstrative audience. The honored guest of the occasion was Miss Fanny J. Crosby, the gifted blind hymn-writer, now in her ninety-second year. She was seated on the platform beside Mrs. Sarah J. Bird ("Mother" Bird) and her reception was a veritable ovation. Miss Crosby has been a warm friend of the Bowery Mission throughout its whole existence. She was one of its most earnest workers for many years, and found in it the inspiration for more than a few of her world-famous sacred songs.

Many hymns were sung, both solos and choruses, each one being from the prolific pen of Miss Crosby.

Rev. John G. Hallimond, D.D., superintendent of the Mission, presided at the meeting, and introduced the various speakers. He gave a brief address, summarizing the wonderful spiritual work of the Mission. He paid a fitting tribute to the memory of the late Dr. Louis Klopsch, to whom was chiefly due the preservation and enlarged scope of the institution.

Miss Crosby, despite her advanced age and her blindness, was one of the most active participants in the exercises. She gave a spirited talk, telling of the early days of her "pet mission," as she loves to call it, and reciting various reminiscences of the hymns that had their inception in her Bowery Mission work. Of these perhaps the most inspiring history was that of the famous hymn, "Rescue the Perishing." "One night long ago, at the old Mission, further downtown," Miss Crosby said, "I asked if there might not be in the audience at least one young man who had drifted away from home. A youth arose, and stepping forward to the platform, said, 'I guess you must mean me.' He was converted there that night, and I was so deeply impressed by the incident that I went away home to write the song that is now familiar in all parts of the world.

"Years afterward," she added, "I attended a convention in a town in New York State. At the end of the session, I was approached by a prosperous-looking, dignified gentleman, who begged to make himself known to me. His name I did not recognize but I knew at once when, reminding me of the incident described, he added, 'I am that young man.' "

George C. Stebbins, the distinguished composer, whose sweet melodies have furthered the popularity of many of Miss Crosby's lyrics, supplemented her talk by several narratives of his own association with her work. Rev. Charles H. Mead, D.D., president of the Bowery Mission Board of Trustees, made a short practical address and paid a glowing tribute to the aged authoress. Rev. Joseph M. Conway, manager of the Bowery Mission Labor Settlement, outlined briefly the work of his department, his description being verified by the Rev. John W. Laird, pastor of the Wakefield, N. Y., Methodist Episcopal Church, which is attended by the Settlement men. Charles Balevre, superintendent of the Bowery Mission Brotherhood, told of the conspicuous triumphs of that fine body of men, numbering more than 12,000. James T. Hunt, manager of the Free Labor Bureau, reported the remarkable progress of this branch of the work, which, during the past four years, has found employment for more than 13,000 worthy fellows.

Other speakers, all connected in one way or another with the work of the Mission, were "Mother" Bird herself, John J. Leary, Alexander Glass, Bernard Lynch, Thomas Oxtoby, Patrick McBride, Charles H. Thompson, Thomas Oakes, J. Fred Roper, Charles Noble, George Walters, and Captain Schaefer—the latter, like the beloved guest of honor, a nonagenarian and seemingly younger than hosts of men but half his age.

Mrs. J. G. Hallimond, Mrs. Charles H. Thompson, Miss Dorothy Temple and Mr. Hunt contributed effective vocal solos, all from the writings of Miss Crosby.

G. T.

America's Association at Work to Save the Babies

A BABY dies in the civilized world every ten seconds. One-fifth of the total mortality registered in the United States is of infants less than one year old. Taking 200,000 as the yearly average for the past decade, the loss of child life since the twentieth century began is at least two million. These startling facts and the conviction that this tremendous waste of child life can be very greatly reduced have brought a new organization into life—the American Association for the Study and Prevention of Infant Mortality, photographs of whose leaders are reproduced with this article. It is the outcome of a conference held in 1909 by the American Academy of Medicine at New Haven, Conn.

The heavy death rate, they assert, is due to conditions which can be ameliorated. Some of these are bad housing, questionable industrial methods, ignorant or indifferent mothers, irresponsible fathers, disregard of the essentials of personal or baby hygiene, imperfect or inadequate supervision of the milk supply, inadequate or unenforced sanitary laws.

The Association, which is now entering its third year, has held two national meetings, one in Baltimore a year ago and one in Chicago within the last few weeks. Through its various departments the organization is working actively for reforms along the lines suggested. The Association has lent its assistance to the campaigns for pure milk which have been carried on in many parts of the country, specially in summer. This aid has taken the form of co-operation with the Public Health Departments that have been working with the milk dispensaries, visiting nurse associations, settlement houses, churches and fresh air charities. The greatest work undertaken has been the education of the mothers in the proper care of the little ones. This is done by visiting nurses, women physicians and volunteers who are capable of giving practical instruction.

This new national body has a broad field in bringing together leaders in all the various forms of work for infants, and in pointing out the most approved methods. It constitutes the United States group in the International Association on Infant Mortality, which held its third world's congress in Berlin in September last.

J. A. S.

Prof. Irving Fisher of Yale University — Dean Marion Talbot of the University of Chicago — Jane Addams Hull House, Chicago — Dr. Charles R. Henderson of the University of Chicago

Brander Cushing's Ambition

A New Serial Story Written for The Christian Herald

By Charles M. Sheldon.

Author of "In His Steps"

Synopsis of Preceding Chapters

The story opens with a vivid description of the brilliant scene at the launching of the new American battleship Republic, 26,000 tons displacement, at the great navy yard at Dockville. The Secretary of War is present with many other high officials, members of Congress, army and navy officers. The great steel monster of destruction, the most perfect triumph of modern shipbuilding, is the work of Brander Cushing, the famous builder and naval contractor, who is present, with his son Sidney, on the launching platform. The signal is given, the music strikes up and the huge vessel is "christened" in the usual manner by Miss Pax Marston, the beautiful daughter of Rear-Admiral Marston. A tiny bow of ribbons, which was released by the impact of the stroke at the moment the conventional bottle broke on the vessel's bow, flutters past the high launching platform. Several snatch at it, but only one, Sidney Cushing, succeeds in grasping the little bunch of color, though he does so at the risk of losing his balance and dropping a sheer seventy-five feet to the river below. A dozen spectators, seeing his peril, spring to his assistance, but he recovers his poise, although his hat, caught by the wind, is wafted away.

After this adventure, he is introduced to Miss Pax, the Admiral's daughter, who has been an interested witness of his exploit. She questions him about his rescue of a young sailor on the cruiser Del Monte a year before, and although young Cushing modestly evades a direct answer, she is satisfied that the heroic act was his. Miss Marston invites him to call upon them in Washington. Leaving the launching platform, he is proceeding up town to buy a hat to replace his lost one, when a sudden explosion occurs near at hand in the big naval supplies factory of which his father is the principal owner. The whole building seems to burst into flame. Cushing, seeing numbers of women leaping from the windows, at the risk of his life succeeds in saving a number of workers. He is horror-stricken at the terrible tragedy he has witnessed and stunned by the reflection that his own father is responsible for the lack of fire-escapes, which he had been notified by the fire marshal two months before to provide, but had neglected. He goes back, half-dazed, to his father's office. The son tells his father plainly that he remembers the marshal's notification. "Somebody is guilty of the death of those girls," he says. "Who is it?" Sidney Cushing and his father attend a navy banquet given in honor of the launching, at which the Secretary of War and other high officials are present. Next day the papers announce that criminal proceedings are to be instituted against the parties responsible for the disaster, Brander Cushing being mentioned by name. The builder is besieged by reporters, to whom he denies point-blank having received any notice from the marshal. He knows that the prosecution will be in the hands of District Attorney Fleming, his political enemy. Sidney is sent to Washington, to be out of the way while his father faces the coming trouble. Brander Cushing finds the men in his yard antagonistic to himself, regarding him as responsible for the loss of so many lives. Attorney Fleming visits him and an exciting scene follows. Fleming dares Cushing to open his safe and prove that he has not got the notification papers locked up. Cushing orders him out of the office, and he withdraws, after threatening to subpœna Sidney as a witness. In Washington, Sidney renews acquaintance with the Marstons and becomes a strong favorite with the Admiral, his pretty daughter, and his nephew. With the latter he visits the new armor-testing grounds, to witness the trials of the latest giant devices for man-killing in battle.

Chapter IV—*Continued

"WE'RE lucky to get in on this," said Marston to Cushing. "Old Unc' Marston, of course, gives us this chance. It ain't every day we could get it."

"There will be some fine tests, I understand."

"Fine! If old General Stater doesn't blow his head off with that bloxine it will be great fun. It will if he does, too."

When they reached the experiment grounds, Marston introduced Sidney to several officers, mostly young men, with a few older students of explosives and new modern range-finders.

The first experiment of the day was to be with the new explosive, bloxine. Every one present gravely inserted little wads of cotton into his ears. The target was on a side hill seven miles distant. It could be seen with the telescope and officers' field-glasses, as a black spot against a sand-bank. In reality it was composed of a frame of oak planking nine inches thick, fifteen by twenty-five feet in surface. Upon this oak planking was riveted armor plate twelve inches thick. Over that was a covering of seven inches of seasoned maple and outside of that another armor of nine-inch steel plate.

The sixteen-inch gun was swung into position. Its ponderous machinery, delicately adjusted as a watch, was manipulated by the engineer.

"All ready, sir."

The new explosive was to receive its first test. The inventor, an old man of stolid appearance, was present. His face showed no sign of nervousness. Most of the military men exhibited some degree of doubt or uneasiness.

The order to fire was given by the gun sergeant.

A roar that smote the ear-drums like the impact of a direct blow from a steel hammer; a shock of the earth under foot which caused every man to reel and stagger and two or three of them to fall; a backward leap of the gun on its great frame that tugged with giant arms to break away, so fierce that something snapped and pieces flew into the air like missiles hurled from an opposing weapon; the hurtling of a monster ball surrounded by an oily, greenish vapor; and all eyes straining through the field-glasses to note the result. A second later a gray cloud of enormous size appeared on the sidehill.

Sidney, with his field-glass searching for that small black square on the hillside, could not believe his eyes.

"What! A hole?"

"That's all!"

The inventor was speaking. His eyes gleamed. "That's all."

"By Jove!" said Ed Marston, "I'm glad I wasn't sneaking behind that target for safety. Why, there isn't even a toothpick left!"

The officer in charge came over to the inventor.

"I congratulate you, Winter. If it goes that way, it's your move with the Ordnance Committee."

He invited the two young men to get into the army automobile and ride over to the site of the target. Sidney and Marston eagerly accepted.

When they reached the base of the hill, the party got out of the car and started to climb up to the place where the target had been. Before they had gone twenty steps, they all stopped, and in perfect silence stared at the place.

The target had totally disappeared. In place of it was an unnatural gash which disclosed a deep gravel pit. Up and down the sides of this blackened chasm were strewn small fragments of wood and steel, not one piece as large as a man's head. A bunch of trees, which had been standing fifty feet above the slope, leaned over the ghastly rent, their trunks shivered and branches split by the fearful explosion.

The army officers looked at one another.

"If we had had that thing at Malvern Hill, Jim!" a grayhaired veteran spoke to a comrade in a low voice. Somehow low tones seemed the fittest in this place.

"Um, yes; but—it's too deadly, somehow."

The experts took notes and the party scattered, going about the edge of the hole and making various comments.

Ed Marston and Sidney climbed up to examine the danger done to the trees on the bank above.

Some of them were nearly uprooted by the fearful explosion. Their trunks were swaying out, leaning over the hole below.

Ed Marston, with characteristic foolhardiness, climbed out on one of these trunks and sat down, dangling his legs over the space below.

"I say, Cushing, it wouldn't have been a bad thing to put the owners of that naval factory behind that target and give 'em leave to make their getaway after they saw the smoke of the gun seven miles away."

Cushing was so silent that Marston turned his head to look up at him. He was standing on the bank by the roots of the tree.

"My father is the owner of the naval factory."

"What? You don't say! You don't—"

"Yes. The sole owner. That is, the shipyard company ran it, and father is the company."

"Well, of course, I—I—beg your pardon, Cushing. I had no idea—"

"No, I didn't suppose you did. If I were you, I'd come in off that trunk. I think it's going to fall."

Ed Marston got to his feet with the swiftness of a cat. He took two steps along the trunk. Sidney held out his hand. Marston grasped it, while Sidney was clinging with the other arm about a small tree up the bank. Marston leaped as Cushing pulled; the trunk crashed down into the pit, carrying with its upturned roots several loads of gravel and dirt.

The two young men scrambled higher up the bank.

"Say, you seem to be in the business of saving me. And I don't know as I'm worth saving so often. But I feel awful mean about your father."

Sidney was silent. He did not feel well enough acquainted yet to take Marston into full confidence.

"Your father's all right, of course. He isn't—"

"No. Father will come out of it all right." Sidney spoke proudly, but in a way that even Ed Marston understood.

"Awful sorry I butted in."

"That's all right," Sidney said, with a smile. "Shall we go along down? They're beckoning to us."

On the way down, as they scrambled about over the confusion caused by the explosive, Marston again stammeringly started to express his apology for what he had said.

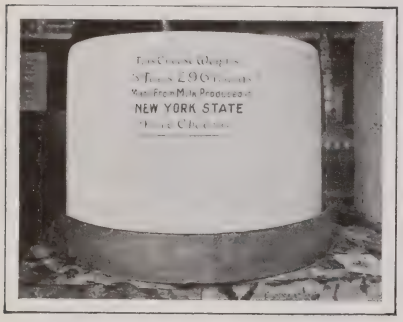
"You don't need to say a word; I don't mind it."

"You won't let it get between us, will you?" Ed said, eagerly. "I begin to like you awfully, you know. I haven't got such a lot of friends; somehow they can't stand my careless habits, I guess. But I had an idea you were the sort of fellow to understand."

"I do," said Sidney, with his compelling smile. "If I was going to hold a grudge against you, you would have

Continued on page 1224

"The hurtling of a monster shell and all eyes straining to note the result"



* The figures given in the last issue and those which will be given elsewhere are taken from various authentic sources. The author especially acknowledges War What For? by Kirkpatrick.

UNCLE SAM'S HORN OF PLENTY

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 1211

also of Montana. One would suppose that the short staple cotton prize would have gone South, but it went to the American Nile Company of California. Wyoming sent a wonderful exhibit of alfalfa, but so did other States East and West.

Men from Maine proclaimed the glories of Aroostook potatoes. Other men equally ardent insisted that you ask yourself the pertinent question, "Why should I buy a farm in New Hampshire?" Why indeed? There were reasons enough propounded by college professors and served piping hot in yellow pamphlets. They were enough to make one wish to run right away to the Granite State, had it not been for the counter attractions of free government land offered in Oklahoma, wonderful possibilities offered in New York State, remarkable opportunities to be had in tidewater Virginia, and so on. In fact, as one visitor to the show remarked, if they had taken all the State signs off the exhibits, it would have been hard to tell from what part of the country the various products came. And so, in reviewing the show as a whole, it might be well, perhaps, to do so in that spirit—that is, with the signs off, the spirit of rivalry removed.

The Biggest Cheese in the World

No one could have visited this land show without gaining added respect for the vastness of our country, the immensity of its resources, and in so thoroughly indicating this the show necessarily took on a hugeness of its own.

The great hall held a very Babel of sound, activity and odor: sound of voices in question and exclamation, machinery in motion; activity of excited crowds eager to glimpse at first hand the things which are doing all over our great land; odor of fresh fruit, green crops—the sublimated smell of the soil.

From the entrance the visitor considered which way to turn, and then as one who looks first over the pictures in an illustrated volume before perusing the text, the impulse was to look at the more spectacular exhibits before settling down to the less pretentious.

On the right as you entered was an elephant at least eight feet high. Its hide was made of thousands of red apples strung about its huge frame. They called it an "appelephant."

A little farther on was a great cheese weighing over three tons, that is to say, 6,296 pounds. Sixty-two thousand two hundred and eighty pounds of milk, produced in New York State, were required to make it. It was a real cheese too, symmetrical in shape and good in all things that a cheese should be.

Standing near this huge cheese was an immense milk-bottle, over ten feet tall. It suggested an idea of the immense quantities of milk consumed in New York City in the course of a year. Six hundred and twenty-nine million, six hundred thousand quarts of milk were used in New York City alone during 1910.

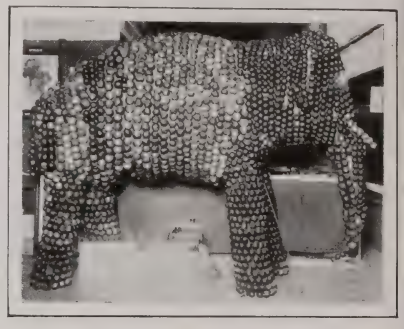
Near the milk-bottle was a glass case containing life size busts of President Taft, Governor Dix of New York State, and Mayor Gaynor of New York City, made entirely of butter. They were lifelike, too. The Taft smile and the Gaynor earnestness of countenance were clearly delineated.

A crowd gathered outside a large glass cage in which an exhibitor of bees showed the ease with which these profitable insects could be handled. They were all round and about him; in his hat, up his sleeves, crawling around his neck. He stated that there was not the slightest danger of getting stung if the bees were handled in the right manner, and he insisted that honey-raising was an industry which would be more widely practised if people could be brought to know how easy it is and how profitable it may be made.

As has been stated in the foregoing, alfalfa and its development played a large part in the show. The development of alfalfa has indeed become a very important adjunct to farming. One man said it was to the farming industry much what coal tar is to the chemical industry. Many things may be extracted from it. For instance, there was one booth devoted to the products of alfalfa, and therein were shown alfalfa bread, alfalfa candies, caramels, cakes, biscuit, etc., etc. At a soda fountain nearby alfalfa soda water was being sold for five cents a glass. These, however, are uses which are quite aside from its main use as a fodder.

Luther Burbank, the creator of new fruits, had an exhibit which attracted a great deal of interest, as many people in the East had never seen specimens of his many creations. He is the inventor of the pomato, which is a cross between the potato and tomato; the spineless cactus, the plumcot, the walnut without tannin in the meat, the primusberry, and other remarkable feats performed with pears, apples, quinces, peaches, cherries, grapes, etc., etc.

It seemed as though more apples were exhibited in Madison Square Garden than any other form of vegetable or fruit. The exhibitors gave away freely beautiful specimens of apples raised in different parts of the country, and hundreds of people walked about the Garden eating the rosy-cheeked beauties as they inspected the exhibits.



Many of the latter constituted surprises for the majority of visitors. For instance, just as they were surprised to find the cotton-growing prize going to California, so, many people were astonished to learn that Colorado is producing more beet sugar than perhaps any State in the Union. The display at the Colorado booth showed in detail the process of making sugar, from the seed to the refined product, and the exhibitors declared that the sugar beet production in Colorado this year is valued at more than $12,000,000.

We have electric households where everything is done by means of the electric current, and now it seems we are to have electric farms. The General Electric Company, Crocker-Wheeler Company, and others exhibited many articles which may be used on the farm. It is possible nowadays to plow, harrow, cultivate, milk cows, shear sheep, and do many other chores by electricity. A very interesting exhibit was the milking machines which are operated by electric current. Several cows were milked by means of the machines twice a day. Other electrical exhibits which interested the farmer were a refrigerating plant, a pump for water supply, a milk-cooler, a combined churn and butter-worker, a cream separator, a thresher, a feed grinder and sheller, and an electric automobile truck.

The exhibits of garden tools, led by the "Iron Age" varieties, were particularly interesting, and representatives were on hand to illustrate the working of these implements. Modern garden tools make gardening a real pleasure, and even the city man who may be fortunate enough to live in the country will find in their use much health-giving exercise.

A great deal of ingenuity was exhibited in displaying various agricultural products. One large concern, Peter Henderson & Co., exhibited a solid bank of squash, twenty-seven feet long. From Maine was sent an exhibit of fifteen different varieties of potatoes which rejoice in such names as "Irish Cobblers," "Red Bliss Triumphs," "Early Puritans," "Gold Coin," etc. And as evidence that the residents of every State of the Union think their own State is best, there were exhibits showing the agricultural products raised along the lines of fourteen different great railroads, covering every part of the United States.

Even the agricultural colleges sent exhibits illustrating the modern method of teaching agriculture. There was an exhibit of a model school farm showing how children are being taught the right way to make the soil yield up its wealth, and how under good instructors they may learn all about soil management, good roads, the laws of sanitation and health, and the dignity of manual labor. This was only one of many exhibits which were designed primarily to show the economic possibilities of farming when the subject is efficiently managed.

"They called it an Appelephant"

Some of the exhibits were intended to show specifically what some of these possibilities are. For instance, the statement of the man quoted in the foregoing to the effect that there is enough waste land on Long Island to grow crops sufficient to feed New York City, was not an idle boast, as was shown by an exhibit from two experiment stations which are located on Long Island. The sites selected for these stations were popularly supposed to be two of the most unprolific spots on Long Island. These waste places were developed by a scientific farmer with the result that they were made to bloom even more prolifically than many other spots which were supposed theretofore to be the most favored spots of the Island.

The moral is that around most large cities are waste places which, under the direction of a practical farmer, might be made to produce crops which would have a ready sale in the adjacent town, with the double advantage that heavy costs of transportation would be eliminated, with the result that a greater profit could be made by the farmer, or that the product could be sold at a cheaper rate than before.

As a matter of fact, Madison Square Garden looked like a veritable horn of plenty, and the American Land and Irrigation Exposition, to use its official name, had an educational value which is hardly to be overestimated.

TOPICS OF INTEREST THROUGHOUT THE WORLD

Mrs. Breckenridge Bayne

—Miss Olga Roosevelt, one of Washington's prettiest and most popular belles, was the centre of interest there on November 15, when she was married at St. Thomas' Church to Dr. Breckenridge Bayne. The church was very beautifully decorated with pink and green that enhanced the ivory satin gown of the girlish bride. Miss Katherine Shaw of New York was maid of honor, and the bridesmaids were Miss Elsie Ladew, Miss May Ladenburg, Miss Mildred Poor of New York and Miss Dorothy Christian of Richmond. Elisha Theall of New York acted as Dr. Bayne's best man, and the ushers were Murray Cobb, David Tennant, Dr. Louis Lehr, Dr. A. F. Hopkins, Dr. Kerr, Dr. Garnett, Anthony Addison of Washington, and Lawrence Fuller of Philadelphia.

—There are two silver services for the battleship Utah, which was launched at the Brooklyn Navy Yard November 6. One, which was presented by Governor Spry of Utah on the day of the launching, bears on a single piece—the tray of the coffee set—an engraving of the statue of Brigham Young. The other, which was presented the next day, is a handsome silver coffee tray, to take the place of the objectionable piece. It is the gift of anti-Mormon citizens of Utah, and is presented with the consent of the Secretary of the Navy, so that it has equal recognition with the Mormon tray. This is probably the most diplomatic way of settling the difficulty; but it would have been more satisfactory to the people had the naval authorities so managed affairs that there would have been no cause for such an issue being raised at all.

—Though diplomatic and social circles in Washington were keenly sorry to learn of the retirement of Baron Rosen, the Russian Emperor's Ambassador, the disappointment has been made less keen by the arrival of the new representative, Mr. George Bakhmetieff, who is already well known in Washington. Mrs. Bakhmetieff is an American by birth, her maiden name being Miss Mary Beal. She is extremely popular in Washington, and during her former residence there was identified with a number of philanthropic and charitable organizations.

—749,642 aliens landed at the port of New York during the year ending June 30, of whom 14,500 were deported. The Commissioner of Immigration, in view of the steady increase in the number of arrivals, advocates more stringent laws looking to the exclusion of the unfit, as such immigration he considers detrimental to the welfare of the nation.

Mr. George Bakhmetieff

HAPPY COZY CORNER DAYS

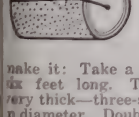
October-November a Busy Season

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS: October-November has been a busy season in the Cozy Corner, and ve to thank you all over and over in many times for your good work your nice letters and your bright husiasm. Next week we shall be with our Christmas Cozy Corner gs. There will be several of them aight running, i each one is go- to be more resting than the er, for this is way things hap- in the Cozy ner. Do you ow that no other ne magazine anyere is doing half much for its ng people, in thing like so big d generous a way, is THE CHRISN HERALD? This largely because zy Corner boys d girls are cord, hearty and husiastic about many nice ngs that we can do together. Some people wonr whether or not are likely to il our young folk th giving them many things in e way of prizes, souvenirs, booklets d long, friendly letters; but we rdly think so.

By rule of majority you have made customary in the Cozy Corner to close a stamp for an answer to your ters and for Cozy Corner souvenirs, hich is only just, you see, and we are y glad indeed to send the very best prizes for good work. Nobody is ing spoiled, I think, unless the Aunt the Cozy Corner herself is growing bit high-spirited, perhaps, with conantly remembering her many loyal eces and nephews, among the sturdit boys and splendidest girls in the orld.

Write me just as often as you like. emember, I am always your friend, ways enjoy answering your letters as ey come, and I look forward each eek to these meetings in the Cozy orner here in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD ith as much delight as you do.

I am so sorry about the misprint in iving the answer to the geography uzzle of October 11. Christiania ould have read Roda—Rhoda in the d spelling, and you may be sure we re taking good care of all those who nswered the puzzle correctly.



The Little Tree's First Winter

Where are my leaves that were yellow and red?"
a little tree in the forest said, s it looked around and saw not one:
Some one has taken them just for fun."

Come, fairies all, and hunt for the thieves;
ell them to bring back all of my leaves;
or winter is coming, and what shall I do?"
aid the tree, looking up at the sky so blue.

You need not your leaves," a little seed said, eeping right up from her brown, cozy bed;
For God will surely take care of you;
So do not worry about what to do."

EMMA B. HANSON, age 14.

I Made It Myself

WE have a home-made corn-popper at our house that beats the bought ones. Here is how to make it: Take a piece of wire about six feet long. The wire should be very thick—three-sixteenths of an inch in diameter. Double and twist the wire from the middle to within about a foot of the end; spread and bend the two ends of the wire, and force them into a hole punched in the centre of the ends of a half gallon molasses can in which holes have also been punched on the curved surface. The wires should spring a little to put on. This popper when complete may be rolled on the surface of any stove and the corn will pop just right and never burn.

JACKSON MARKHAM, age 16.

The Path Through the Pines

J. Burnes, from a Brownie Kodak film

Some of Our October-November Prize Winners

William R. Jones, age 16, Pennsylvania—a gunmetal watch.

Anna Huck, age 12, Illinois—a gunmetal watch.

John Overholt, Arkansas, age 13—kodak.

Ada Adams, Colorado, age 11—A first prize book—Six Girls and Betty, a charming story by Marion A. Taggert.

Marie Lapierre, age 9—A first prize book—Bessie at School.

Twenty Supplementary Prize Winners

Alice Baum, 15; Maggie Redfern, 17; Ernestine Hoadley, 16; Bessie Gardner, 15; Ethelyn Staple, 12; Ethel Stiles, 16; Olga Merhige, 14; J. W. Willard, 16; Ruth Bridge, 12; Dorothy Bowers, 14; Helen Honeyman, 14; Lorenzo Hays, 9; Eula Billingsly, 16; Hazel Jamison, 10; John D. Hamilton, 13; Wayne Garnet, 10; Marion Kilburn, 16; George M. Giddings, 10; Rubena Sommerfield, 10; Louise Brooks, 17.

With the Christmas Greens

WE BOYS and girls gathered a bushel basket of everlasting and aftermath and dyed them red to make into wreaths and balls to hang up with the Christmas greens.

LEROY MEYERS, age 17.

A Christmas Gift for the Baby

FROM half a yard of good linen or cotton duck cut out a regulation bib and a belt with which to button it around the baby's plump little body and hold the bib in place. Stamp both belt and bib with a simple embroidery pattern to be worked with white mercerized cotton and scallop the edges of both. This dainty belted bib is a gift that could not very well fail to please any mother of tiny babies.

"See the snow fairies, Barbara"

From a Brownie Kodak film

I Made It Myself

IN A WARM, sunny place in our woods where the partridge-berry grows very abundantly, I have dug up the roots with the surrounding moss and placed them in a glass bowl with a smaller glass bowl to fit inside the large one. In this way I have forced thick bunches of brilliant red partridge-berries, which I shall transplant into little flowerpots and give away as Christmas gifts.

JANE LIDDELL, age 15.

A December Prize Competition to Close December 24

VERSE, to contain not more than twenty-four lines. Subject, "Pictures in the Fire" or "Lullaby, my Dolly" or "The Old Musket."

DRAWING, appropriate Cozy Corner headings for January (in pen and ink, water colors or wash).

PHOTOGRAPH, any size, mounted or unmounted. Subject, "A Cozy Corner" or "Visiting" or "Winter."

For best work in any of the above classes: first prize, a guaranteed gunmetal watch; second prize, Brownie Eastman Kodak; third prize, a perfectly working toy sewing-machine if a girl should win, and a best quality jack-knife for a boy. Twenty extra Christmas Cozy Corner prizes for good work of any kind in order of merit.

Be sure to enter the December prize contest, and if you want to thoroughly enjoy our Boys' and Girls' Department of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD and have not as yet written introducing yourself to the Aunt in the Cozy Corner, write to-day and you will receive almost by return mail a delightful letter written especially to you.

Our Good-Night Verse

There are briers besetting every path,
That call for patient care;
There is a cross in every lot,
And a need for earnest prayer;
But a lowly heart that leans on Thee
Is happy everywhere.

Good-by for this time. Look out for the December pages, and remember I am Lovingly and faithfully yours,

The Aunt in the Cozy Corner

THE NEW AGE

WHEN navies are forgotten
And fleets are useless things,
When the dove shall warm her bosom
Beneath the eagle's wings,

When memory of battles
At last is strange and old,
When nations have one banner
And creeds have found one fold,

When the Hand that sprinkles midnight
With its powdered drift of suns
Has hushed this tiny tumult
Of sects and swords and guns;

Then Hate's last note of discord
In all God's worlds shall cease,
In the conquest which is service,
In the victory which is peace!

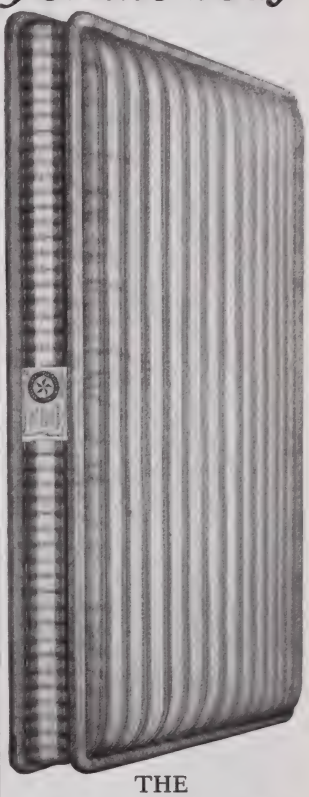
FREDERICK LAWRENCE KNOWLES.

JUST FOR TO-DAY

LORD, for to-morrow and its needs,
I do not pray;
Keep me, my God, from stain of sin,
Just for to-day;

Let me no wrong or idle word
Unthinking say;
Set Thou a seal upon my lips,
Just for to-day.

Let me both diligently work,
And duly pray;
Let me be kind in word and deed,
Just for to-day;



Let me in season, Lord, be grave,
In season, gay;
Let me be faithful to Thy grace,
Just for to-day.

In pain and sorrow's cleansing fires,
Brief be my stay;
Oh, bid me if to-day I die,
Come home to-day;

So, for to-morrow and its needs,
I do not pray,
But keep me, guide me, love me, Lord;
Just for to-day.

—Selected.

It's a pillow for the body

THE

SEALY

TUFTLESS

MATTRESS

It will give you head-to-foot comfort of the sort that you now give only to your head.

The SEALY is a big, billowy body-pillow, not "smothery" like a feather-bed, but undulating, body-conforming. The springy, elastic filling, being unrestricted by tufts, instantly conforms to every curve, every changing position of the body. Thus the sleeper lies easily and naturally, his weight is evenly distributed so that there is no uncomfortable pressure on any part of the body, the blood circulation is unimpeded, and he enjoys full muscular relaxation, complete rest and sound sleep.

Buy under the Sealy Triple Guarantee:

First:—We guarantee the SEALY to be made entirely of pure, new, long-fibre cotton, without linters or mill-waste.

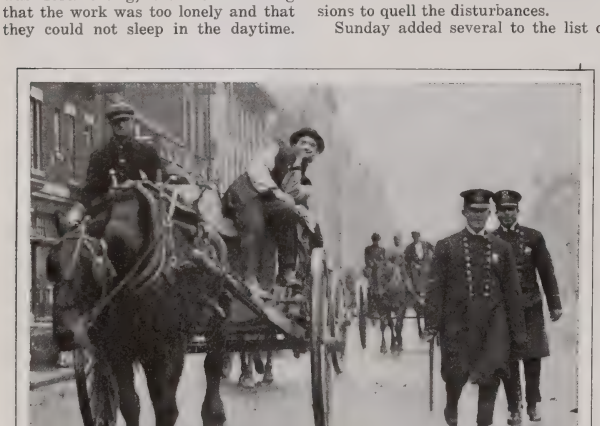
Second:—We guarantee the SEALY for 20 years against becoming lumpy or bunchy.

Third:—We guarantee that after 60 nights' trial you will pronounce the SEALY the most comfortable mattress that you ever used, or your money back.

SEALY MATTRESSES are made in all sizes, covered with the best grade of A. C. A., Bookfold Sateen, or Mercerized Art Tickings, either Plain Edge or Roll Edge—but never tufted. Prices $20 to $25.

Send for our booklet, "The Real Difference in Mattresses" and the "Mattress Museum"

With them we will also send you the name of our representative where you can see the SEALY in your town, and who will give you the guarantee.



SEALY MATTRESS CO.,

Factory and General Offices at our 14,000 acre cotton plantation, SUGAR LAND, TEXAS.
New York Offices and Warerooms: 51 West 37th Street.
Chicago: 1300 Michigan Ave., San Francisco: 45 Kearney St.

Write to address nearest you

Handling New York's "White Wings" Strike

AFTER several months of discontent with the conditions of their employment the ashcart and garbage wagon drivers of New York City struck on November 6 for a readjustment of working hours. A few months ago the street cleaning department, following the example of some of the most progressive European cities, introduced the system of having all refuse removed from the city during the night. The men who drove the carts were given shorter working hours and a higher pay than men engaged in similar occupations during the hours of daylight; but notwithstanding this a great deal of complaint was forthcoming, the men claiming that the work was too lonely and that they could not sleep in the daytime.

Policemen Guarding the Refuse Wagons

The difficulties reached a climax early in November, and a strike was called which resulted in the vast amount of refuse that is incidental to such a great city as New York accumulating and remaining practically untouched for several days.

Street Cleaning Commissioner Edwards immediately upon the declaration of the strike called for eligible men from the civil service list, and at first it seemed as if the strikers, having left their jobs, would merely be replaced by other men, and all would go on as before. Mayor Gaynor made it plain to the strikers that the city is governed by its charter in the employment, dismissal and re-employment of men, and that there was but one course open to the authorities.

In spite of this, before the end of the week the numbers of the strikers had been augmented by practically all of the drivers, stablemen and hostlers and many of the sweepers of the department. These men and their sympathizers, as soon as they realized that the service was continuing, though badly crippled, resorted to methods which produced almost a reign of terror in some sections of the city.

Rioting and attacks upon the new employees of the city started on Wednesday, and became more and more violent during the closing days of the week. On Friday there were only 500 wagons out of 2,500 at work, and these were everywhere storm centres around which flew both curses and bricks. One man, whose skull was fractured by a brick thrown from a neighboring roof, died the following morning in a hospital. The situation became so serious that as darkness approached Mr. Edwards called in all the wagons, though their services were badly needed, as the streets in some of the lower East Side districts fairly reeked with filth.

Though Saturday was marked by a number of riots in various parts of the city and the injury of several policemen, the day passed more quietly than had been expected. There was one serious riot in the Bronx. A great many arrests were made in widely separated parts of the city, and only about 200 wagons were in operation under the guard of corps of policemen. It became necessary during the course of the day for the policemen to make a show of arms on several occasions to quell the disturbances.

Sunday added several to the list of crimes which followed on the trail of the strike. Just after midnight on Sunday morning one of the city's stables, in the loft of which 145 men were sleeping, was set on fire. Hay and dry rubbish were in some way piled against the back of the building and a fire started which gave the police a few strenuous minutes in alarming the sleeping men and rescuing 75 horses in the building, and which took the firemen three-quarters of an hour to extinguish. On Sunday night two of the police officers who were superintending the establishment of a guard over one of the stables were thrown from their feet and badly cut up by the explosion of a bomb which was hurled from the roof of a tenement house on the opposite side of the street. Earlier in the day another bomb had been thrown at one of the wagons which was on duty in East One Hundred and Seventh Street. The Chief Inspector of the Police Department, while on a tour of inspection of the West Side, was surrounded by a mob, and it was only at the point of his revolver and with the assistance of six mounted policemen armed with their heavy clubs that he made good his escape.

The inspector returned to one of the nearby police stations, and having had his wounds dressed, personally conducted a raid upon the district in which he had been injured and which is generally conceded to be one of the toughest in the city. Three-quarters of an hour later he announced that the Sahara Desert itself never looked so deserted as the streets through which he and his men had just passed.

Dr. Ernest J. Lederle, Commissioner of Public Health, after an inspection of the streets of the East Side, said he would allow but three days more for the final settlement of the trouble and removal of the offensive matter from the streets. If this was not done, he said, he would find it necessary to exercise the authority vested in him for the preservation of public health and see that the streets were clean even if the most forcible measures were necessary.

The following morning showed a great decrease in temperature. As the mercury stood below the freezing point the decay of the accumulated refuse was arrested and the danger of an epidemic developing was removed. The leader of the strikers, after several futile attempts to see the mayor, decided that conciliation was the best course open to the men. The police had the city under such rigid control that there was little or no rioting and many of the men expressed their desire to return to their old jobs. Commissioner Edwards had in the meantime practically refilled his department, but found that many of his new men were not to be depended on and were unfamiliar with the city. After a conference with the mayor and the comptroller it was decided to give the men their back pay and consider that those who had taken no hand in the rioting had been absent without leave and have their pay docked accordingly but would be taken back to their places. Wednesday of the second week saw almost normal conditions restored in the department. All the stables and depots were open and most of the carts were at work. A few days later the streets had been cleared of the 50,000 loads of refuse that had accumulated during the strike and most of the drivers had resumed work.

Among the Workers

—DURING A GREAT fire in Hankow, China, which destroyed a large part of the native city, the American Wesleyan Mission was burned to the ground. The inmates, 300 in number, escaped in their night-clothes.

—MANY AMERICANS WILL remember Miss Davies, the wonderfully eloquent woman preacher who visited this country several years ago and whose pulpit discourses were marked by a high degree of spirituality and forensic power. Miss Davies passed away at her home in England a few weeks ago after a short illness. During her last visit here she preached under the auspices of the Christian Missionary Alliance. She was a faithful servant of the Master and her ministry was a means of blessing to many.

—MATTHEW HENRY HODDER, the well-known London publisher, who died recently, aged 81, was an active and liberal patron of the Y. M. C. A. He was a warm friend of young struggling men and helped many of that class. Among his proteges were many who had "gone wrong," and whom he had set upon the right path again. For many years, Mr. Hodder never went out without a liberal supply of half crowns (equal to fifty cents) and few who appealed to him for charity were ever turned away disappointed.

—THE FOURTH ANNUAL meeting of the Medical Missionary Conference, held under the auspices of the American Medical Missionary Board, will be held at the Sanitarium in Battle Creek, Mich., January 2 to 5 inclusive. Rev. Lemuel C. Barnes, field secretary of the Baptist Home Mission Board, is to preside over the conference, and the attendance of several prominent mission workers is already assured. The Battle Creek Sanitarium offers free entertainment for one week to all the missionaries who attend the meeting, and the invitation is to all evangelical missionaries regardless of denomination. Inquiries may be addressed to George C. Tenney, Battle Creek, Mich.

"Little Moonflower"

This beautiful Tale of Childhood in the Far East is a true story from Real Life and will be sent FREE to any reader of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD who sends us a postal asking for it. It's a neat little illustrated pamphlet and is extremely interesting. Address

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York City

A Set of Guarantee Furs for $9.00

Retail Price, $18.00

The Greatest Fur Offer of the Ye

We will sell you a set finest quality Belgian with the GUARANTE these furs will suit you lutely or we will refun full purchase price, wi quibble or question. We pay all express ch and if the furs are not en satisfactory, upon receip may return them at our pense. This offer is made largest mail-orde house in the count is backed by our re tion for square de 706.—Handsom gian Lynx Stole, soft, black silky Buxelle model, st effect. A full skin a the back, 9 inches finished at each en handsome heads, o which hangs grace over each s der. The M the latest n with a fine bed, finishe each end w neat shirring entire set is with Skin Guarant Satin. Retail $18.00. Pric Immediate orders, ex press pre paid ....

706

When you buy furs a concern of this size know that you are ge the best that the ma affords, at a price n tailer can compete because we are manufacturers and you get the the manufacturer's prices.

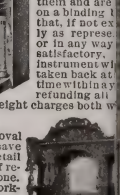
Write for our Beautifully Illustrated Cat of Furs. Sent to you FREE OF CHARGE. W to-day—do not put it off. It is FREE.

ALASKA FUR CO., Manufacturing Furriers, Estab. 1217 D Market Street, Philadelphia

Reference: Bank of Commerce, 624 Chestnut St., Philade

Cornish Sent On Year's Tr

Sold Under Bond To Please

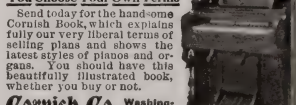


Don't buy hastily—insist that the maker prove h strument and you will know whether it will please and is all the s claimed.

Cornish pi and organs are on trial to d onstrate qu ity without gating prospe buyers to them and are on a binding that, if not ex ly as represe or in any way satisfactory, instrument w taken back at time within a refunding all chase money, together with freight charges both w

Sold At Factory Prices

By the Cornish "Year's Approval Plan" you buy intelligently, save one-third or more of regular retail price, and get an instrument of renowned quality and superior tone. Perfection of material and workmanship guaranteed for 25 years.



You Choose Your Own Terms

Send today for the handsome Cornish Book, which explains fully our very liberal terms of selling plans and shows the latest styles of pianos and organs. You should have this beautifully illustrated book, whether you buy or not.

Cornish Co. Washington, N. J.

Established Over Half a Century

THE ONE BEST GIFT

Bride, maid or matron—any woman will warmly wel come a Piedmont Southern Red Cedar Wardrobe Couch A luxurious lounge and roomy cedar chest. All prices Finest upholstering and wide choice of materials Perfect protection against moths, mice, dust and damp Send for free booklet, "The Story of Red Cedar," an big illustrated catalogue showing full line of couches chests and chifforobes. Many sizes and styles. Shipped DIRECT FROM FACTORY AT FACTORY PRICES ON 15 DAYS' FREE TRIAL.

All freight charges prepaid by us. Write us today.

PIEDMONT RED CEDAR CHEST CO., Dept. 75, Statesville, N.C

Marvelous Plant FREE

Looks dead, but after hour in wate bursts into big, rich green, fernlik plant. Can be dried and revived an time; lasts years. To advertise us, we'l send a Mexican Resurrection Plant fre (while they last) if you'll send 6 shipping cost. Will also send illus trated catalog of Indian & Mexica handicraft, full of Xmas hints

Francis E. Lester Co., Dept. E 11 P., Mesilla Park, New Mex

OUR COMFORT CORNER

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER

A SONG OF THE HEART

SWEET was the song of the robin,
Blithe was the hum of the bee, n the day when the drift of the blossom
Was light as the foam of the sea.
hen deeply was cloven the furrow,
And daily they scattered the seed,
Who trusted that rainfall and sunshine
Would surely be given at need.

he robin hath flown to the tropic,
The honey-bee flitteth no more;
he reaper hath garnered the harvest,
And the fruit and the nuts are in store.
he flame hath died out on the maples,
We tread on the loose-lying leaves, nd the corn that was sturdy and stalwart
Is gathered and bound into sheaves.

nd sweeter than music of springtime,
And fuller of jubilant mirth,
re the strong-tided chorals o'erflowing
From hearts where thanksgiving has birth.
he songs of the home and the altar,
The gladness of children at play, nd the dear love of households united
Are blending in praises to-day.

or pasture-lands folded with beauty,
For plenty that burdened the vale,
or the wealth of the teeming abundance,
And the promise too royal to fail.
e lift to the Maker our anthems,
But none the less cheerily come
o thank Him for bloom and fruition,
And the happiness crowning the home.

. the peace on the brow of the father,
The light in the mother's clear eyes,
he lilt in the voices of maidens
Who walk under dream-curtained skies!
he dance in the feet of the wee ones,
The sparkle and shine in the air!
he year has no time like Thanksgiving:
A truce to our fretting and care!

weet was the song of the robin,
Blithe was the hum of the bee,
n the day when the drift of the blossom
Was light as the foam of the sea:
ut sweeter the silence of autumn,
Dearer the tender refrain,
hen the aftermath waveth no longer
And resting are valley and plain.

Avoid the Blues

HE temptation to yield to the blues often assails people when they are eak in bodily health. Often it atcks them when they are encumbered y mental troubles. A wise elderly oman once said to a young girl, Anybody can cope with real trouble. is the vague, intangible trouble that ets the better of one and clouds the ay spirits until one walks in the lackness of a fog." Whether trials re real or simply imaginary, a good ule for every one is to seek the sunhine. If there is the least derangeent of health, trust in God with all our might and apply to the best phyician within reach. Body, soul and pirit are closely interblended and one ften depends upon the other for comort and well-being. Never give up despair because at the moment here are hindrances and perplexities. ust around the next bend in the road here may be a change so beautiful nd so bright that you will soon forget he rough place over which you have ad to walk.

A teacher once escorted a party of irls through a forest and up a mountain by a steep and zigzag path. The limb was not an easy one. There ere briers and thorns on the edge of he pathway, and sometimes the ranches meeting overhead obscured he light. At intervals, the little arty emerged from the darkness into lear sunshine, and from time to time hey would find a level upland, from whence they had a wide and charming iew. Whenever they rested in the unny sweetness of a grassy plateau nd looked over the prospect beneath hem they were cheered and surrised. All the distant beautiful ame close and near. The rough and trying way was forgotten, and they felt that it was worth while to have had fatigue and difficulty for the sake of the rich experience. We may often have to climb our Hills of Difficulty, but if they lead us to a calm and tranquil resting in the Lord and to the joy he has for us, why should we care that they were, a while ago, a little trying?

On principle, we should avoid the blues. They detract from our courage and are singularly selfish, since they not only weigh us down, but cast a blight on the happiness of those around us. "Be of good cheer," should be the motto of every Christian —a motto for weekdays and Sundays alike.

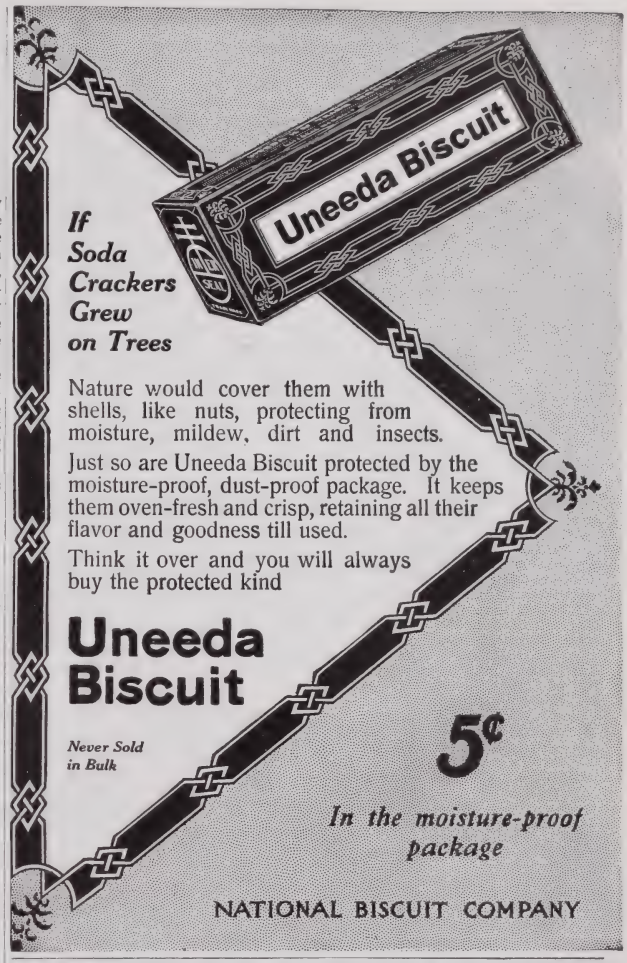
A Familiar Tragedy

THE other day the newspapers reported a tragedy. It was not an uncommon incident in the life of New York, but no one could read about it without a heartache. A family had been destitute of food for nearly a week. The father, without work, was without resources. The mother was desperately ill. The emaciated children tottered in weakness and were a pitiful sight. A little boy of three was sent to a neighbor with a message in the forlorn hope of obtaining relief, and in crossing a thoroughfare was run over by a street car and instantly killed. Public attention being called to the condition of the family, money has generously poured in for their aid, but this family is only one of a vast number who are suffering silently and are in terrible straits in the summer days.

Any person walking through one of the city parks must be touched by the spectacle of apathetic men who occupy the benches and whose lack-lustre eyes gaze out on the world without a ray of interest. Drink has brought some of them to extremity, but it is not always responsible for their hard times.

A Bit of Advice

Children, dear, when you hear
Dropping rain upon the pane,
Just be happy, never fear;
Sunshine always follows rain.



Children sweet, when your feet
Make the grown-up people fret
At the noise of girls and boys,
Tell them you'll be sober yet.

Children pray, when the day
Does not go quite right at school,
Think of this, that perfect bliss
Comes of minding every rule.

An Invalid's Gratitude

I ENCLOSE fifty cents for which please send me ten copies of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD of April 19. I am an invalid and cannot work. I thought that I could distribute these among certain of my neighbors, and perhaps drop a few seeds of good, that would be a benefit to them, and also in order to try to repay my Master for what he has done for me. I do not know how I ever can repay him. I had my lower jaw and tongue crushed off twenty-eight years ago, and God gave me the power of speech, and made it possible for me to talk without a tongue or lower jaw. Several hundred surgeons and doctors all told me that it would be impossible for me ever to be able to speak again, and that I could not possibly live over five years. (This was twenty-eight years ago). Yet I am still living. The doctors cannot understand how I managed to live at all, so I feel that it is nothing short of a higher Power that is keeping me living from day to day, and I feel that God must be keeping me here for some purpose. I thought I would try and distribute a few copies of this sermon among my neighbors and friends and see if I can be of any benefit in this way.

Colliers, W. Va. J. T. E.

MARVEL SOLDER
INSTANTLY MENDS ALL LEAKS
In all kinds of household utensils—enameled, tin, iron, copper, brass, etc. Soldders Without Heat. Just squeeze from tube and spread over hole or crack with fingers. Hardening, it makes solid, smooth surface. Patches all machinery. Fine for motorists.
Send 10c for trial tube.
MARVEL SOLDER CO. 1937 Broadway Dept. 8 New York
AGENTS WANTED QUICK SALES BIG PROFITS

PATENT YOUR IDEAS
$8,500 offered for one invention. Book "How to Obtain a Patent" and "What to Invent" sent free. Send rough sketch for free report as to patentability. Patents advertised for sale at our expense in Manufacturers Journals.
Patent Obtained or Fee Returned
CHANDLEE & CHANDLEE, Patent Att'ys
Established 16 Years
925 F. Street, Washington, D. C.

I am the Original Fireless Cooker Man

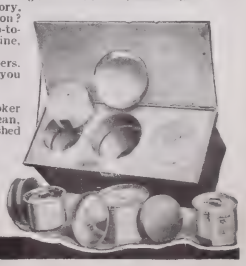
Rapid FIRELESS COOKERS
Reduce the Cost of Living

It's an actual fact that my Fireless Cooker saves 75% of your fuel bills, 75% of your time and worry, it cooks your food 75% better and you will never keep house again without one, once you have tried it. I am the Original Fireless Cooker Man. I sold 30,000 Fireless Cookers last year. Nearly every cooker sold brings me from one to four customers—friends of the first customers.

Special Price Proposition On 10,000 Cookers

Just now I am going to make a special price proposition on 10,000 lot of my cookers to further introduce them into new localities. You'll be surprised and delighted at the low, direct figure I will quote you on just the cooker you want right from the factory.

Don't you want to write a postal to-day for this proposition? Remember, my Cookers are the latest improved, most up-to-date cookers on the market. Mine is the old, original, genuine, Rapid Fireless Cooker.



Sold on 30 days' free home test. Order one of my Cookers, use it in your home for a full month, then decide whether you want to keep it or not.

My Motto is Low Prices and Quick Sales.

My Rapid Cooker is the cleanest, most Sanitary Cooker made. No pads, or cloth lining. All metal, easily kept clean, and with proper care will last a lifetime. Beautifully finished cases with dust proof tops.

Send for catalogue and full description, together with special price. Also, I will send you recipe book of 125 different dishes to be cooked in my rapid cooker.

Remember, my cooker Roasts, Bakes, Fires, Boils, Steams and Stews, any and all kinds of food most deliciously. Answer this advertisement and get full particulars.

WILLIAM CAMPBELL COMPANY, Dept. B 2, Detroit, Mich.

Brander Cushing's Ambition

Continued from page 1219

known it before this. But I—I—don't! We can be good friends. I—I like you all right."

"Good! I thought you did. I don't see how any one can help liking you."

"Don't you?" Sidney laughed. "I appreciate it."

Back at the experiment grounds the remaining tests were with the modern rifle and repeating guns. How many people know that hundreds of inventors are eagerly working day and night to make these modern scientifically constructed killing machines?

A high-grade modern rifle can be fired twenty-five times per minute.* This gun will pierce sixty pine boards each one inch thick. It will kill a man at a distance of four miles. A bullet with sufficient force to pierce a one-inch pine board will kill a man or a horse. Actual tests show that the best modern rifles will force a bullet through a target made of the following combination: fifteen folds of cowhide, sixteen one-inch pine boards, and one and four-fifths inches of hard beech wood. Bullets fired from rifles used in the American Civil War would do little damage after passing into or through the bodies of soldiers in the front ranks. Men in the second and third ranks felt much protected by the bodies of men in front of them. All is different now. The best modern rifles will force a bullet through five horses at twenty-seven yards; four horses at 220 yards; two horses at 1,100 yards. Even as recently as the war of 1870-71 and the war of 1877-78, bullets from rifles then used in the German army would not pierce a human skull at a distance of 1,760 yards—one mile; but with the best modern rifles bullets can be fired through the thick bones of an ox at a range of 3,850 yards, about two and one-fifth miles. Experiments demonstrate that the best modern rifles will force a bullet through three human bodies at a range of 3,900 feet; and through five human bodies at 1,200 feet. In the American Civil War, bullets for long-range work had to be fired high, describing a long, high arch, thus missing all objects on the battlefield between the gun and the object aimed at. A bullet from a modern rifle will fly straight across the field for hundreds of yards with no elevation; even half a mile and more with but little elevation.

One modern gatling gun will tear a board fence to pieces a mile away in four minutes, and at a range of one mile it will gnaw off a foot-thick pine post in seven minutes.†

It is reliably estimated that modern artillery is capable of doing one hundred and sixteen times more damage than the artillery used by the German army in 1870. Even the simple instrument known as the range-finder adds much to effectiveness; it enables soldiers to find the range in three minutes and pour death-dealing missiles into the opposing army.

Is it any wonder that Sherman said at the close of the Civil War: "I confess without shame that I am tired and sick of the war. Its glory is all moonshine. Even success the most brilliant is over dead and mangled bodies, and anguish and lamentations of distant families appealing to me for missing sons, husbands and fathers. It is only those who have not heard a shot nor heard the shrieks and groans of the wounded and lacerated that cry aloud for more blood, more vengeance, more desolation."

Sidney and Marston, after the rifle and gun tests, went back to the city together, and at Marston's eager invitation Sidney took lunch with him at a fashionable hotel. They were to join Admiral Marston and Pax at two o'clock and had nearly an hour and a half before the time.

There is nothing like a good appetizing luncheon for healthy, happy young men, to rapidly ripen a growing friendship. Sidney Cushing was frank but reserved; modest, but self-possessed. He found he was three years older than Marston. In judgment and gravity of deportment he was several years older. But he yielded fast to the glamour of that experience (so fascinating), when one young man only a little older than a boy gives himself up to deep admiration and even affection for one a little his senior. And he was amazed with himself as the luncheon proceeded, and Marston's boyish enthusiasm bubbled over, to find how much he was willing to confide in one who was so near being a perfect stranger only a few hours ago. Marston's conversational habits were absolutely without order. He talked at random. The only rule he seemed to observe was one that Sidney soon understood and liked. He never interrupted the person he was talking with and never anticipated. He let the speaker finish what he had to say and then waited a second as if to give room for more. This habit makes a good listener and unconsciously flatters his companion that what he has said is well worth considering. Aside from this one good habit, Marston was absolutely irregular and illogical in his talk.

"Winter will get a high price for his bloxine if he sells its secret to the government, won't he?"

"I suppose he will. Inventors, though, as a rule, don't get much compared with the manufacturers."

"Don't they? Say, what kind of hat do you prefer?"

"Any will do."

"If the manufacturer gets most of the money, how do you suppose an inventor like Winter can scrape enough together to live so long? He must be nearly seventy."

"All of that, I should say. He must live on hopes."

"Yes. Oh, by the way, that other hat—when you were speaking last night, you remember, you said, or rather Pax said, 'That's two hats you've lost, Mr. Cushing,' and you said, 'I wonder who will pay for the other?' That sounds like another adventure. Are you willing to tell me?"

"I don't mind." Sidney colored a little, then laughed, and briefly related how he had lost his hat at the launching of the Republic.

"And you got the ribbons?"

"Yes."

"Got 'em with you?"

Pause on Sidney's part.

"Yes."

"Mind if I see 'em? I can tell if Pax—"

"No."

"She likes you, I think. If that bloxine was packed in ferro-periphyloxene don't you think it would lessen the shock—the initial shock a little?"

"I am not a chemist. I don't know."

"I'm no chemist, either. I studied it two years and forgot it all in one. Still, as I say, I think Pax is fond of you."

Sidney was silent with dignified inward astonishment.

"I can't get that factory fire out of my mind, Cushing. Those poor girls. Isn't it wonderful you could save some of 'em? Two of 'em had queer names. Do you remember?"

"Hermosa and Athanasia."

"Jolly! They sound made up. What sort of looking girls were they?"

"I don't believe I would know them if I were to meet them again."

"What? Haven't they been around to thank you?"

"I left home the morning after the fire."

"It must be great. Your father will—"

"He will get out all right. The county

Continued on next page

* Various authentic sources to which the author acknowledges his thanks for courtesy of permission to use.

† War: What for?

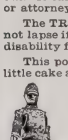
The Bread and Butter Question



TO a widowed mother with children to support, the future looks a little brighter, if ther comes to her each month, as the result of her husband's foresight, a monthly incom

That is just what the Guaranteed Low Cost Monthly Income Policy of Th TRAVELERS INSURANCE COMPANY does. It guarantees a specified incom payable every month for life. It cannot be diverted from the purpose for which it was take out. It cannot be lost by the inexperience or misconduct of others, or diminished by taxe or attorney's fees.

The TRAVELERS acts as a Trustee without charge and assumes all risks. The policy wi not lapse if you become unable to pay the premiums in consequence of total and permanen disability from accident or disease.

This policy yields the wife and children a bread and butter income and now and then little cake and cream. It is worth looking into, even though you already carry some insurance

Send Coupon for Particulars

The Travelers Insurance Co

HARTFORD, CONN.

Please send me particulars regarding the Guaranteed Low Cost Monthly Income Policy

Name_____

Christian Herald Date of Birth_____ Address_____

A BAD TEMPER

makes the owner, and friends and neighbors uncomfortable. It is nearly always caused by a bad stomach. Gas, fermentation and acid may be immediately removed by the use of Murray's Charcoal Tablets (absolutely unmedicated), and irritation being removed, the disposition improves at once. For a single trial, a full size, 25 cent box will be sent for 10 cents in stamps. A. J. Ditman, 2 Astor House, N. Y.

65 Xmas Novelties for 10c

Post Cards, Tags, Labels, Seals & Stamps

An assortment that is really worth 25c. Sixty-five separate pieces, consisting of 3 Embossed Post Cards; 4 Xmas Tags; 7 Gummed Xmas Labels; 24 Gummed Xmas Post Stamps; and 32 Gummed Xmas Seals—all printed in colors and gold in many handsome designs. Everybody wants one or more of these packages, for they can use the Seals in wrapping Xmas presents; Labels and Tags for addressing packages, and Post Cards to send Xmas Greetings or for notifying friends that a present is on the way. 3 packs for 25c, 7 for 50c, 15 for $1.00. AGENTS WANTED

ELLIS ART CO., Dept. 947 538 LawndaleAv., CHICAGO

DON'T PAY TWO PRICE

Save $18.00 to $22.00 on

HOOSIER RANGE AND HEATER

Why not buy the best you can buy them at such a heard-of Factory Prices? TH DAYS FREE TRIAL BEFORE BIY. Our new improvements lutely surpass anything ever pro SEND POSTAL TODAY OUR FREE CATALOG AND PR

Hoosier Steel

HOOSIER STOVE FACTORY 164 State St. Marion

"SAVE-THE-HORSE" SPAVIN REMEDY

Legal Contract

$5 a bottle, with binding contract to refund money for COPY, BOOKLET and LETTERS, from B Farmers and Business men on every kind of case manently Cures Bone and Bog Spavin, Thoroughpin, Ri (exceptlow), Curb, Splint, Capped Hock, Windpuff, She Injured Tendons and all Lameness. No scar or hair. Horse works as usual. Dealers or Express pr Troy Chemical Co., 39 Commercial Ave., Binghamton,

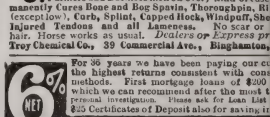
6% NET

For 36 years we have been paying our c the highest returns consistent with con methods. First mortgage loans of $200 which we can recommend after the most personal investigation. Please ask for Loan List $25 Certificates of Deposit also for saving in

PERKINS & CO. Lawrence

Wanamaker's

Christmas Catalog is Ready



Wonderful Christmas merchandise, and 1000 toys and games. Let the Kiddies see the pictures and you'll know instantly what will please them most.

Over 50 pages of our General Winter Catalog are devoted to Christmas suggestions. Ask for that, too.

Both are free on request.

Write us today: "Send Christmas Catalog No. 44."

JOHN WANAMAKER, New York

What Finer Christmas Gif

Wonderful musical sunbeams. A c stant delight and reminder of the giv Cure the "blues." Cheer the "shut-in"

Imported Tyrolean SINGING CANARIE

While they last! MALE TYROLEAN express prepaid, guaranteed in full $5.0 song or your money back, each. Females (for highly profitable breedi $3.00. Wooden cage free. Handsome lar brass cage only, $1.00.

My stock is limited. SPEAK QUIC if you want one of these new and re singers. Descriptive circular on reque

Agnes Bloemsma, 3759 DICKENS AV CHICAGO, ILL.

Importer of Fine Canaries and Talking Parrots

Brander Cushing's Ambition

Continued from preceding page

corney will do his best to hurt him. don't have any fear, but I feel as if I ght to be with him."

"Why don't you have a glass of er?"

"No. I don't drink."

"Do you think I ought not to?"

"Since you ask me, I think it would better for you if you didn't."

"You ought to see old Unc' Marn's wine bill after a junket like the e we're going on this afternoon. x will be surprised to find you don't ibibe."

"Why?"

"All the rest of her admirers do."

Silence.

"Do you care if I smoke?"

"Since you ask me, I don't like it."

"You don't! You are the first per- n I ever met who said so. Why, Pax ys she just dotes on tobacco. Are u from the West?"

"My father has never had a drop of quor or a cigar in the house since I as born."

"You seem proud of the unusual ct."

"I am."

"That bloxine of old Winter would nock all the fortifications down the ver into cocked hats. Which makes e think. Why not go out and get the ew hat now?"

"Will you forget it?"

"No. But I want to ask Pax if she going to get you another."

"No. You will not do that."

"Why?"

"Because I would rather not."

"If you don't drink or smoke what re your daily amusements? Saving eople's lives?"

Silence.

"You don't have to answer, of ourse. But it is astonishing. I don't now any other young man like you."

"Am I so odd?"

"No, that's just it. You're perectly sane and gentlemanly."

"Can't a man be sane and gentlenanly without drinking and smokng?"

"I don't know any. I wonder if Unc' Marston will set up as good a uncheon as he gave us when we went down the Chesapeake the other day? f he offers you wine will you drink?"

"No."

"If Pax offers, will you?"

Silence.

"Say. Cushing, I like you because ou take plenty of time to answer ome of my questions. I don't make ou nervous, do I?"

"Not yet."

"Well, it's about time to meet the oarty at the dock. Shall we get a ab?"

"Cab?"

"Yes, or taxi?"

"Can't you walk?"

"Walk?"

"Yes."

"A mile and a half!"

"Is it as far as that?"

"Every foot."

"Well, if we use every foot we have, won't we get there in time?"

"But—what are the taxis for?"

"I've often wondered. But what are legs and feet for?"

"I've often wondered. Not to walk with, when you can ride. You don't actually mean that you prefer walking to riding?"

"I'm afraid I do. I learned to walk, my father says, when I was six months old."

"Well, you are a strange animal. Don't drink, don't smoke, don't ride when you can. Why doesn't the Smithsonian get you for a specimen?"

Silence, during which Marston is paying for the luncheon.

CHAPTER V

WHEN they came out on the street, Marston hailed a taxi. "Really, don't you want to ride?" he asked Sidney.

"No, Marston, if it's all the same to you I would much rather walk if we have time."

"Oh, we've time enough. But—well, I will walk, but I'm not used to it. Whew! A mile and a half! What will Pax say to that? Are you willing I should tell her what kind of a fellow you are?"

"If you think you know on so brief an acquaintance."

"Hi! Here's a hat store. Let's get that off my mind and on your head."

They went into the store and Cushing after a little laughing protest accepted the new hat because he saw Marston really wanted to give it to him.

"You look handsome in that hat. It sets off your complexion. Pax will rave over it."

"Over which?" Cushing ventured to say.

"Isn't Pax interesting? Every time I look at her she reminds me of the goddess of Liberty on a fifty-cent piece."

"Why not say a dollar?"

"I'll tell Pax you said so."

"No. You'll do nothing of the sort."

"Why not?"

"Because I say so."

"At the same time, I'm sure Pax thinks you're the most interesting person she ever met. Do you?"

Silence.

"Tell me something, Mr. Cushing, about the new battleship your father is planning. Will it beat the Republic?"

"It is 5,000 tons larger. Father has set his heart on making it the finest warship afloat.

"Pax said she hoped they will let her christen it. Do you think they will? I told her only young women were chosen to christen warships and she would be too old by the time this one was done. Do you think she will?"

"I don't know how old she is. The contract calls for three years on the new ship. Father thinks he can complete it in two and a half.

"I'd like a place on board. Think I stand any show to command her? Just think of being captain of the biggest and best warship afloat! But what's the use? There's no war. If I was President or War Secretary I'd kick up a war with some one. What's the use of all our war material if we never use it on anybody?"

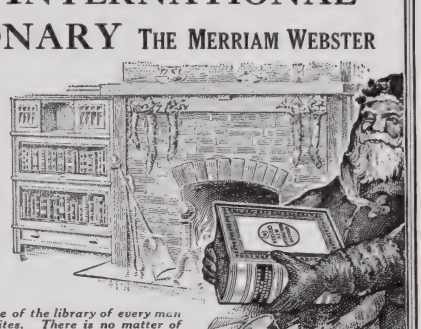
When the two young men arrived at the dock where the admiral's cruiser was ready for the trip the question young Marston asked might well be asked by any number of young men in this civilized country.

Our annual national expense of militarism, $450,000,000, would pay the annual college expenses of 1,800,000 young men and women; that is, of nearly twelve times as many as there were in the year ending June 30, 1908, in the five hundred and seventy-three colleges, universities and technological schools of the United States.

Five per cent. interest on $450,000,000 for six minutes would provide $250 for a year's college expenses.

Five per cent. interest on one year's expense of militarism in the United States for two weeks and three days would keep one full regiment (1,000 young men) in college for four years.

Less than seven per cent. interest on $450,000,000 for one year would pay one year's college expenses for a total number of young men and women equal to the total number of men in both the army and the navy, officers, privates and all.



The total present-rate cost of militarism in the United States for two and a half years is $1,125,000,000. Three and a half per cent. interest for one year on this amount would be $39,375,000. This interest would pay the college expenses of the total number of young men and women in all the

Continued on page 1227

"Here is A Gift That All Will Enjoy"

WEBSTER'S NEW INTERNATIONAL DICTIONARY THE MERRIAM WEBSTER

IT IS a gift to be treasured, admired, and used by all members of the family. This new creation is far more than a single volume. It is truly a library in one book, equivalent in type matter to a 15 volume encyclopedia. Dr. C. H. Parkhurst writes:

"An indispensable feature of the library of every man who either reads or writes. There is no matter of land, sea or sky that does not come within its purview and every topic is handled by a master."

This new work is a source of pleasure and information to all users of English. Architect, machinist, clerk, merchant, banker, doctor, clergyman, each will find his questions answered with final authority. The New York Court of Appeals regard it as "An unsurpassed authority, not only in matters relating to their particular work, but generally in all work of a literary character."

The New International is unquestionably the one gift more than any other that is useful, practical, authoritative, lasting, attractive. The gift longest to be remembered after the holiday season has passed.

2,700 Pages 6,000 Illustrations
400,000 Words Defined
The only Dictionary with the New Divided Page

WRITE for specimens of the new divided page, illustrations, etc. Mention Christian Herald and receive FREE a set of pocket maps.

G. & C. MERRIAM CO., SPRINGFIELD, MASS.

Name .....

Address .....

Duplex RICHMOND PATENTED D E TRADE MARK Envelope System

has two recent improvements that positively remove the last danger of mistakes in crediting contributions. Can be found only in the envelopes manufactured by the originators of the Duplex Envelope System—the organization responsible for every improvement made in Duplex service during the past ten years.

TO TREASURERS

Write for "Duplex Unit" 11

DUPLEX - RICHMOND, VA.

UNLESS IT'S Duplex RICHMOND, VA. IT'S AN IMITATION

SPENCERIAN

You can "scratch off a few lines" with any old kind of a pen, but when you have real writing to do and lots of it, your pen needs to be a

SPENCERIAN

Spencerian Pens don't scratch, splotch or splutter. They glide smoothly over any writing paper, under any hand writing. Sample card of 12 different styles and 2 good penholders sent for 10 cts.

SPENCERIAN PEN CO.
349 Broadway, N. Y.

The "Galloping Past" Dodge

may be used to cheat you the next time you buy or swap a horse. Or some smart "gyp" or crooked dealer may try to fool you with the "ginger trick", the "widow dodge", the "bishoping trick" or some other rascally frame-up which these miscreants practice. Protect yourself against all such knavery—read

"Horse Secrets"

—a book which exposes all the slick swindles that are known to professional dopesters and fixers of horses. It also gives much vital information as to the feeding and conditioning of stock and the cure of diseases and vices of horses. It is the most complete and valuable book of its kind ever published. The policy of

Farm Journal

is to serve the farmer, and we believe that in distributing "Horse Secrets" among our subscribers we are rendering the farmer a most important and valuable service. Farm Journal also serves the farmer with sound advice regarding every branch of farming—serves his wife with the most helpful housekeeping suggestions—serves his entire family with clean, wholesome entertainment. It is the best-loved and widest read farm paper published, and visits 750,000 homes monthly.

For Only $1.00

we will send you "Horse Secrets" at once, postpaid, and Farm Journal every month for four years. Send to-day. You never bought a bigger dollar's worth.

Farm Journal, 184 N. Clifton St., Philadelphia

BONDS

Secured by Selected
NEW YORK REAL ESTATE
Yield 6% Net Annually.
(Payable Semi-Annually)

An issue selected by careful investors, who for many years have recognized their unsurpassed combination of

SECURITY and INCOME

SEND FOR FREE BOOKLET 14.

15 YEARS' RESULTS:

Assets over $3,000,000
Surplus nearly . . . $1,000,000
Repaid Investors, over $1,000,000

New York Realty Owners
489 FIFTH AVENUE NEW YORK

ONE OF GOD'S HEROES*

Sunday School Lesson by Dr. and Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts

SANBALLAT, Tobiah and Geshem were an ancient triple alliance, but they were not of equal authority. Sanballat was governor of Samaria. Tobiah was an Ammonite (an idolater) of some influence, an "oily" person, who so ingratiated himself with the nobles of Judah that he actually obtained apartments in the temple of God for his private residence! The third party in the alliance was Geshem, an Arab. He probably was a chief among his people, wild people, whose God was not the Lord of heaven and earth.

This unholy triple alliance was dead set against Nehemiah in the work of rebuilding the wall of Jerusalem. They had not always been allies, but "common hatred is said to have a wonderful power of uniting former foes." First one member and then another of this alliance had tried the arrow of scorn, underestimating the quality of the wall which the Jews were building. Four times they had endeavored to establish treason among the builders. The fifth time they sent a message to Nehemiah. They proposed to treat him as a king and to take counsel with him on the plain of Ono, twenty-five miles distant from Jerusalem. But Nehemiah was not a man to be threatened, to be intimidated, nor to be flattered. He returned a straightforward answer: "I am doing a great work, so that I can not come down; why should the work cease whilst I leave it, and come down to you?"

But there was a foe inside the walls, and the triple alliance tried through him to trap Nehemiah. A certain man named Shemaiah, on the pretense that Sanballat would come to fight against Nehemiah, tried to persuade Nehemiah to go into the temple, intending himself to slay him there. "I will not go in," firmly answered Nehemiah. His trust in God was a whole armor, from head to foot. He tells us himself that he discerned that Tobiah and Sanballat had hired Shemaiah. The shield which he held between him and his foes was: "The Lord is the strength of my life; of whom shall I be afraid?" (Golden Text.)

And not permitting himself to be hindered or intimidated, Nehemiah remained steadily at his job, and in fifty-two days Judah was shut in with the Lord by the great wall.

And what was the result upon Sanballat, Tobiah and Geshem? We are told that when they saw these things (the bravery of Nehemiah and the completed wall) "they were much cast down in their own eyes," and that "they perceived that this work was wrought of God." (The whole of the sixth chapter should be read.

Why Nehemiah Was a Strong Man

1. He was a self-respecting man. We see that in his reply to Shemaiah: "Should such a man as I flee?" And "Who is there, being such as I, would go into the temple to save his life?" Another man might have meant the same thing in saying: "To do such a thing would be beneath me." Such a sentiment as this will help any one of us to keep himself out of the mud of meanness and immorality. Even a child is capable of this feeling.

Keep untarnished the crown of self-respect, and let it not be confused with self-conceit, which is only a brass imitation.

2. Nehemiah respected other men. Some one has dared to give the bad advice, "Treat every man as a rascal until you find out to the contrary." What turmoil and confusion that would lead to! And how it would dry up the milk of human kindness! How it would turn every man's hand (and woman's, too) against the hand of another! It reminds us of an irreligious man on trial, who was asked by a facetious lawyer, "What is your religion?" He replied with some pride, "I live by the Golden Rule, sir." "And what is the Golden Rule?" asked the lawyer. "It is to do as you've been done by," was the reply.

All through the story of the rebuilding of the walls of Jerusalem we read how considerate Nehemiah was of his co-laborers, always appealing to the best that was in them; he set them to work in places where they would build over against their own homes, and so they worked all the more diligently for the love of home in their hearts. And Nehemiah planned to have them work in family groups, children as well as parents, so they could have peace of mind while they worked. When he saw them weakening, he encouraged them in God. "Remember the Lord who is just and terrible, and fight for your brethren, your sons and your daughters, your wives and your houses." Every man of them was nobler for having worked under Nehemiah. To feel and to know that we are respected by others is the best sort of a mental aeroplane.

3. Nehemiah had respect unto God. "O God, strengthen thou my hands," he prayed when Sanballat and Tobiah and Geshem were doing all in their power to cause the building of the wall to cease. In so doing, Nehemiah was a wiser man than if he had tried himself to redouble his strength. He needed to be fortified by God's strength.

Let us remember Nehemiah when the day of testing comes to us. "In that day shall men look unto their Maker, and their eyes shall have respect to the Holy One of Israel" (Isa. 17: 7). We have all seen statues or pictures of the Roman wrestlers. There is an ancient story that the wrestler renewed his strength whenever he touched his mother Earth. That was fanciful, but it is true that we renew our strength when we touch our heavenly Father.

When we repeat over and over again the Golden Text: "The Lord is the strength of my life; of whom shal I be afraid?" we seem to see a man in full armor with helmet on his head, neck guards, a cuirass about his waist, brassards upon his upper arms, vambraces on his lower arms; gauntlets, or mailed gloves; bragnette over the abdomen; loin guards; thigh guards; knee-pieces; greaves on the lower limbs and sollerets, or shoes of mail. Thus were attired the far-famed St. John's Knights, sometimes called the Knights of Malta. Christian knights were they, bearing arms in defense of Christendom, and defending all Christians from insult and wrong. Nehemiah is not named as being a knight, but as we read about his characteristics he seems very knightly to us, and we could wish there might have been an order of the Knights of Nehemiah established in that olden time. We would gladly place ourselves under his banner and march breast forward into the realms of all noble deeds. We would pray with him: "Now therefore, O God, strengthen my hands."

But grander far than being the Knights of Nehemiah, we may be the Knights of Christ, and stand for him in all places and at all times. We read in the Bible what our armor shall be: a girdle of truth, a breast plate of righteousness, sandals of peace, a shield of faith, a helmet of salvation, and the sword of the Spirit (Eph. 6: 14-17.)

* The International Sunday School Lesson for December 10, 1911. Nehemiah and his Enemies. Neh. 6: 1-10. GOLDEN TEXT: "The Lord is the strength of my life; of whom shall I be afraid?" Ps. 27: 1 is what to buy at a moderate cost as a Christmas gift that will combine all the elements of nicety, practicability and appropriateness. There is practically no gift at the same cost that will please mother, wife, sister or friend as much as a latest improved

The Perplexing Question of the Year

BISSELL "Cyco" BALL-BEARING Carpet Sweeper

Everything about the machine, including finish and mechanism, indicates value double its cost to the purchaser. Thousands of Bissell Sweepers are given every year as Christmas gifts, and the demand for this purpose is growing enormously. A "Bissell" will be a constant reminder of the giver for ten years or more. It reduces the labor of sweeping 95%, raises no dust, and cleans carpets and rugs as no corn broom can, and will outlast fifty of them. Costs from $2.75 to $5.75, and are sold by dealers everywhere. Booklet on request.

OUR HOLIDAY OFFER—Buy of your dealer between now and January 1st, send us the purchase slip within one week from date of purchase, and we will send you a fine quality black leather card case with no printing on it.

Address Dept. 47-A, BISSELL CARPET SWEEPER CO., Grand Rapids, Mich.

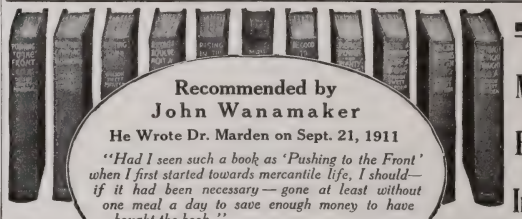
(13) (Largest and Only Exclusive Carpet Sweeper Makers in the World.)

HOLIDAY COMBINATION

2 Xmas Greeting Letters with Envelopes for . . . 10c.
or 6 assorted in Fancy Box for . . . . . 25c.
10 Xmas Post Cards . . . . . 10c.
6 Superior Xmas Post Cards . . . . . 10c.
10 New Year Post Cards . . . . . 10c.
Any three 10c. packages for . . . . . 25c.
Special Assortment of High Grade Post Cards 100 for 60c.
MADISON ART COMPANY, - - MADISON, CONN.

LAME PEOPLE

OLD WAY



The Perfection Extension Shoe is worn with ready-made shoes. Both feet look alike. Shipped on trial. Write for booklet.
HENRY E LOTZ,
313—3rd Ave., New York

THE NATURAL WA

YOU CAN AFFORD to have a new Song Book in yo Church or Sunday School, and o for every person when you can g

"FAMILIAR SONGS OF THE GOSPEL" for $3 for 100. Words and music, 83 very be songs. Sample copy 5 Cents. E. A. K. Hackett, 100 North Wayne St., Fort Wayne, In

A Life-Long Holiday Gift for a Few Dollar

Recommended by John Wanamaker

He Wrote Dr. Marden on Sept. 21, 1911

"Had I seen such a book as 'Pushing to the Front' when I first started towards mercantile life, I should—if it had been necessary—gone at least without one meal a day to save enough money to have bought the book."

(Signed) JOHN WANAMAKER.

11 VOLUMES 3348 PAGES

Marden's Books o Inspiratio

THESE inspirational books by Orison Swett Marden show how successful men do things; how they make up for deficiencies in education; how they achieve their aim, double their means, establish their credit, get a foothold in the business world, grasp opportunities, increase their abilities, make an impression on men of affairs—in fact, how they succeed in life.

Special Holiday Offer

Two dollars, with this coupon, brings to you the complete Marden Inspirational Library, eleven handsome volumes, over 400 idea-full chapters, 3348 text pages, transportation fully prepaid. Two dollars per month for four months if you select the cloth binding and five months if you prefer the silk edition, pays for this library, complete, and brings you in addition, every month for two full years SUCCESS MAGAZINE.

SUCCESS is the national family magazine to which Dr. Orison Swett Marden, its editor and founder, contributes every month one or more inspiring articles. It is famous also for its timely review of events, clean and interesting stories, and outspoken editorials on our big American problems.

The regular price of this library, in silk binding, with SUCCESS MAGAZINE, is $15.75 (in cloth binding $13.00). The silk volumes measure 4 x 6½ inches, popular pocket size, are handsomely bound in green watered silk, with gilt tops; each has a book-mark. The cloth volumes measure 5 x 7½ inches, and are attractively bound in red cloth. Each set is embossed in gilt, illustrated with portraits and printed in large, clear type. With this coupon you will receive SUCCESS MAGAZINE every month for two years (twenty-four numbers) and you get at once the complete Marden Inspirational Library. Here is your chance to learn from the experience of others how to make living more profitable and life more worth while. Send the coupon with two dollars to-day.

This Coupon Saves You $3.00 or $3.75

I enclose two dollars. Send me at once, transportation charges fully prepaid, the complete eleven-volume "Marden Inspirational Library," 3348 pages, bound in CLOTH / SILK and enter my name for a full two-years' subscription to SUCCESS MAGAZINE, to include the Christmas Number. I promise to remit two dollars each month until I have paid $10 for the cloth binding / $12 for the silk binding

Name .....

Address .....

City and State .....

Occupation .....

SUCCESS MAGAZINE, Dept. Q 29-31 E. 22d St., N. Y.

The most successful business men, statesmen, professional men, educators and executives have these volumes as part of their permanent libraries. Many of them have purchased hundreds of volumes for presentation purposes to their employees and best friends.

Nearly a million copies are now circulated all over the world, translated into many tongues.

Those who read them are spurred to their highest endeavor, urged forward to bring out the very best and to make of themselves the utmost possible.

Ministers, teachers, educators, orators, writers, professional men find them invaluable as ready reference books, teeming as they are with life stories of the world's great successes. You, too, want them.

There are eleven volumes in this set, each volume complete in itself. The titles are as follows: The Optimistic Life; The Young Man Entering Business; Secret of Achievement; Getting On; Pushing to the Front; Be Good to Yourself; He Can Who Thinks He Can; Peace, Power and Plenty; The Miracle of Right Thought; Rising in the World; Every Man a King.

You Will Be Interested In

Wanted—A Man.
Dare.
The Will and the Way.
Rich Without Money.
Choosing a Vocation.
The Man With the Idea.
Decision.
Love as a Tonic
The Born Leader.
Eight Hundred and Ninety-Six Kinds of Liars.
Be Good to Yourself.
Responsibilities and Power.
Luck, Originality, Initiative.
He Can Who Thinks He Can.
Enthusiasm.
Facts on Common Sense.
Be Brief.
Habit—The Servant or the Master.
Courage—Self-Control.
A Home of My Own.
Promotion—Health.
Art of Advertising.
Keeping Up With the Times.
Friendship and Success.
System and Order.
Starting on Borrowed Capital.
Salesmanship.
Other Men's Brains.
What Is the Matter With Your Help?
What Credit Is Based On.
Dollars and Dimes.
Just Getting Along.
Useful Occupation.
Getting a Situation.
Hints to Young Writers.
How to Talk Well.
The Roll Call of the Great.

These Are a Few of the 400 Idea-full Chapters

Our Celestial Visitor

By SAMUEL PHELPS LELAND, LL.D.

HERE is now visible in our eastern sky in early morning one of r celestial visitors known as com-
s. This one is so near the sun that is especially bright, and to early sers is an object of great interest.
is one of a large family of comets, e behavior of which is very different om the staid and regular planets long which it traverses.

The composition of comets is now ll determined. Their bodies are re-lving masses of fiery gases. The nsity is very rare. In obedience to well-known law, they have a rotary otion on their axes, and a rapid moon through space in their journeys ound the sun. It is difficult, somemes, to compute the periods of their volutions except in cases of those hich have a periodic revolution.
he return of these well-known com-
s can be predicted with certainty.
hese usually bear the names of their scoverers. There is rarely a week ring the year that the sky is clear comets. Our large telescopes have ch a vast range that they explore e heavens, and few objects escape em. It is generally believed that e space beyond the reach of these ant instruments is peopled with yriads of them. Kepler asserted at comets are as numerous in the eavens as fishes are in the ocean.
hey are not confined to our solar sysm, but people other systems as they o our own, and travel their ceaseless urneys around other suns as they do out ours. Some of these journeys re very long ones. One comet was llowed by the Lick telescope more an two years after its discovery.

Do these fugitives have any influnce upon the planets among which ey move? So far as is known no lanet has ever been affected in any ay by the proximity of a comet.
he mass of the comet is so insignifiant, compared with that of a planet, at its attractive influence would not cause the planet to vary in its orbit in any perceptible degree. On the contrary, instances are on record of comets approaching so near to other bodies as to be absorbed in their atmosphere.

The comet now visible in our sky is composed of a nucleus of gaseous matter, with a coma, or head, and a train of tenuous matter streaming from the head known as the tail. These are all luminous, and together make the splendor of the object. Some known comets have tails long enough to reach from the earth to the sun and are millions of miles in thickness. The tail of the great comet of 1843 was estimated to be five hundred and eighty-one millions of miles in length. This is past our comprehension.

It is believed by many astronomers that what is known as the tail of a comet is simply the sun's reflection upon the nebulous matter still present in space. The nucleus passing rapidly through this matter causes waves, upon which the light beams of the sun are reflected, making vast luminous streamers of light of various colors. These assume all manner of shapes. This view is strongly supported by the fact that the tails are always on the opposite side from the sun.

A great deal of superstition among the uneducated people is associated with the appearance of comets. Comets are supposed to portend calamities, wars, famines, and other things connected with human activities. They are also believed to have control of our weather, and the productiveness of our seasons. Science gives no approval of such notions. It is clear that the appearance of comets is as natural as any other like events, and that comets have no influence upon our seasons, nor upon the affairs of men or nations. Crafty men have often employed these superstitions to keep in subjection their ignorant followers.

Seabreeze, Fla., November 8, 1911.

Brander Cushing's Ambition

Continued from page 1225

73 colleges, universities and technogical schools in the United States or the year ending June 30, 1908 that is, for 150,187 students), estinating the average expense at $250 or the year, with a balance remaining f almost $2,000,000 for extra exenses.

Six and two-thirds per cent. inter-st for one year on the cost of a $15,000,000 battleship would provide a four-year college education for the
,000 marines on board.

Six per cent. interest for ten hours n the cost of a $15,000,000 battleship would pay the total expenses of a young man or woman while doing the four years' work for the degree of Bachelor of Arts in the great Univer-ity of Iowa.

Whether your shell hits the target or not,
Your cost is six hundred dollars a shot.
You thing of noise and flame and power,
We feed you a hundred barrels of flour
Each time you roar. Your flame is fed
With twenty thousand loaves of bread.
Silence! A million hungry men
Seek bread to fill their mouths again.

One broadside from a modern dreadnought costs almost $20,000.

"For the fiscal year 1908-9 the ordinary income of the United States was $604,000,000. Of that sum . . . 70 per cent. was spent for past wars and preparations for war. . . ."

One new-type dreadnought of the sort now being constructed for the British navy (which is to be practically duplicated by all the other "Great Powers")—one of these monsters will cost three times as much as all of the noble buildings of the University of Chicago erected up to June 30, 1905; that is, three times as much as all the beautiful halls constructed during the University's first thirteen years of unparalleled activity in building.

The total value of all gifts and bequests received by all the higher institutions of learning in the United States in the year ending June 30, 1908, was $14,820,955; that is $179,000 less than the cost of one first-class British battleship.

If there are forty-five State universities in the United States with a total of 6,750 teachers (150 each) receiving an average salary of $2,000, their combined salaries are less than the cost of one dreadnought.

Five per cent. interest on the cost of one dreadnought would pay the combined salaries of 1,500 country school teachers at $500 per year; or the combined salaries of 750 country preachers at $1,000 per year. (The average salary of a minister in Massachusetts is less than $800.)

It is to be remembered, too, that a battleship is outclassed, out of date and useless within fifteen years after it first glides proudly into the water. But education—the systematic development of the intellectual and social powers and tastes, the ripening of the appetites for the deeper, higher, finer forms of life, charging the soul with knowledge and power for pleasure and achievement—education, which is "to the human soul what sculpture is to a block of marble"—education, in its glorious influences, is immortal.

To be continued

DUTTON'S CHRISTMAS CARDS

By Mail SEND THE KIND OF CHRISTMAS CARDS WHICH HAVE MORE THAN TRANSIENT INTEREST. Dutton's Cards reproduce the world's great art treasures or the sentiments of the most inspiring thinkers, or they give you in the most attractive form the best work of contemporary writers and artists. Send for complete catalogue of Cards and Calendars at once.

Dutton's Florentine Series. Six Fra Angelico Angels and twelve Madonnas in rich gold backgrounds, mounted in folded cover of antique paper with tint to match pearl inlay lined with heavy silk cord. Each 25c; six for $1.20, in envelope.

Florentine Postals. Same design on heavy postcards with gilt beveled edges. Each 5c; dozen 50c.

Christmas Candlelight Series. New designs and text by Mary C. Low. Double folder of extra heavy enameled board tied with ribbon bow. Unusually active work of a favorite designer. Each 75c; dozen $3.50 in envelope.

Christmas Candlelight Postals. Same designs as above on heavy postcards with gilt beveled edges. Each 5c; dozen 50c.

Mary C. Low Christmas Letters. In illuminated lettering on cream antique paper in Christmas envelope with red and gold edges. Dainty and individual. Each 10c; dozen $1.00

Gift Tags. Flower-crowned heads emerging from Christmas stockings. Beveled for tying on. 25c dozen

Postpaid on receipt of price

E. P. DUTTON & CO., 31 West 23d Street, NEW YORK

6 "FIBRSILK" KNITTED TIES $1

In Handsome Christmas Box

Made of pure fine silk in many rich, beautiful colors. Have exceptional brilliant silky lustre and "feel." Equal to any half-dollar tie made. Reversible and washable—will outwear any others. Guaranteed not to wrinkle, shrink or lose their fine color and appearance after washing. These ties are made on our own new patented machines—hence the exceptionally low price. Buy from the maker and save merchant's profit. Send one dollar and we'll ship you all charges prepaid, 6 of these beautiful knitted ties, assorted colors and designs, in a pretty holiday box.

Ideal gift for man or boy. Women also wear them. Absolute satisfaction guaranteed or your money back—positively.

FISHER KNITTING CO.
10 Whitesboro St., Utica, N. Y.
Sample Tie 25 Cents — Free catalog of knit goods — Agents wanted

Unique Calendar
of the Southland
for 1912

The Dixie Book of Days

Entertaining and instructive daily quotations that reveal the romance, folklore, humor, literature, and history of the South.

Distinctly Southern but national in interest

Cover with handsome photogravures; each inside sheet covers one week and has space for notes. Two colors throughout.

Price, $1. Order through your bookstore, or sent by mail on receipt of price.

The Page Publishing Association
Dept. A, 849 Park Ave., Baltimore, Md.

CLASS PIN

Attractive New Catalogue of elegant up-to-date designs, Class and Fraternity Pins, Emblems, Enameled and Jeweled, Class Rings Trophies and Medals mailed free on request. All pins mounted with our patent safety clasp. Work Guaranteed.

PETER PAUL & SON, Jewelers and Stationers
136 North Pearl Street Dept. A. Buffalo, N. Y.
COLLEGE SCHOOL FRATERNITY

Buy the Original
ZIMMERMANN "AUTOHARP"

"The Nation's Favorite" None genuine without our trade mark "Autoharp." A musical instrument adapted to all classes. At all music stores or direct from us. 'Easy to Play, Easy to Buy."

Send for Free catalog. Up-to-date music folio, price 50c, postpaid.

THE PHONO-HARP CO.
East Boston, Mass.

CHURCH BELLS SCHOOL

Ask for Catalogue and Special Donator Plan No. 44
THE C. S. BELL CO. Est. 1858 Hillsboro, Ohio

MANAGER WANTED every city and county, handle best paying business known, legitimate, new, exclusive control, no insurance or book canvassing. C. Phoenix Co., 43 West 34th St., New York

Prizes for Every Boy

Boy Wanted

We want a bright, intelligent boy (over seven and under fourteen years of age) to do a little work for us after school every Wednesday. You can do it easily in your own home neighborhood.

Parents

Your boy is making his life now. The CHRISTIAN HERALD training for him in selling and keeping his small accounts will stand him in good stead in later years. Stand behind him if he wants to earn regular pocket money and many prizes.

The Work

BOYS: The CHRISTIAN HERALD work is manly work. It is also easy. We will tell you how and where to sell copies and secure weekly customers for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Our Free two-color booklet will please you.

No money necessary to start, as we send the first fifty cents' worth Free. In this way we give you the money necessary for buying your next week's supply.

When applying give your full name and address and age

Sales Department, The Christian Herald, New York

A Christmas Gift that will be Appreciated,—
A real desk and a handsome library table combined in the space of one—and at the price of one

No. 352—One of seventy-five designs
Covered by 4 patents

SIMPLY pulling open the drawer provides desk space with non-spillable ink-well and pen groove, with a large roomy drawer beneath the lid for stationery and correspondence. To use desk, nothing on the table need be disturbed. Your choice of seventy-five designs at prices to suit.

Booklet "S" showing complete line on request.

Cadillac Desk-Table — Look for this trade-mark on the underside of desk-lid. It is your protection.

WOLVERINE MFG. CO.
DETROIT, MICHIGAN

The largest parlor and library table manufacturers in the world. Our output is more than "a table a minute."

COMFORT GOOD LOOKS LONG WEAR

$2.75

Ladies, this is a neat, shapely, serviceable shoe for outdoor and indoor wear, the most comfortable style known to the shoemakers of the entire world. Hundreds of thousands of pairs sold yearly. We will supply you through the mail with the genuine United Comfort Juliet and guarantee every part absolutely satisfactory in wear. Best viel kid uppers, selected oak sole of proper weight, flexible damp-proof inner soles, warranted gore, steel arch supporting shank, white drill lining, solid leather counter. Everything the very best, including O'SULLIVAN'S RUBBER HEELS. This is an all the year round shoe and the easiest to fit. Send your size and width. We pay express and take back shoes not in every way satisfactory. Inferior shoes sell in the shops for $3.50. Our price is $2.75

UNITED COMFORT SHOE CO., Dept. A, LYNN, MASS.

$1.00 STOP FRETTING OVER YOUR XMAS PRESENTS

The most desirable, most suitable, and least expensive of all CORRECT GIFTS is a dainty

"LENOX" Combination Xmas Box

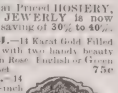
Sent to any address, prepaid and insured for ONE DOLLAR

Contents of Box designed for MEN:
(1) 3 pairs "Lenox" Hose, choice Black, Tan, Navy, Grey, - - - Value $1.00
(2) 1 beautiful "Lenox" All-Silk Flowing-End Four-in-Hand Tie to match, - - Value .50
(3) 1 pair of Guaranteed Suspenders, Value .25
ALL FOR ONE DOLLAR. Total Value $1.75

Contents of Box designed for WOMEN:
(1) 3 pairs "Lenox" guaranteed "Lenox" Satin Finished Lisle Hose, Black or Tan, - - Value $1.00
(2) 1 beautiful corner embroidered Pure Irish Linen Handkerchief, of superior quality, Value .75
ALL FOR ONE DOLLAR. Total Value $1.75

Don't forget to state size and shades desired. We refer to No. 1 Broadway, or any bank in N. Y. City

LENOX SILK WORKS, Dept. 26, 5 W. 31st St., New York
We need good Agents.



LADIES' USEFUL XMAS GIFTS

Our large, exclusive line of Popular Priced HOSIERY, HANDKERCHIEFS, and ART JEWELRY is now off-red. Direct to You, by mail at a saving of 30% to 40%.

Set No. 577 J.—14 Karat Gold Filled 2-inch Bar Pin, with two handy beauty pins to match, in Rose, English or Green Gold finish, the set 75c

Set No. 810J.—14 Karat Gold Filled Hair Sash or Belt Pin set with either Ruby, Emerald, Sapphire, Topaz or Amethyst, but not in Rose, Rose or Green Gold or in Oxidized Silver. 50c

Satisfaction guaranteed or money refunded.

Write for particulars of Special Xmas Outfits at $1.70, $2.00, $2.75, $3.00, $3.75, and our new Free Catalog. Agents Wanted.

C. M. Reynolds & Co., Dept. A, 156 5th Ave., N. Y.

25 NEW HOLIDAY CARDS High Grade Art Embossed cards Gold and Silver. New beautiful designs. Postpaid 10c
PEERLESS CO., 1133 E. 63d St. Dept. 32. Chicago

Through Niagara in a Motor Boat

ON THE afternoon of October 29, Captain Klaus Larsen of Detroit, Mich., for the second time risked his life in a successful attempt to navigate the turbulent waters of the lower Niagara River in a motor boat. Captain Larsen left the Canadian side of the river from a point a few hundred feet below the Falls at eighteen minutes of two o'clock. After having passed through the maelstrom at the point where the stream eddies on its journey to Lewiston, he arrived at the dock there at twenty minutes past two. It took just those thirty-eight minutes to negotiate the six miles of the stormiest waters on the American continent. Captain Larsen's boat, the Niagara, is fifteen feet long, five feet six inches in beam, and has a depth of four feet. She is fitted with a double cylinder marine engine. Just at the point where the captain was skirting the great whirlpool, the little boat seemed to stand perfectly still, then she whirled round and round the vortex until it seemed certain that the daring attempt would end in failure and loss of life. Her engine, however, finally overcame the pull of the water and she was seen to be drawing herself inch by inch out of the zone of danger. In a few minutes, having reached the edge of the whirlpool, she shot out with lightning speed across the calmer waters which surround the point of greatest danger. Seven hundred pounds of sand ballast were used to keep her right side up during the trip. After his successful landing at Lewiston, Captain Larsen announced that he had made his last adventure with the waters of Niagara. When asked if he was through with venturesome motorboating he laughingly said, "No, my next attempt will be to cross the Atlantic, and I think I can do that as successfully as I have come twice through the Niagara gorge."

Captain Larsen on the Edge of Niagara's Whirlpool

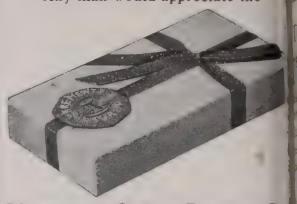
Babyhood in Japan

IN AN article recently published in one of the English daily newspapers, Mme. Y. Ozaki, the wife of the mayor of Tokio, Japan, makes the following interesting statements regarding babyhood and childhood in her country:

Though male children rank first in importance on account of the succession, the birth of a child of either sex is attended with great rejoicing. As soon as the infant is born the relatives and intimate friends are informed of the event, and hasten to offer congratulations to the parents, carrying with them presents such as dried fish, boxes of eggs, cakes, lengths of crepe and silk or cotton for the baby's clothes. On the seventh day after its birth the infant receives its name from the father. There is no end to the variety of girls' names, which may indicate desired qualities, domestic virtues, longevity, good fortune, or may express the parents' hopes.

The great day in the Japanese child's life is the Miyamairi, or the temple visit, which may be said to correspond roughly with the Western christening. The infant, if a boy on the thirty-first day, and if a girl on the thirty-third, is carried to the temple and is placed under the guardianship of a special deity chosen by the parents. For this occasion the most beautiful crepe clothes that the parents or grandparents can afford are used, consisting of a set of three; the outer one being marked with the family crest and gay with silk linings.

Except in dress, no difference is made in the first year or two of a male or female infant's life. White is the color of mourning, and is never used for children. Scarlet is the baby's color, but after the first year the boy baby's clothes are of blue or brown and black striped materials, while the kimono of the little girl is much brighter, with large patterns of birds, flowers and leaves, with a profusion of crimson and pink, which diminishes with age. Childhood in Japan is certainly a very happy time. It never has been necessary to form a Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, and proverbs such as this show how tenderly they are cared for, and how fully their importance is recognized in the household: "Kodakara," or "Children are treasures."



A Missionary Hero Dead

DR. DANIEL KUMLER FLICKINGER, the African missionary hero of the United Brethren Church, died at Columbus, O., August 29. His intimate friend, the editor of the Watchword, writes: "The man who began his career without robustness of body; who twice was given up to die; who crossed the Atlantic twenty-four times, and three times was near death in wrecks and storms; who was in perils on land and water, having traveled upward of 600,000 miles; who was often burdened with cares and was sick in body, carrying the germs of the African fever with him—this man fell asleep at the age of eighty-seven, having outlived his brothers and sisters an average of twenty years." Surely this reads like Paul's description of his sufferings in the eleventh chapter of II. Corinthians. In 1855, Dr. Flickinger sailed for Africa with two fellow-missionaries. After a voyage of thirty-four days, they reached Freetown, Sierra Leone. Dr. Flickinger was the moving spirit in the location and early development of United Brethren missions in West Africa. In all he made twelve trips to the Dark Continent. After being Foreign Missionary Secretary for twenty-eight years, he was elected Missionary Bishop. As an editor and author he was versatile, having published a number of books, the last being Fifty-five Years in the Gospel Ministry.

R. P. DOUGHERTY.

For Christmas

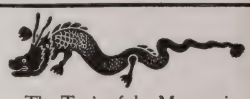
Any man would appreciate the

Krementz Collar Button Se

For a CHRISTMAS or Birthday Gift

Four Krementz One-Piece Buttons—for front and back of neck and sleeves, in an attractive ribbon tied box.

14K Rolled Gold Plate will wear a lifetim



One Dollar the Set

10 K Gold, $4.00 14 K Gold, $6.00

Quality stamped on back of each button and guaranteed. Sent on receipt of price; if not sold by your jeweler or haberdasher. Booklet on request.

Krementz & Co., 117 Chestnut St., Newark, N.

Krementz Bodkin-Clutch Studs and Vest Buttons
Go in like a needle—Hold like an anchor.

The Topic of the Moment is

CHINA

The Book to Read is

JOSEPH KING GOODRICH'S

The Coming China

Just Published by

A. C. McCLURG & CO., Chicago

Professor Goodrich speaks with authority as a resident in the Far East for over twenty-five years.

Illustrated. 12mo. Net, $1.50. Postpaid, $1.62

We would also call attention to Mrs. Conger's important book, Letters from China, now in its third edition. Fully illustrated, $2.75 net.

AT ALL BOOKSTORES

BECOME A NURSE

"The value of the course cannot be overestimated. At first I earned $12.50 a week, but before I had studied six months I gained so much practical knowledge that I received $20 to $30 a week. I have almost doubled my earning power. Mrs. Beatrice Reeve, Chautauqua Nurse, Vancouver, B. C. (Photo.)

Send for a copy of "How I Became a Nurse" and our Year Book explaining method: 248 pages with intensely interesting experiences by our graduates, who mastered the art of professional nursing by the C. S. N. home-study course. Thousands of our graduates, with and without previous experience, are today earning $10 to $25 a week.

TENTH YEAR
The Chautauqua School of Nursing
341 Main St., Jamestown, N. Y.

EARN FROM $21 TO $50 PER WEEK

LEARN ABOUT OUR FREE COURSE IN SHOW CARD AND SIGN WRITING

A Great Opportunity!

We are offering, for a limited time only, a complete learn at home course in show card and sign writing to those purchasing a trial assortment of our new and excellent "Litholia" ready to use Colors. This is a great opportunity for ambitious persons to increase their earning capacity. Good show card writers earn from $21 to $50 per week. Send 4c in stamps for booklets and complete information. Please note that the Show Card Course is not a book of alphabets, but a thorough course in lettering compiled by an expert New York Show Card artist especially for us.

LITHOLIA CO. COLOR CO.
247 West 125th Street, New York

Young People's Societies

The Star of Bethlehem*

THIS time of the year is of all others the most appropriate for our missionary lesson. It is now that we should most fully appreciate what Christ's coming did for us, and should feel moved to share our blessings with those who know him not.

As our notes emphatically remind us, the Christian religion is essentially a missionary religion. The command of its Founder was unequivocal and not to be misunderstood: "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature."

That the apostles accepted these instructions as literal, we can see from the sacred record. Mark says, "They went forth and preached everywhere." Persia, Mesopotamia, Greece, Egypt, Italy, and many other countries, were visited by the ardent champions of the new faith; so that long before our own land was pictured on the map of the world, some of the countries to which we are now sending the Gospel, had already received it. In the mysterious providence of God many of the seeds so spontaneously sown were suffered never to come to fruition. Let us be thankful that the harvest crowned a few of them, and that through the nations so blessed the Christian faith has descended to us. During the second century, Justin Martyr wrote: "There is no people, Greek or barbarian, or of any other race, among whom prayers and thanksgiving are not offered, in the name of the crucified Jesus, to the Father and Creator of all things." Indeed, it is claimed by some historians that one-twelfth of the population of the Roman Empire at the close of the second century were at least nominally Christian. By the commencement of the fourth century, when Constantine had accepted Christianity, the whole Roman world had become officially Christian.

"Persecution," says the proverb, "is the life of the Church." As soon as matters begin to run smoothly from any cause, effort ceases, and the tendency, unless strong measures are taken to correct it, is downward. Thus it was with Christianity at this time. All missionary effort was suspended. An enormous mass of heathenism was injected into the Church because of its great popularity, and the labor of its pastors was directed toward the instruction of this new and dangerous element. Add to this that Christianity became a road to political preferment; that demoralizing wealth and power began to flow in upon the Church, and that bickerings over unimportant theological questions tended to divide it, and it is easily seen that the missionary idea was bound to decline.

Amid the general neglect, still a few great names appear to brighten this period. Ulfilas, St. Patrick, Columba, Gallus, Boniface, Cyril, Methodius and others worked among the distant tribes during the period from 300 to 900, and to their efforts the conversion of our own ancestors was probably due.

Turning to the twentieth century time, we may well gather hints as well as alarm from the too successful missionary onslaughts of the Mohammedans throughout the Orient. "Every Mohammedan," says a Christian traveler, "is a missionary."

Let that be our attitude. Let us make the spirit of Christ and his apostles ours, and, as fiercely as do these Eastern believers in a corrupted and defective faith, endeavor to promote our Master's cause. If we cannot go in person to distant lands to spread the light of his Gospel, we may at least help those who have gone, with our money and our prayers.

*Topic of the Epworth League for Sunday, December 10. TEXTS: Matt. 2: 2; Luke 2: 15.

Source of Strength*

THIS is a practical and literal age. Scientific proof is demanded for everything, and the foundations of all beliefs must be solidly laid in some obvious and tangible form. Therefore it is not strange that the cry is loudly raised for a National Health Bureau, since health is virtually at the root of national greatness; that schools and colleges are establishing courses of health-study to a degree hitherto unknown; and that the fact is coming to be recognized that a sound physical constitution is one of the logical sources of all strength, mental and spiritual.

"A sound mind in a sound body" is a maxim as old as philosophy itself, and most of us will admit that any one who is physically disordered is likely to view life through a distorted medium; to fail in temper and unselfishness; and to be a burden rather than a help to his family and to his community.

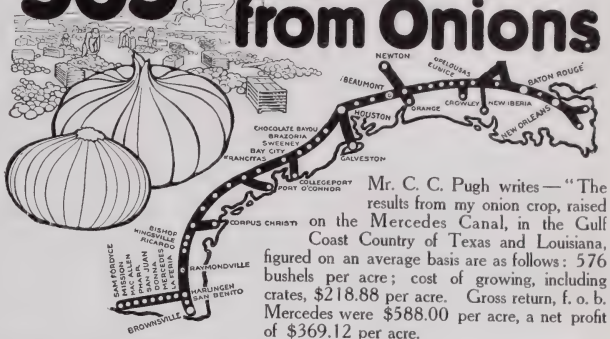
It is true that there have been wonderful invalids, whose mental and spiritual achievements have astonished the world; but the proportion of those who have thus risen above their infirmities is very small. Therefore, if we wish to be strong, physically, mentally and morally, let us take no risks with our health.

For the healthy, normal human being is, in spite of notable exceptions, the one most likely to possess that wonderful quality universally known as common sense.

Why it should be so called seems mysterious, for it is really uncommon. If everybody possessed it, everybody would be religious; for a true, honest religion is a prime mark of common sense, which simply means the power of distinguishing the right and proper from the false and foolish. The man who perceives the hand of God in human history; who recognizes the perfect fitness of God's Word to meet human needs and the wisdom of bowing humbly to all its requirements—that man shows in the highest degree "saving common sense."

Even the most skeptical of modern scientists, belonging to the school which in the last generation denied the possibility of any supernatural agency in mundane affairs, have come to see and acknowledge the logic and the comfort of worship and of prayer. These supply the strength which can, like the sturdy staff of the Alpine climber, support the weakest of us as we toil up the hard steps of life.

But it is not enough to know that strength lies in Christ, and that Scripture-reading and prayer will bring us this strength. We must practise our belief. No matter how heavily our business and our pleasure draw upon our time, we must save our daily hour for our Saviour. Rise earlier, if necessary, in order to get it. Use a part of your luncheon-time for it. At whatever sacrifice, secure it. You must see, in the light of modern research, the need of caring for your physical health. That is essential to the best development of your soul; but even more essential is the study of God's Word and regular daily periods of communion with him.



*Christian Endeavor Topic for Sunday, December 10. TEXT: Col. 1: 9-13.

STRENGTH AND TOIL

FOR toil that is medicine for woe,
For strength that grows with every lifted cross,
For thorns, since with each thorn a rose did grow,
For gain that I have wrongly reckoned loss,
For ignorance, where it were harm to know—
Teach me to thank Thee, Lord.

MAY RILEY SMITH.

$369 net per Acre from Onions

Mr. C. C. Pugh writes—"The results from my onion crop, raised on the Mercedes Canal, in the Gulf Coast Country of Texas and Louisiana, figured on an average basis are as follows: 576 bushels per acre; cost of growing, including crates, $218.88 per acre. Gross return, f. o. b. Mercedes were $588.00 per acre, a net profit of $369.12 per acre.

Has not Mr. Pugh a message for you? It's a message most any grower in the could send you, for down there men make good. Why do you stay in the city, cooped up in factory or shop waiting for a younger man to get your job? Don't you realize that in the city your salary or wages stop when you quit work?

Gulf Coast Country of Texas and Louisiana

In the Gulf Coast Country of Texas and Louisiana the whim or malice of no boss will jeopardize your income. When you are ready to turn the reins over to a younger man you will be able to take life easy. Why not lead a healthful, outdoor life on your own farm and put money in the bank.

Investigate This Wonderful Country

The trip down there, via the Frisco, is worth the little cost of going. On the first and third Tuesdays of each month, round trip fares, via the Frisco Lines, to the Gulf Coast Country of Texas and Louisiana are very low. From Chicago, $37.50; from St. Louis and Kansas City, $32.50; Birmingham, $37.50; New Orleans and Baton Rouge, $20.00 or less. To many points fares are even less.

The Frisco Lines operate splendid, electric lighted, all steel trains, daily, from Chicago, St. Louis, Kansas City, Birmingham and New Orleans. Every day of the year these trains carry through cars to the Gulf Coast Country, and on excursion days tourist sleepers.

FRISCO LINES

Three Splendid Books FREE

One on the mid-coast country of Texas, one on the lower irrigated sections of the Rio Grande Valley, and one on Louisiana. They show scenes in actual colors, and describe the country and crops, giving personal statements by men who have gone there and made good. Write for your free copies today while you think of it.

A. HILTON, General Passenger Agent, Frisco Lines, 1426 Frisco Bldg., St. Louis, Mo.

MUSIC TAUGHT FREE

Home Instruction

We want to advertise and introduce our home study music lessons into all parts of America, and will give you absolutely free instruction if you will simply recommend the INTERNATIONAL INSTITUTE to your friends after you learn to play. We successfully teach Piano, Organ, Violin, Mandolin, Guitar, Cornet, Banjo, Cello and Sight Singing. You may not know our note from another; yet, by our wonderfully simple and thorough method, you can soon learn to play. If you are an advanced player you will receive special instruction. Our lessons are sent weekly. They are so simple and easy that they are recommended to any person or little child who can read English. Photographs and drawings make everything plain. If you accept our free tuition offer you will be asked to pay only a very small amount (averaging 14 cents a week) to cover postage and necessary sheet music. We have successfully taught others and we can successfully teach you. Write today for our Free booklet, which explains everything. It will convince you and cost you nothing. INTERNATIONAL INSTITUTE OF MUSIC, 98 Fifth Avenue, Dept. 156 E. New York.

"DON'T SHOUT"

The MORLEY PHONE for the DEAF

makes low sounds and whispers plainly heard. Invisible, comfortable, weightless and harmless. Anyone can adjust it. Over One Hundred Thousand Sold. Write for booklet and testimonials THE MORLEY CO., Dept. 754, Perry Building, Philadelphia

AGENTS

Make $30 per Wk. This AWL

news a lock stitch like a machine. Best thing ever made for repairing Harness, Shoes, etc. A dozen exclusive features. Demand is immense. Sales astounding. Roy Sage writes "Rec'd Awl today sold 5 in 15 min." L. Perrine says "Sold 9 on way home with sample." Lowest price, biggest profit, greatest value, quick sales. Drop everything and write for sample and instructions. ANCHOR MFG. CO. Dept. 834 DAYTON, O.

9 CORDS IN 10 HOURS

BY ONE MAN with the FOLDING SAWING MACHINE. It saws down trees. Folds like a pocket-knife. Saws any kind of timber on any kind of ground. One man can saw more timber with it than 2 men in any other way, and do it easier. Send for FREE illustrated catalog No. A6 showing Low Price and testimonials from thousands. First order gets agency.

FOLDING SAWING MACHINE CO.
157-163 West Harrison St. Chicago, Illinois

25 CHRISTMAS POST CARDS All Different in Gold & Beautiful Colors Regal Mfg. Co., Desk 8, Battle Creek, Mich. 10c

Plan includes Free Red Letter Looking toward Christmas Teachers Bible for you

Sunday School Teachers and your classes of boys are—many of you—engaged at this time of the year in collecting a little money with which to bring Christmas Happiness and Good Cheer to many families whose great need is known to you.

The Christian Herald has a "team-work" plan for your class of boys which is simple in execution and easy of accomplishment.

While you need no money to put it into operation, the plan will very materially help your Christmas Class Fund.

When writing state how many boys in your class, also their average age.

Address: Dept. L, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York

THE MARKET BELL

SWEET from his pipe the piper drew
A sound that ravished all men's ears,
And soared ethereal to the blue
Wherein the skylark disappears.
The listening throng, or grave or gay,
Were hushed beneath the music's sway.

When sudden, on the silver notes,
A loud, discordant clamor fell;
A shout arose from eager throats:
"The market-bell! The market-bell!"
Swift rushed the audience from the place;
The piper piped to empty space.

A bitter story this; antique,
And full of cynic irony.
The keen-edged humor of the Greek,
Hath it no sting for thee and me?
Or glad, or wise, or sad, or fain,
Dear Nature wooes us not in vain.

Her mystic measures round us roll;
We sit in silence at her feet;
And, awed and thrilled, we own control
As potent as, alas! 'tis fleet.
For list! for hark! we know it well—
Earth's loud, imperious market-bell.

MARGARET E. SANGSTER.

Dress Better at One-half the Cost

NEWAY SYSTEM DOES IT

We sell you direct goods by the yard. Garments cut out to your measure ready-to-stitch. Garments cut to your measure ready-to-wear. Fill out the coupon below, mark X before the lines you are interested in, and a Style Book and samples of goods will be sent.

COUPON

.... Ladies' Dresses ..... Waists
..... Children's Dresses ..... Muslin Underwear
..... Skirts ..... Petticoats
Name .....
Street and No. .....
City ..... State .....

Satisfaction guaranteed or money refunded. Agents who can furnish A1 references wanted for unoccupied territory.

ST. LAWRENCE MILLS, Box 68, Ogdensburg, N.Y.

DE GRAFF POULTRY-FARM AMSTERDAM, N.Y.
STOCK & EGGS FOR SALE
PLEASE SEND FOR MY CATALOGUE
BEST RHODE ISLAND REDS IN AMERICA
FINEST POULTRY BOOK IN AMERICA

These trade-mark crisscross lines on every package
Cresco Grits and Barley Crystals BREAKFAST AND DESSERT CEREAL FOODS
FOR CASES OF STOMACH, INTESTINAL, KIDNEY AND LIVER TROUBLES
Delicious foods for sick or well. Ask your physician, Leading Grocers. For book or sample, write FARWELL & RHINES, WATERTOWN, N.Y., U. S. A.

ORNAMENTAL FENCE
25 Designs—All Steel
Handsome, cost less than wood, more durable. Don't buy a fence until you get our Free Catalogue and Special Prices.
We can save you money.
Kokomo Fence Machine Co.
499 North St., Kokomo, Ind.

10000 CHURCHES USE THE THOMAS INDIVIDUAL COMMUNION SERVICE
DOES YOUR CHURCH?
Send for list of churches and Special Introductory Offer. Outfit sent for trial.
THOMAS COMMUNION SERVICE CO., Box 125, Lima, Ohio.

BIBLE READ THRU IN A YEAR
You can do it, and is it not your duty to try? Send stamp for information and plan that makes it pleasant and possible to Rev. C. EDWIN WOODMAN
Bowdoin College, Brunswick, Maine

A Valuable Aid to Beauty is a clean, healthy scalp, and a fluffy, glossy head of hair. Send 10 cents for a package of American Beauty Shampoo Powder, and be convinced.
Atkins Chemical Co., 103-107 East 125th St., New York City

PATENTS How to GET Every Dollar Your Invention is Worth.
Send 8 cents stamps for new 128 page book of Vital Interest to Inventors.
R. S. & A. B. LACEY, Dept. 36 Washington, D. C.

MUSIC LESSONS FREE AT YOUR HOME Write Today for our Booklet. It tells how to learn to play Piano, Organ, Violin, Mandolin, etc. Beginners or advanced pupils.
American School of Music, 63 Lakeside Bldg. Chicago, Ill.

For Developing and Printing You will save money by writing me for prices. Developing 10 cts. per roll. Prints, 3 cts. up. Send two films for FREE prints.
H. A. CLAUK, 3 Plaza, BROOKLYN, N. Y.

Health Culture 25c. for six months "On Trial." $1.00 a Year. 15 cents a number.
HEALTH CULTURE, 65 St. James Bldg., New York.
How to Get and Keep Health Without Drugs.

WOULD you win Souls to Christ, or comfort the sorrowing? Then send 10 cents for fifty assorted leaflets, or 300, no two alike, for 50 cents.
M. E. Munson, Pub., 77 Bible House, New York

Enthusiasm in Peace Circle Work

INTEREST in CHRISTIAN HERALD Peace Circles grows enthusiastic. Already many who are interested in the CHRISTIAN HERALD Peace League Movement have introduced Peace talks in their pulpits, schools, Sunday Schools, church societies and homes.

It is especially gratifying to learn that such a large percentage of CHRISTIAN HERALD Peace League workers are teaching peace principles in the schools. The brotherhood of man can with all ease be taught to Young America. Their country has stood for it from the first. All nationalities have come and found welcome here. The true American is a model for the citizens of the federation of the world, as his country is for a world government. To help bring about federation is the duty, the opportunity, the high privilege of the schools.

For the convenience of those who are interested in this patriotic work, full instructions will be sent by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD free on application by letter or postal. These instructions contain all the necessary information regarding the temporary and permanent organization, adoption of constitution and by-laws, duties of the various officers, and the order of business for the conduct of the regular semi-monthly meeting of the Circle.

All the necessary literature for the work of these Circles will be supplied by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD free. Our peace correspondence this week is very large. We quote from a few of the letters showing the extent and influence of the work.

I am very much interested, and agree with you that our American nation should tirelessly work for Peace.

We have wiped out slavery; we must put our shoulders to the wheel and blot out war.
Minnesota. A. J. SUNDAHL.

Please send me by return mail your printed matter on Peace. We would like to introduce the subject at our School Board meeting.
Colorado. F. FITZEL.

Please send me your Peace literature. I am a teacher and I am thinking to use the literature in your Peace pamphlets as an opening exercise. MRS. DARDEN.
Mississippi.

I presented THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Peace literature to the Pastor's Union Meeting to-day at Maryville; the members passed a motion expressing themselves as favoring the movement. Professor Henry M., a member of the Missouri School faculty, will organize a Peace Circle and report. ADAM KORN.
Missouri.

Kindly send me the needed information for organizing a Peace Circle. Though somewhat tardy in beginning my work, this is the best season in my country. I am more and more impressed with the Peace Movement and world conquest for Christ. We may call our Circle "World Conquest and Peace Circle." Thanking you for your kindnesses, I am,
J. J. BURLEY.
Business Manager, Northwest Chautauqua Assembly.

Please send me CHRISTIAN HERALD Peace literature. I would like to give a special service in my church on this subject. J. J. GIDEON.
Oklahoma.

Kindly send me Peace literature; I am greatly interested in the Peace Movement and can help by teaching its principles to my own children.
Kansas. MRS. ARTHUR WARD.

Please send some of your free leaflets and literature by return mail. I am a school teacher, and wish to instil into the hearts of my children the ideas and theories of peace.
New York. ADA E. LENNOX.

I am a public school teacher, I have thirty-one boys and girls in my charge. I should like to teach them modern doctrines of Peace on earth, good will to men. I want to see to it that my pupils are a power for good in the world when they grow up to be men and women. Count me a member of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Peace League.
Maryland. SARAH R. MILLER.

Obedient to the call which came to us through the printed matter you so kindly mailed to our address, we have organized a Home Peace Circle, and have given it the name of our "Robertson Heights," which is located in beautiful and picturesque Southern Ohio, in the shadow of our little Alps. The writer, having been made leader and historian of the Circle, will briefly acquaint the National Circle with the "mountain top" where we have planted our Peace Banner; whence its light extends ten miles around. Robertson Place has been the home of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD and Chautauqua organizations from the beginning of their existence; and from it copies and subscriptions to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD have gone out to all parts of the United States and beyond. It will be our pleasure, at all times, to affiliate with local as well as national organizations. As a member of the School League for International Understanding, and a member of the American Peace Society, it also gives me great pleasure to thus have the privilege of being identified with THE CHRISTIAN HERALD'S greatest of all movements, that of bringing the peace sentiment to the masses of intelligent people everywhere, and believe me
Very truly yours,
MARGUERITE ANDERSON,
Historian Robertson Heights Peace Circle.

In looking for appropriate material for the meetings of our Christian Endeavor Society I came upon your programme for your CHRISTIAN HERALD Peace Circles. I shall be much pleased to receive a copy containing the Hon. D. J. Brewer's address; would also like the pamphlet setting forth the organization of the Peace League Circles. EDWIN E. GRAY.
Iowa.

I am in sympathy with your great Peace Movement. I think more than one Circle could be organized here in Valhalla, and I am sure much good could be done and the work of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD could be carried into new fields and much good could be done.
New York. F. D. ADAMS.

Please send to my address CHRISTIAN HERALD Peace literature for the purpose of helping to inspire the children to love and work for peace. This is, I think, the greatest movement in civilization. REV. J. W. STILE.
Tennessee.

Please send me CHRISTIAN HERALD Peace pamphlets. I will distribute them to the ministers here. We have six or seven churches in our town, and I think they will all help in this great movement. E. S. TIMBERLAKE.
Arkansas.

Will you furnish me the information necessary for the organization of Peace Circles? I am a veteran of the Civil War, but wish to do more in the interest of Peace than I did on the field of battle. C. M. DICKINSON.
Michigan.

I feel much interested in your Peace Circle Movement and if your secretary will send the Peace literature and organization leaflets I will surely see if we can organize a Peace Circle here on the extreme limit of the United States to the Southwest. GEORGE P. HALL.

Programme

Roll Call.
Officers' Reports.
Reading of the Minutes.
Unfinished Business.
Reading of Matter from Headquarters and General Discussion of the Topic, "How Far Has the World Progressed Toward Peace?"

A booklet bearing this title, and containing questions and answers on some of the most noteworthy achievements in enforcing International Peace, will be forwarded to all Peace Circles and to any one interested in the cause of peace for the nominal sum of five cents to cover postage.

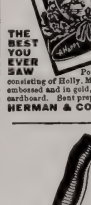
Songs, recitations, refreshments, announcement of next place of meeting, rally and disband.

The Official Vote in Maine

SO MANY conflicting reports appeared in the newspapers relative to the vote for and against Prohibition in Maine that THE CHRISTIAN HERALD communicated with the Attorney-General of the State on the subject and received the following reply:

AUGUSTA, November 9, 1911.
The Christian Herald, New York City.

Replying to yours of the 3d, relative to the vote of the recent election in Maine, I beg to say that the vote stands as follows: 60,095 against the retention of the prohibitory amendment and 60,853 in favor of the retention of such amendment, giving a majority of 758 for the retention.



Yours very truly,
W. R. PATTANGALL,
Attorney-General.

This is the most astonishing and wonderful clo offer ever made. We openly challenge any firm to equ
SEND $1.00 deposit, mention No. X-11, give measure over vest, waist measure trousers, length of inseam and height and weight, and w navy blue wool serge suit and extra pair of elegant fancy striped worsted trousers and fine safety razor by express subject to examination at the express office, you to pay the balance, $3.95 and express charges, after you examine the clothes and find them perfectly satisfactory, a perfect fit, the greatest clot bargain you ever saw, and equal to any suit and o trousers you ever saw at $10.00 to $12.00, and at any suit as there is in your neighborhood regardless of otherwise we will promptly refund your $1.00. Orde outfit today or send for our big cloth sample book (FR and ASK FOR BOOK NO. 27) which contains 100 fine cloth sa of ready made suits at $4.85 up, trousers 98c up, overc $4.98 up, slip on raincoats $4.50, cravanettes $5.00, complete stocks of cold weather clothing, such as fur c duck, corduroy and sheepskin clothing, sheep lined and all kinds of men's and youths' clothing. Order the fit or write for the sample book No. 27 today. Do it.
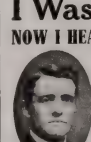
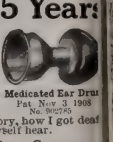
If you need MEN'S FURNISHING GOODS send OUR CATALOG OF MEN'S FURNISHING GOODS. Fleece lined underwear ribbed heavy underwear 39c, sweaters 98c, and wholesale pric hats, caps, gloves, shirts and every kind of apparel for men and
JOHN M. SMYTH CO. 150-162 West Madison St., CHICA

25 Christmas Post Cards 10





THE BEST YOU EVER SAW
25 of the Best Christmas Post Cards ever sold for 10c. All different, consisting of Holly, Mistletoe, Christmas Bells, etc., with Scriptures. Son embossed and in gold, all are lithographed in many colors on a good quali cardboard. Sent prepaid with our large catalogue and special offer, all for
HERMAN & CO. 2430 North Halsted St., Dept. C 324, CHICA

6 Pairs $1 Post paid

"ECO" Re-inforced Stockings f Women and Children genuine Ir Linen Heel and Toe; adds 100 per ce to wear. Black and Tan, 6 pairs f $1. We are manufacturers and s direct at actual wholesale mill pric best values in America.

SPLENDID CHRISTMAS GIFTS
Men's Silk Lisle, $1.25 half doze
Men's Pure Silk, $2.70 half doze
Women's Silk Lisle, $1.50 half doze
Women's Pure Silk, $3.00 half doze
Black and Tan Babies' Stockings, 6 pa for $1.00. White, Black or Blue. O color to a box. Postage Paid.
Free: A Gem Skirt Marker, val 35 cents, with each order.

"ECO" HOSIERY MILLS
248X Chestnut Street, Philadelphia, P

I Was Deaf 25 Years NOW I HEAR WHISPERS

G. P. WAY

Medicated Ear Dru Pat. Nov 3 1908 No. 902760
with this artificial EAR DRUM in my ears. I never feel them—they are perfectly comfortable, and no one sees them. I will tell you the true story, how I got deaf and how I made myself hear.
Artificial Ear Drum Company
Address GEO. P. WAY, Manage 2 Adelaide Street, Detroit, Mich

FOR 75 CTS.
We will send you Postpaid a Box of Finest Writing Paper 24 Sheets and Envelopes stamped with any 2-Letter Monogram.
JACCARD'S Jewelers, St. Louis
Write for Our Grand Catalogue

Christmas Presents

FOR CHRISTIAN HERALD SUBSCRIBERS

The following articles are selected from THE CHRISTIAN HERALD GUARANTEED PREMIUM LIST as being especially desirable at this season for Christmas Presents. A little effort on your part will secure the new subscribers required to secure any of the presents.

RELIABLE WEATHER HOUSE

Given Free as a Premium to Old Subscribers for Securing One NEW Subscription to The Christian Herald at $1.50. Or Sent with One Renewal for $2.00

The artistic little weather house shown here is made in Germany and especially imported for us. It perfectly fills all the requirements of a thermometer and barometer. If the weather is going to be fine the children will appear at the door; if the weather is going to be bad the children will go indoors, and the old lady will come out dressed for a storm. While the construction is very simple, the barometer is thoroughly reliable and accurate. The changing positions of the children and the old lady will be a source of constant interest to all members of the family. Postage, 15 cents extra in either case.

KID BODY BISQUE DOLL

Given Free as a Premium to Old Subscribers for Securing Two NEW Subscriptions to The Christian Herald at $1.50 each. Or Sent with One Renewal Subscription for $2.75

This is one of the most charming and life-like dolls a little girl could own. She is twenty inches high, has genuine bisque head, beautiful brown eyes that open and shut, and curly golden hair. The body is made of best white kid, thoroughly sewed, and has especially constructed jointed hips, which make it possible for dolly to sit or lie down in perfect ease. Packed in a strong box and sent by express at receiver's expense. Weight, 2½ pounds.

Mirroscope

IMPROVED 1911 MODEL

THE GREAT HOME ENTERTAINER

Given Free as a Premium to Old Subscribers for Securing Twelve NEW Subscriptions to The Christian Herald at $1.50 each, with a choice of Electric, Gas or Acetylene Illumination. Or sent with One Renewal Subscription for $10.00

The scene depicted is becoming a common one since the perfection of the wonderful Mirroscope, which enables children as well as adults to show post cards, newspaper clippings, magazine pictures, and photographs, in all their natural colors upon a screen or sheet by means of a strong reflected light.

This model Mirroscope is a handsome machine made of high-grade steel throughout, with a beautiful oxidized coppered surface. The lenses are ground from the best quality imported flint glass, and are 3½ inches in diameter, and both lenses can be readily taken out for cleaning and polishing. The reflectors are the important part of the Mirroscope. Each machine has two genuine brass parabolic reflectors, heavily silver plated, instantly detachable for polishing. The parabolic reflector is the only scientific reflector, and is used in searchlights.

The Mirroscope may be had in three styles of illumination, Electric, Gas, and Acetylene.

The Electric Illumination is made by two 50-watt tantalum lamps, with twelve feet of lamp cord and attachment plug.

The Gas Illumination is provided with two standard size gas mantles with six feet of cloth-covered tubing.

The Acetylene Model has a practical carbide generator which is included without additional charge. All machines are protected by an air chamber which keeps the machines cool and enables them to be easily handled. The machines never get hot. Each machine is supplied with two adjustable card holders, which allows cards to be held in any position. The machine is packed neatly in a strong carton, guaranteed against breakage—sent by express at receiver's expense. Weight 9 pounds.

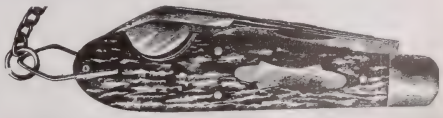
HANDSOME SET—TWO NUTCRACKERS and TWELVE PICKS

Given Free as a Premium to Old Subscribers for Securing One NEW Subscription to The Christian Herald at $1.50. Or Sent with One Renewal Subscription for $2.20

This handsome premium furnishes a useful and desirable combination of two nutcrackers and twelve nut-picks. They are made of high-grade steel, nickel plated. They have ornamental handles, and come packed in an attractive wooden case. Postage, 30 cents extra in either case.

SOLID SILVER THIMBLE

Given Free as a Premium to Old Subscribers for Securing One NEW Subscription to The Christian Herald at $1.50. Or Sent with One Renewal Subscription for $2.20



This solid silver Thimble has a pure gold band, highly polished and embossed, as shown in the illustration. It is a full size thimble with thick walls, guaranteeing it to be thoroughly serviceable for the hardest kind of use. Postage, four cents extra in either case.

BOY'S POCKET KNIFE

Given Free as a Premium to Old Subscribers for Securing One NEW Subscription to The Christian Herald at $1.50. Or Sent with One Renewal Subscription for $2.00

Boys, this is one of the best pocket knives ever made. The blades are made of steel imported from Sheffield, England. They are hand-forged and ground, and the famous "Shur-Edge" quality guarantee goes with every knife. The staghorn handle has a special cut-out near the end of the large blade, making it easy to pull the blade open without breaking the finger nails. The 18-inch chain is nickel-plated, highly polished, and makes the loss of the knife almost impossible, as it has a special button fastener at the end. Sent postage prepaid for only One New Subscription. Postage free.

Address THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK CITY

THE BEST Christmas Present for $1.75

What other Christmas Present costs so little and means so much?

Fifty-two Crowded Numbers

The Youth's Companion

ON JANUARY 1, 1912, the subscription price of The Companion will be advanced to $2.00 a year. When subscribing for your family (at the present price, $1.75) why not include two or three of your friends who will enjoy The Companion during the 52 weeks of the coming year? Every number in 1912 will be filled with reading of the most entertaining and helpful kind. There will be nearly 250 complete stories—stories of wild Indian life, stories of life at sea; stories for men and women, for boys and girls; there will be articles by famous writers, among them Lieut.-General Baden-Powell, founder of the Boy Scouts; Sir Harry Johnston, the famous African traveler and hunter; Frank Bullen, British sailor and harpooner; Hudson Maxim, inventor of high explosives; General Charles King, Jacob Riis, Margaret Sangster, Governor Harmon of Ohio, and many others. Subscribe to-day and receive Free the issues containing the opening chapters of

THE CROSS AND THE DRAGON

By RALPH D. PAINE

A serial story of missionary devotion and heroism in the Chinese Boxer Rebellion. It relates the adventures of Jack Langworthy, son of a missionary, who, with two friends, rescued Barbara Ellsworth and her father from the beleaguered compound in which, with other missionaries, they had taken refuge. It is a story which will enlist every reader's interest and sympathy from the beginning.

All Remaining 1911 ISSUES FREE

IF YOU CUT OUT AND ENCLOSE THIS CHRISTMAS PRESENT COUPON (OR MENTION THIS PUBLICATION) WITH $1.75 FOR A NEW SUBSCRIPTION TO THE COMPANION FOR 1912, WE WILL SEND

1. All the Issues for the fifty-two weeks of 1912.
2. All the Issues for the remaining weeks of 1911, including the Holiday Numbers.
3. The Companion's Picture Calendar for 1912, lithographed in ten colors and gold—an extra copy going to every one making a gift subscription.

All for $1.75

Your last opportunity to get The Companion for $1.75. On January 1, 1912, the Subscription Price will be advanced to $2.00. Subscribe NOW—TO-DAY—and save 25 cents! KC 114

THE YOUTH'S COMPANION, BOSTON, MASSACHUSETTS

Christian Herald

SUBSCRIPTION, $1.50 PER ANNUM
PUBLISHED 52 TIMES A YEAR

COPYRIGHT, 1911, BY THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

NEW YORK, DECEMBER 13, 1911

VOL. 34—NO. 50. PRICE 5 CENTS
OFFICES: BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK

Our Mail-Bag

Questions and Answers

J. B. H., Douglass, Kan. I have been told that the Bible tells of a war, yet to come, in which the horses will wade in blood to the bridle bits. . . . If so, where is the passage, and what does it mean?

The passage is Rev. 14: 20. "And the winepress was trodden without the city, and blood came out of the winepress, even unto the horse bridles, by the space of a thousand and six hundred furlongs." It is a figurative description of God's punishment of the wicked. Compare with Joel's prophecy (3: 2, 12, 14) of the final overthrow of the anti-Christian forces in the Valley of Jehoshaphat. See also Rev. 16: 16.

W. L., Seattle, Wash. In what way has it been determined that the burning of the Alexandrian Library is now considered a myth?

All the known historical facts connected with the destruction of the Alexandrian Library are these: It was founded by Ptolemy Soter and managed by Demetrius Phalerus, a learned Athenian exile. It contained, at first, 50,000 volumes or rolls of MSS., and afterward grew to 400,000 volumes or more. Its later managers were Zenodotus, Aristarchus and Apollonius. In Julius Cæsar's time, it was partially burned, but was afterward augmented by the collection of MSS. from Pergamos. It was destroyed in A.D. 391 by fanatics, and not in A.D. 642 by Caliph Omar as is sometimes claimed. The historian Orosius wrote that on visiting the city after the fire he saw only the empty shelves of the great library. The statement that the story of its destruction was a "myth" probably relates to the story of Omar and the Saracens (which is now denied), and not to the actual fact itself.

E. B., McCallsburg, Ia. 1. Where can I get printed copies of the platforms of political parties? 2. What is the name of the comet recently visible in the eastern sky during the early hours of the morning?

1. See the platforms in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Almanac. 2. See Professor Leland's article on the comet on page 1227 of November 29 issue.

Several readers have written commenting on the views on "Ministers' Salaries" expressed by Dr. Jefferson, which were reprinted in this paper. One, signing himself "Church Member," writes: "When you look over many of the church members you will be surprised to find the few that are supporting these ministers. The bread-winner of many a family is not earning what the minister is getting. His family has to eat, drink and be clothed the same as a minister's family. Many hard-working girls and boys are giving each Sabbath all they can afford. The minister has $1,000 per year. There are not over half a dozen in that congregation who have that income. The ministers live in nicer homes than most of their church members. There is more self-sacrifice by church members than the world knows of."

F. T. F., Oshkosh, Wis. 1. Does not the Bible tell us that until Christ's second coming there will always be war? 2. How can we teach "brotherhood" in the public schools, as Dr. Sheldon suggests? 3. Should we, as he says we should, refuse to allow our sons to enlist in the army and navy?

1. It does; but so does it also tell us that there will be sin in the world. This, however, does not absolve us from the duty of doing all that lies within our power to improve existing conditions, and this includes the prevention or minimizing of war by proclaiming the doctrines of the Prince of Peace. 2. "Brotherhood" should be taught in the public schools not by text-books probably or as a regular course, but by every indirect method that can be employed. "Brotherhood" means simply universal love, the smothering of race prejudice and the suppression of selfishness. 3. This question is one that should be left to the individual judgment. No peace-advocate, so far as we know, desires the utter abolition of the army and navy. A small force is likely to be needed to quell disturbances here and there, on land and on sea; but the maintenance of a standing army and navy, far greater than ordinary riots or domestic needs would require, is the matter against which the peace societies are all protesting.

Mrs. A. C., Brooklyn, N. Y. "Who were the three Marys at the cross? Are we to understand the "mother of Zebedee's children" (Matt. 27: 56) and "his mother's sister, Mary, the wife of Cleophas" (John 19: 25) to be the same person? 2. What was the approximate date of the death of John the Baptist?

1. They are believed to have been Mary Magdalene, Mary the mother of James and Joses (wife of Cleophas and sister of Mary the mother of Jesus), and Salome (compare Mark 15: 40; Matt. 27: 56). At one time during the crucifixion, Mary the mother of the Saviour was near at hand (see John 19: 26). 2. It is somewhat difficult to determine with any degree of reliability. The first Passover of Jesus' min-

Continued on last column

The Pilgrim Path*

By ALICE J. WHITTIER

I.

UP the rock-set, age-old pathway, deep-worn by the weight of pain,
In the cool, sweet beauty of morning, bathed of a summer rain,
Surging onward blindly, moon-drawn, far out from beyond our ken,
A tide is ebbing and flowing of the lonely souls of men.
O restless tide of human hearts, sweeping on forever,
Seeking for truth in emptiness, finding fulness never!

II.

GLORY of foam-flecked river dashed into crystal spray,
Grandeur of mountain and forest, with a young bird's roundelay;
Glory of sun and shadow or of white-wreathed, sudden rain
Down gleaming leaf and mighty cliff, to the misty, dreaming plain.
O shining flood from God's own heart, flowing down forever!
Seeking to feed thy children's need, finding answer never!

III.

RUGGED and steep winds the pathway, and the crowding mass toils on
With paper prayers and incense stick, till faith and hope are gone;
Bowing to beast or demon of clay, dark with the dust of time,
To human gods of ancient dreams in the temple's gloom and grime.
O need of body and spirit, seeking, yearning ever!
Groping for gods in hazy dreams, finding fulness never!

IV.

OH, WE of fairer, brighter days than dawn on Omei's Mountain!
We of a straiter, steeper way, washed by costlier fountain—
Find we God in the pilgrim path? Is Christ our very brother?
Do we see His smile in cliff and flower? Or do we look for another?
The love of God! The face of Christ shining on forever!
O joy and might of sacrifice, failing, fading never!

V.

OR do we yet, with the moon-drawn throng, grope in the fog of dreams?
The tiger-crouch by the beast of self, or chase fantastic gleams
Of man-gods—Pride and Ease and Fame—the demons of cringing fear,
Giving to God an incense stick, a paper prayer—or a tear—
O temple bells by pilgrim's path, clang ye on forever?
O droning priests by Form's crude shrine, cease ye droning never?

VI.

YES: they will cease when that lonely heart next us is our very neighbor;
When sacrifice is joined with joy and love is more than labor;
When God is near in the humble Christ and He in each crippled brother,
We shall reach the Golden Summit's crest by helping on each other.
So shall we then be satisfied, growing, growing ever.
Service and love and more of life! Fulness! Joy forever!

* * *

THE foregoing remarkable poem was written by Miss Alice J. Whittier, a missionary located in Western China, after a visit to Gin Din, the Golden Summit of Mount Omei. Omei is situated in the province of Szechuen, and is regarded by the Chinese as sacred. Miss Whittier says of it:

"Every spring and early summer a constant stream of blue-clad folks wend their way up what is known as 'The Pilgrim Path' to Gin Din, the Golden Summit of Omei. Each one carries a little yellow bag of sandalwood and a staff in hand, or perhaps a basket on the back full of incense sticks and paper prayers.

"At each of the temples—and there are 500 of them—they climb the steps, bowing to each idol in turn. These may be of gilt and bright paint and fifteen feet tall, or a stone dog or a tiger, half finished of clay and protruding straw, or perhaps a sacred tree. Each gets its bow just the same, and perhaps an incense stick or some sandalwood is burned, and so on and on, till the top is reached that they call the Gin Din or 'Golden Summit.' Here important questions are settled by casting lots; the 'prayers' are burned and the pilgrim hurries down again, as blind as a bat to all the real wonder and glory of the journey.

"But sometimes they do not go down, but leap from the 'throwing away the body' rock, hoping to be directly absorbed into 'Buddha's glory,' which they think they see when the clouds are below and the sun is just right and throws the spectator's own shadow down on the clouds, where it appears with a halo round its head. Sometimes the halo is double or even triple, and almost as bright as a rainbow."

Our Mail-Bag

Continued from first column

istry is believed to have occurred in A.D. 27. His baptism at John's hands took place immediately before that time. John's imprisonment in the tower of Machærus in all probability began in A. D. 27 and in the first half of that year, but Herod's unwillingness to put him to death may have delayed the climax until the beginning of A.D. 28. Tradition says he was buried in Samaria. Your last question has been repeatedly answered in THE MAIL-BAG.

A. G. B., Slate Spring, Miss. Jesus said that when his Gospel was preached for a witness to all nations, then the end would come. To how many nations has the Gospel not yet been preached?

A very considerable part of the globe is still unevangelized. Thus we may instance Tibet, which is yet practically in the heathen darkness of Buddhism; a large part of Central China, many parts of interior Africa, etc. There are large tracts of territory given over to Mohammedanism, which are still virgin soil for Gospel missionary effort.

E. A. R., St. Louis, Mo. I have been told that a recent discovery, made while exploring and excavating among the ruins of Babylon, shows that Cyrus did not take the city by draining the river Euphrates; but nothing was said as to how the city was taken. Is such a report based on fact? The Bible seems to indicate that the ancient historians are correct.

Herodotus wrote that Cyrus spent two years draining the Diyala to accustom his troops to the greater task of draining or diverting the Euphrates in his projected attack on Babylon. Cyrus' real object—as Professor Hugo Winckler in his recent book (Babylonia and Assyria, Scribner's, New York, publishers) declares—was "to construct a passage through the inundated region, for the Diyala empties at Opis, the terminus of the Median wall." The Babylonian army actually met Cyrus' army between Opis and Sippara and was defeated. Herodotus missed the real point of Cyrus' tactics and misled all the subsequent historical writers on the subject.

Mrs. W. B., Kansas City, Mo. Please publish what "sinning against the Holy Ghost" means. Could it be denouncing spiritualism as being power from the devil, if there really is a power there?

No, it had nothing to do with spiritualism. It is believed to have consisted of ascribing the work of the Holy Spirit to Satanic agency; that is, claiming that the miracles of Jesus were wrought by the power of the Evil One, not by the power of God.

Miscellaneous

Reader, New York. We cannot give attention to anonymous letters.

Mrs. P. D'A., Peoria, Ill. It is a new typographical custom, and without significance. We think the old way the more reverent.

F. L., Jonesville, Wis. Although it is customary for trustees of a church to be members, there are many exceptions to the rule.

A. P. P., Palmetto, Fla. The list of daily penny papers is a very large one—by far too large to include in a MAIL-BAG paragraph. You will find them fully stated in a newspaper directory.

H. W. B., Poughkeepsie, N. Y., writes that the author of the poem "Some Time, Somewhere," was Ophelia G. Browning, daughter of the Rev. William G. Browning, of New York. The poem was written before she was twenty. She wrote many poems and published one volume of verses.

J. B., Lincoln, Neb. When the issue is squarely drawn between obeying God and obeying your father, you must, of course, obey God. On the other hand, the matter of Sabbath labor is a complex question, and many forms of labor seem justified. Jesus indicated this in his teaching and by his example. But first and last and all the time you must be true to your conscience.

Reader, Springfield, Mass. Trial and affliction seem to fall more largely to some than to others, but if we view these visitations in the proper light, we will come to regard them rather as developers and strengtheners of character than as grievous burdens. Paul gloried in his stripes, since they were borne for Christ's sake. So we may, by living in the same spirit, gather renewed strength from our weakness and our trials.

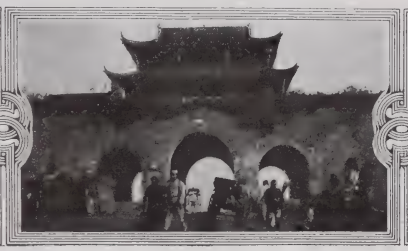
*

THE SERMONS A SOURCE OF HELP

The Christian Herald Almanac and Samantha at Coney Island came to me in perfect order. I am delighted with them. I think I shall spend many happy hours in getting useful information from the almanac and much fun from Samantha. I get much good from the sermons in your good paper. I don't know that I can tell what part of the good CHRISTIAN HERALD I like best. Every page is good to me. May God bless every member of the staff of that paper. MISS DELL RUSSELL.

Nantucket, Mass.

NEW YORK, DECEMBER 13, 1911



THE · CHRISTIAN · HERALD

A WEEKLY ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER FOR THE HOME

Colossal Stone Statues at the Ming Tombs

The Drum Tower at Nanking, China

The Guardian Elephants of the Ming Tombs

ANCIENT NANKING UNDER FIRE

NANKING, city of beauty, of letters, of great antiquity, of thrilling history, has been one of the storm centres of the revolution in China and is reported now to have fallen into the hands of the rebels. In the early part of November it was the scene of relentless massacres, in which the aggressors were the Manchus. The imperial viceroy instigated a search throughout the city for all men who had cut off their queues, signifying their revolt against the Manchus, and all who were found shorn of this ancient symbol were beheaded.

The accounts of the atrocities were sickening and saddening. And they took place at a time when the loyalists were in need of precisely the opposite kind of publicity. Their furious demonstrations and brutal activities indicated that they were, at least in this centre, no more fit than the revolutionists for governmental authority. This massacre was soon followed by a determined attack upon the city by the rebels. Daily reports during the week ending December 3 showed that even while they were losing ground at other points of conflict the revolutionary forces were persistently victorious here.

Nanking has been, for over two thousand years, one of the pivotal cities of Chinese history. Known by different names and ruled by heads of various dynasties, rebuilt more than once from devastation, the old city stands, romantic, picturesque, patiently enduring the new horrors of the dreadful war. The city's first name was Kinling. Under the Han dynasty, which lasted from 206 B.C. to 25 A.D., it was known as Tanyang. The T'ang emperors, ruling from 619 to 907 A.D., called it Keanghan and Singchow. The Ming dynasty began in 1368 and by the first of these sovereigns the city was called the "southern capital," or Nanking. The third of the Ming rulers removed his capital to Peking in the early part of the fifteenth century. The Ming dynasty came to an end in 1644 and since that time the city has been ruled by the Manchus.

In 1853 Nanking suffered severely at the hands of the Taiping rebels. All the national monuments were destroyed; many public buildings were demolished and a large part of the city's great wall torn down. The city was rescued from the Taipings by Tseng Kuofan, who came from the rich province of Hunan to render this service. In commemoration of the deliverance he wrought, a Hunanese is always viceroy of Nanking.

The city is at present the capital of three provinces, Anhwei, Kiangsu, and Kiangsi, and its viceroy is the over-lord of the governors of these provinces. The city itself has a quarter of a million inhabitants. The three provinces ruled by the viceroy at Nanking contain 162,890 square miles and have sixty-four million inhabitants.

The wall about the city of Nanking was originally a gigantic affair. It measured 30 feet in thickness at the base, and was from 50 to 70 feet high. Much of it is still standing, and through a break in its ancient masonry a modern railroad now runs into the city. A second wall encloses an inner city which has been recently inhabited chiefly by the Manchu garrison. The beauty of the surrounding mountains and the alluring mystery of the names of the hills and gates make strange setting and coloring for the grim, distressing tales of the present war. The heaviest fighting of the first day of the final attack was at the gate of the Ming tombs. Batteries stationed on Purple Mountain shelled the city. Tiger Hill bombarded Lion Hill. Fires raged in the inner city. It will be many weeks before the full details of the havoc caused by the siege will be known.

There are at Nanking an arsenal, a naval academy, two large hospitals, one of China's largest and most progressive universities, a theological seminary and other flourishing schools. A Bible Teachers' Training School, modeled after the institution of the same name in New York City, of which Dr. Wilbert W. White is president, was founded by Dr. White during the present year, and began its operations in September. The first great Chinese exposition held after the manner of European and American countries was conducted at Nanking. The exposition buildings were still standing at the beginning of the recent disturbances.

But most interesting and beautiful of all the institutions of Nanking is the marvelous Porcelain Tower. As long ago as the early part of the seventeenth century, Father Semedo, who resided at Nanking between 1613 and 1635, called it "an edifice that ought to be ranked with the most famous of ancient Rome." M. Le Compte, who viewed the pagoda in 1687, declared: "It is undoubtedly the best constructed and noblest building of all the East." These high praises have been reiterated by many tongues and pens in more recent times.

The Porcelain Tower is, perhaps, the original "sky-scraper." It was at first said to be 346 feet high, but this figure has been reduced by severer British mathematics to 236. The body of the walls is built of brick, but the brick is lined within and faced without by beautiful white glazed porcelain slabs. Above the ground floor the whole tower tapers gracefully to the ninth story.

The projecting roof of each story is made of green and yellow porcelain tiles, in alternate perpendicular rows. The tower is octagonal and at each angle on every story is a moulding of larger glazed tiles, colored alternately red and green. From the floor of each story a balcony projects which is enclosed by a light balustrade of green porcelain. Four doors opened upon each balcony from the sides, which face the four points of the compass, their arches ornamented with glazed tiles made in great variety of design and color, representing deities, demons, monsters and all sorts of fanciful creatures.

At the angle of each balcony's roof a dragon is enshrined, and from every dragon's mouth hangs a bell. Above the ninth story is a great cupola covered with shining brass. A gilded ball surmounts the cupola and from this an iron rod stretches still higher. From the point of this rod eight chains are hung to the heads of the dragons on the highest balcony below.

Continued on page 1278

The World-Famous Porcelain Tower of Nanking

THE American Pulpit

A Sermon by

Rev. Charles F. Aked, D.D.*

Copyright by Underwood & Underwood

The World's Eternal Summer

TEXT: Judges 5:31—"Let them that love him be as the sun when he goeth forth in his might."

WHAT a wonderful people those ancient Hebrews were! Deborah is celebrating the assassination of Sisera by Jael, wife of Heber the Kenite, whose hospitality he had accepted and in whose tent he slept in fancied safety. The poet-chieftainess of the triumphant Hebrews brings to a close her war-song with the savage cry, "So let all thine enemies perish, Jehovah!" and passes straightway into this superb aspiration: "But let them that love him be as the sun when he goeth forth in his might." Deborah is conscious of no incongruity. Revenge, treachery, and bloodshed were in no way inconsistent with her fervent prayer. But we have not so learned Christ. The savagery we leave in its own place—an ancient barbarism which the world has outgrown. The beauty of the prayer becomes more intense and beautiful, more full of meaning and grandeur and power when clothed with the Christian spirit.

Light Risen on the World

What definite ideas, if any, had place in the wild soul of Deborah we cannot certainly know. When she prayed, "Let them that love Him be as the sun when he goeth forth in his might," she may have had but little thought, systematized and formal, which plain prose could express. She looked upon the sun in his glory, as she says, going forth in his might. She saw the shades of night retreat before him. Upon the distant mountain peaks she saw the rosy tints of dawn. She saw the unimaginable splendor of earth and sky as the sun-kissed hills proclaimed the coming of the day. She saw the gloom of the valley dissipated by the sun's light and heat. In her own veins the blood flowed more freely for his rising, and the joyousness of the world attested the life of the sun. And she conceived of the Church of God, radiant, splendid, all-conquering, life-giving as the glorious orb of day: "Let them that love Him be as the sun when he goeth forth in his might."

Our ideal of the Church of God should not fall short of that which inspired the song of this savage Deborah, nor should our ambition be less daring than hers. I take shame to myself, and I would to God you did also, when I hear the things which are said about the failing force of religion in the life of to-day. I take shame when I witness the apologetic mood in which men and women find themselves driven to speak of the Christian Church. We wrong ourselves when we give credence to the stories of its waning power. Such craven fears, or, it may be, such malignant aspersions and predictions, grow out of a profound ignorance of facts. People who have never known darkness may be inclined to treat the light with but faint reverence. Why should they be so grateful for the light? They do not know what it is to be without it. But they who are able to form some mental picture of the ages past and gone know that we are what we are because for us the Light has risen and the world moves onward through a broadening dawn. Even through the blinding brilliance of mid-day some sun-spots, specks upon that unfathomable radiance, may be observed. But age by age they who have loved Him have been as the sun when he goeth forth in his might, and darkness has fled at their appearing.

The Gift of the Sunshine

But, really, I ought to have begun with something humbler. Let us think of more intimate things.

The sunshine of these Western lands is very wonderful to me. I often wonder whether a congregation can unite with me in the morning thanksgiving which I cannot help but voice for the beauty of the earth and the splendor of the skies, for the living air and the glory of the day. It is all commonplace to you, and perhaps you see no more than the elementary sense of humor which it has pleased God to give to his Englishman in our story of the sun-worshiper who, visiting London, fell down upon his knees upon the crowded Strand at noon. A solid, stolid Englishman ridiculed his devotions: "The idea of worshiping the sun!" And the sun-worshiper said: "So would you if you ever saw it!" Well, we see it here, and if we do not worship it, I, for one, utterly fail to understand the heart which does not, time without number, go out in worship to Him who kindled its living fires.

Indeed, life is sweet, and a pleasant thing it is to see the sun. "Blessed sun!" exclaims Carlyle, feeling its faintly cheering rays through an atmosphere of London mirk and gloom; "it is sent to all living; and the whole wealth of the Bank of England is not equal to a beam of it!" Why, it is as though real gold were being showered on us. We are all of us the richer for it. Pessimism may be a fashionable disease, and far more fashionable now that Von Hartmann and Schopenhauer have given it that long name than it was when my grandmother called it the sulks. But we are all optimists when the sun shines. The mayor of New York, with a robust common sense which is all his own, wrote to a correspondent who complained that the street cars are not sufficiently heated, telling him to walk to and fro for a month, and at the end of that time he would find his health of body and of temper so much improved that he would be less inclined to grumble at everybody and everything! It is perfectly true. And though the English blood in my veins cries out for the preservation of an Englishman's dearest privilege, the privilege of grumbling at everything and everybody if he can only be happy when he is miserable, it is certain that after a sharp walk in the sunshine one has half forgotten what it was he meant to grumble at next!

And I have seen sunshine, oh, sunshine as splendid as yours, amongst my beloved mountains in Switzerland! You know what cold is and what warmth is. But do you know what warm-cold is? Did you ever live a whole winter through glowing because the frost was so warm? Do you know the wonders of blue ice, pink snow, and forty degrees of frost, while the men skate in panamas and the girls with open parasols? And the splendor of colors in the morning sky: everything in the solar spectrum—red, orange, yellow, green, blue, indigo, violet; at each moment a new combination. And then the sun is up, and the intoxication of it all makes you wonder if you ever lived before. Oh, I understand the prayer: "Let them that love Him be as the sun when he goeth forth in his might."

Sunshine in the Heart

For these things are written parabolically! Where Christ is, there is sunshine. And he who has no sunshine in his heart, he hath not known Christ, neither hath he seen him. Wonderfully did a Hebrew prophet speak of the Sun of Righteousness with healing in his wings. Why wings? What has the sun to do with wings? The metaphor goes back to the Syrian worship of the sun, and doubtless to the cults of a yet more ancient Babylon. The special symbol of the radiant sun-god was the solar disk, with wings issuing from either side to denote his omnipresent energy. This is Christianity. This is religion. And we have not realized the privilege of our high calling if we are not as the sun going forth in his might, if we too do not rise upon the night of gloom and fear with healing in our hearts. For health is contagious as well as disease. Enthusiasm is infectious, as the leader of every moral movement knows. Courage and cheerfulness are communicable by contact. We need a new germ theory of goodness and gladness; a bacteriology of efficiency, vigor, hopefulness, with light and life, not morbid growths and organisms, as the subject of investigation in the laboratories of God. When Alexander called the Great asked Diogenes of the Tub what he could do for him, the misanthrope bade the world-conqueror, "Stand out of my sunshine." What more could he do? And why should he wish to do less? No marvel that Alexander said that if he were not Alexander he would wish to be Diogenes. It is the least you can do—to stand out of the way and let your neighbor feel the sun. And who knows whether, in the long computation of the eternities of God, the most you can do may not be to become for him yourself the sunshine? Let them that love him be as the sun when he goeth forth in his might.

The uses of Scripture are manifold. The suggestions of ancient sage and seer, poet and prophet, are fresh and freshening in every age. Sometimes they are illumined for us by modern science in such a way as would astonish and delight the men from whose great souls they sprang. It is the sunshine which drives the Mauretania across the ocean waste and the Overland Limited across a continent. And the heat from the furnace in your home or from the cheerful coal fire beside which favored persons sit and dream is sunshine, too. Millions upon millions of years ago the sun gave off that heat. Matter having affinity with it caught it, sealed it, preserved it age by age; and now has yielded it as coal, and coal gives back its heat for the blessing of mankind. A thousand million years ago the good sun was laying on the gas for us, preparing for the Christmas hearth the great Yule log. The mighty energy has slumbered in depths of our dark earth; but the science and skill of man have loosed it, and at midnight it is radiant dawn.

And at once you have read the parable. We are in every way debtors to the past. Our liberty has been won for us by heroes dead and gone; our laws have been worked out for us by the empire-builders of the past; women whose hearts bled have cherished the love which has made brutes men and men divine; our religion is the gift to us of martyrs who lived and died for Christ.

> Theirs were the sorrows, and ours be the morrows,
> Bright for their pain, by their struggles made free; and the life which streamed from them into the darkness of their world is the sunshine which floods our homes and our churches and our States and humanity itself. They saw visions and dreamed dreams. They saw the light and whence it flowed. They followed it in joy. Oh, brothers and sisters, children of the prophets and heirs of all the ages in the foremost files of time, will you pay back to futurity the debt you owe to the heroic ages of the past? You do not labor for yourselves. Generations yet unborn and centuries which are to come wait for the sunshine which you shall store up in institutions and laws, in civic purity and national righteousness and personal and private virtue. Your life shall not end at death. Though it seem to you that one day your mightiest achievement shall be but as the fading memory of a winter's day, I declare to you that it shall be more, infinitely and everlastingly more. It shall be, while nature sinks in years, as solar energy, the light and heat and power and glory of this old world. Let them that love Him be as the sun when he goeth forth in his might.

The Skeptic's Pessimism

Our modern science suggests one other application of the ancient words. Generation by generation, nature-searchers have inquired the source of the sun's vital heat, and some among the most learned of our race have sought to calculate the years during which the sun's fires have been burning and compute their probable duration. It was at first supposed that the heat was maintained by ordinary chemical combustion; that the sun was a mass of fire, and that when the coal of which it was composed was consumed, there would be an end of light and heat and life upon our earth. Then the exhaustion of its fires was but a question of time, of relatively short spaces of time, and the end of our world was assured. Next it was supposed that the meteorites falling into the sun could generate sufficient heat to supply its energy. Finally came the theory which until the last year or two has held the field, that the heat of the sun was maintained by its own contraction from a nebular condition. To-day the researches of some of the most brilliant minds in the world into the properties of radium have suggested that there exist in the sun's mass large quantities of radio-active matter, and that, on such a supposition, the sun's age and heat may yet extend into untold millions of millions of years. Within the sun's own self are properties undreamed of in the philosophy of ancient and modern times.

And the analogy still holds good. The end of Christianity has been fixed by the wise of this world. The fires by which its devotion was fed were sentenced to extinction by the inexorable decrees of cause and effect. Vague sentiment, shallow enthusiasm, zeal without knowledge were the sources of its supply.

Continued on next page

* First Congregational Church of San Francisco.

JUDGE NOT

"A DRABBLED, tattered soul,
To match her tattered dress"?
Yes, looking at her now,
No one would ever guess
That she was—long ago—
A sweet-faced country lass,
As innocent and pure
As daisies in the grass.

Not wicked, but just weak—
Just weak and led astray,
To flutter like a moth
Along the Great White Way;
And then, her wings all soiled,
And drabbled in her sins,
Caught in the law's strong net,
Impaled on legal pins.

"Sent up" for many days,
"Mag of the old gray shawl,"
Known by the wrap she'd worn
Since early in the fall.
To-day the cold's intense;
The wind cuts like a blade.
"No shawl?" the matron asks;
"You've pawned it then, you jade!"

"You jade," the matron said,
But when the Christ looked down,
He blessed the heart that beat
Beneath the tattered gown;
For round a shivering child
Poor Mag had wrapped her shawl.
Man seeth but a part;
The dear Christ seeth all.

Akron, O. HARRIET G. CANFIELD.

The World's Eternal Summer

Continued from preceding page

And as these failed, the Church's fires would droop and die, and with them the love and hope kindled by their flames. So the credulous skeptic predicted, and so he threatened the Church. And behold, the Church forever develops within herself new sources of life-giving energy. She shows herself possessed by a recuperative power which promises that though she were dead yet should she live, while her life was the life of the world. Stores of radio-active matter never known to exist before and now only dimly understood are the inexhaustible wealth of the Church. In plain words: the life of the Church forever renews itself. Religion is not a formula but a faith; not a body of belief but an enthusiasm and a passion; not a system but a life-giving spirit. Religion forever embodies herself in new movements, speaks in new language, sets herself to the adjustment of new relations, and declares in the undeniable speech of great deeds that her God is not a God of the dead but of the living.

Religion will not fail, and the Church of Jesus Christ will not fail. But whether there be wealth or vastness of territorial possession or the might of numbers or the pride of pomp and power that build themselves not upon the Rock of Ages, they shall cease. And the Church of God, comforting sad hearts, cheering the downcast, casting out devils, preaching glad tidings to the feeblest of earth's children, is glorious as the sun in the unimaginable splendors of a fadeless noon.

ANVIL SPARKS

..TRYING to get even is always lowering the level.

..THE Lord doesn't love the cheerful giver of offense.

..THERE'S nothing like being at home in the church, and having a church in the home.

..THE sensitive person who tries to avenge all his slights will have little time for anything else.

..THE reason so many men go "broke" is because they do not stay at home when they have money.

..NOBODY likes the man who blows his own horn because he is constantly putting toot and toot together.

..SOME people marry because they do not know much about each other, and afterward are divorced because they do.

..THERE is no use for you to pray for guidance unless you have taken the Lord's bit in your mouth, so that you may feel the touch of his hand upon the rein.

Just a Home Love-Letter

Dear Home Folks:

SOMEHOW, this week, the thought has been coming to us very insistently: How necessary we all are to one another!

Did you ever have that feeling come suddenly upon you just when you were enjoying the pleasantest and most intimate companionship with some dear friend or some loved member of the family? All in an instant, as it were, a sense of inseparableness, of mutual need one of the other, rushes over you, and you feel like holding the loved one with a grip that shall last forever.

Perhaps this feeling comes at a time when, in reality, there is no thought whatever of any separation; yet the very sweetness and helpfulness of the fellowship seem to suggest that it ought to be permanent.

. . .

The longer the companionship, the closer the sympathy, the more intimate and active the intercourse and the cooperation, why, the more earnest is the desire for unbroken fellowship. Thus the workers in any cause in which the hearts are joined come to lean upon one another and draw strength and inspiration, each from the other.

Well, we sat down to write a letter to our Christian Herald home folks, and no sooner did we begin to think of the members of our great family in Christian Herald homes all over the world, sitting, perhaps, about the evening light, with a copy of last week's Christian Herald just opened—the link of union between the home folks and us—no sooner did the thought come to us of what these dear home folks mean to us of sympathy, and fellowship, and cooperation in the Master's work, than we felt that same eager, yearning impulse sweep over us to exclaim, "We want to hold you tighter than ever in the bonds of love and comradeship." So our letter could n't get started until we first yielded to the impulse.

. . .

But we wanted to write something about the home. You know the home is the most sacred place in the world. Oh, yes, it is more sacred, even, than the church. God instituted the home, and hallowed it, long before he did the church. And the home is just as truly his dwelling place as the church—or ought to be. His sweetest and most sacred influences and blessings are for the home, and it is of supreme importance that the home shall be pure and beautiful—the starting place of all that is good, and noble, and useful in the world.

Perhaps it will mean more if we say your home in particular, instead of the home, as an institution in general. The love you have for your home is very definite and personal. You plan carefully what to bring into it and what to keep out of it. It is a pity that in many homes this care is not used. Things are brought in that do not beautify and uplift the home life. Hurtful things are not kept out. But you love your home, and carefully cherish its welfare.

. . .

The Christian Herald comes into your home by your invitation because it brings bright, kind, inspiring influences. It entertains every member of the family, and you are glad when you see your boy or girl take up The Christian Herald and find enjoyment. You know that no hurtful seed will be sown in their minds. You know that, all unconsciously, and very pleasantly, their characters will be strengthened and built up; that, as they see the work for Christ and for humanity that devoted men and women are doing the world over, their own hearts will be fired with enthusiasm for unselfish service. It may not be all at once, but you know the resistless contagion of example and the impressionableness of youth, and you know that your boy or your girl will one day respond to the high challenge of the noble examples which he or she finds from week to week in The Christian Herald. You don't know just how, or when, but, all the same, you are glad when you see The Christian Herald in your children's hands.

. . .

And we are glad. The children—your children—are part of our dear home folks, and The Christian Herald is the Home paper for father and mother, and all the rest. The home is so rightly cherished that nothing can be too good to go into the family circle. We, with your help, are making a very fine paper, but we are never satisfied. There is always better ahead in the beautiful land of ideals, and we are constantly planning and working and seeking inspiration to make The Christian Herald better and better for our home folks. Have you looked over the partial list of the good things promised for next year? In all probability, 1912 will bring you the best Christian Herald you have ever seen. You will enjoy it more and more.

But it is getting late, and we must close. You owe us a letter now, and we shall be glad to hear from you soon. With love to every member of the Christian Herald Family, we are, as ever, yours,

THE EDITORS.

P. S. Don't forget to send your renewal this week. You will comfort us and make the work of our subscription department lighter if you will at once send your renewal for 1912 without waiting until the record clerks are swamped with tardy mail.

THE MEANING OF DEATH

FORTH into Eternity a human soul was suddenly thrust—
And it cowered and shivered,
Naked, alone and afraid;
For all its earthly days had been spent in the lure of lustful senses.

Forth into Eternity a human soul was suddenly thrust—
And it soared and exulted,
Clothed in flaming radiance;
For all its earthly days had been spent in the throes of high endeavor.

MAY DUBOIS HARVEY.

The Great Guilds of China

THE great guilds of China, writes a correspondent of the New York Tribune, are of three different classes. Thus, there are the craft guilds for each species of industry. Then there are the so-called provincial guilds, which embrace landed proprietors, officials, etc. Finally, there are the mercantile guilds, which include associations, not only for every kind of trade, but also of professional men, such as, for instance, the guild of physicians, the guild of architects, the guild of lawyers, and last, but not least, the guild of cashiers and bank clerks. The latter is one of the most remarkable in existence, and its members are to be found in every foreign house of business, not only in China, but in all other countries of the Orient, where the Chinese comprador, or cashier, is indispensable. It is not only because they are so efficient, but because the guild to which they belong furnishes a guarantee for their integrity. In all the history of European and American trade in Asia there is but a single case on record of one of these Chinese cashiers having been guilty of fraud and embezzlement, and in that instance the loss was at once made good to his employers by the guild, which likewise undertook his punishment, pursued him to his hiding place in the interior of China, and by means of the co-operation of one of the great secret societies with which it is affiliated, subjected him to such a lingering death by torture as to frighten any other comprador from ever following his example. No man can labor in China who does not owe allegiance to a guild, and who does not obey its behests.

Ready to Quit

A MEMBER of one of the leading churches of a Western city (says the Chicago Standard) remarked to his pastor, "I was sorry to have missed your sermon last Sunday morning. I am told that it was of unusual excellence." The pastor replied, "Any of the family sick?" The man blushed, and answered, "No, if I must confess it, I was at the —— Club playing golf." We are glad to say that the pastor stated frankly and forcibly his convictions regarding the impropriety of deserting the church services to play golf, and said, "If I must invest my time laboring with the members of this church to spend Sunday in worship rather than on the golf links, you can have my resignation. If the men of this church do not conceive of religion as paramount to golf, I am ready to quit."

DELIGHTED WITH HER PREMIUMS

The premium books came all right and in due time. The Pilgrim Ship is a beautiful volume. I sent for it for my grandsons. I think it is going to make reading that is far preferable to the cheap fiction. The Almanac came this morning. It is going to be a very useful book. We old folks can't well get along without our old stand-by, a good almanac, and this one appears to be an exceptionally good one. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD comes to bring gladness to our home every week. Much favored are they who receive it. Many thanks for it, with its many messages for the good of mankind. The good deeds done through and by it are wonderful. The press and the pulpit are truly our best educators when founded on the Bible, which we believe to be the word of our Father who reigns above and over all.

Avon, Ill MRS. CAROLINE D.

OUR NEWEST HIGHEST BUILDING

ON THIS page are shown two illustrations picturing the most valuable spot in New York, if not in the world, as it is to-day, and as it was a little more than a century ago.

In the upper picture you may see how Nassau and Wall Streets looked in the days when Washington was the first President of the United States, when Alexander Hamilton and Aaron Burr were rivals at the bar, when the young republic was just beginning to recover from that great struggle for independence that gave it place among the leading nations of the earth.

In the centre picture you may view the Grand Canyon of the city's financial district, with sky-scrapers rising on each side, as high in places as the walls of the Yellowstone, and thronged by cliff-dwellers, as combative in their own way as those of the Pueblos.

At the entrance of this canyon is the Sub-Treasury, with Washington's statue standing on the spot where he was inaugurated President. On the second corner is the great, if unpretentious, house of J. P. Morgan & Co. Across the street is the New York Stock Exchange, where more fortunes have been made and broken than anywhere else in the world. And on the fourth corner, looming like a great white gatepost of the canyon itself, stands the home of the Bankers' Trust Company—the newest, highest building in New York City.

Now, Wall Street in the days of the first picture was perhaps the most popular and populous thoroughfare in New York. It was so named because it followed the line of the city's first defensive stockade or "wall," and throughout its length were enacted many scenes that are part of the nation's larger history.

In 1734 copies of Zenger's famous New York Weekly Journal, in which were contained criticisms of the rule of Great Britain in the Colonies, were burned at the pillory directly in front of the site now occupied by the Bankers' Trust Company. In 1735 the trial of Zenger was held in the New York City Hall just across the street. In 1765 the Stamp Act riots raged around this corner. In 1775 this spot witnessed the demonstration over the news of the Battle of Lexington, and the City Hall was seized by the Sons of Liberty. In 1783 occurred the British evacuation of New York and the triumphal entry of the American Army, followed by a banquet in John Simmons's Hostelry, which stood on the site of the present Bankers' Trust Building. Washington was present at the banquet. In 1784 James Duane, first Mayor of New York, was inaugurated on this same spot. And yet all of the people who once thronged that thoroughfare would not be nearly sufficient in number to populate the offices of this newest, highest building that stands on but one corner of the street.

This affords us a very interesting measure of the rapidity with which New York is growing. It is the oft expressed wonder of the newcomer to New York, "Where do all the people come from to fill so many tall buildings, and where do they get the money to pay for so many expensive offices?" And here we have another measure, not only of the city's growth, but of the demand of its inhabitants for the very latest and most efficient in all that pertains to what might be called the tools of trade.

Not more than fifteen years ago the old buildings which stood upon this corner of Wall and Nassau Streets were torn down to make way for what was then considered a modern skyscraper—a beautiful steel and granite twenty-storied building, with all that was latest in elevators and furnishings. It compared favorably with the usual run of modern office buildings, and yet the pressure, the demand for economy of space and maximum of efficiency has become so great that even this building was considered out of date long before a generation had passed.

New York's Financial District as It Looked in the Days of George Washington

New York's Financial District as It Is To-day

As the workmen lowered the granite facing, block by block, into the street, and exposed the heavy steel of the structure of the building, which was taken down column by column, and beam by beam, the wonder of observers grew, and the undertaking became the subject of favorable and unfavorable comment. One prominent New York paper printed an editorial upon it, asking: "If this is not waste, what is?" and deplored the loss of the money and labor which had been expended in the building.

Other papers took the opposite view, and considered the operation from a modern, scientific standpoint, arguing that the tearing down of the Gillender Building to make place for the more modern Bankers' Trust Company Building was as consistent as the action of a manufacturer in throwing out old machinery as soon as an improved machine became available. They argued that the proposed new building, occupying a larger ground area, reaching four stories below the street and forty stories above, would be a more efficient plant for transacting the tremendously concentrated business at this most valuable corner of the world, and that the consequent increased earning capacity was an additional justification for the undertaking.

Here then is the newest and most interesting addition to New York's ever-changing skyline. It is also illustrative of the fact that the change in that skyline is not one merely of perspective elevation. Every change in the outline is indicative of greater, subtler, more significant changes in the hives of business beneath.

Take the matter of population alone. Some one has gone to great trouble in calculating how great the area of New York City would be if all the sky-scrapers and apartments were razed and the people were compelled to live and do business in domiciles such as were used one hundred years ago. The result would be a great, flat, uneconomic "town," the very unwieldiness of which would prohibit the accomplishment of modern business in the volume to which New York is accustomed to-day.

As a small comparison, for instance, the every-day residents of five among the tallest buildings in New York, such as the Metropolitan, the Singer, the Hudson Terminal, the City Investing, and those who will occupy the Bankers' Trust Building, would number over 30,000—that is to say, as many people as now live in Decatur, Ill., or Lansing, Mich., or Quincy, Mass., or Williamsport, Pa.

Now, a town of 30,000 inhabitants would obviously demand a modern form of government, which means engineering facilities, insuring the comfort and convenience of those inhabitants. And by the same token, the government of the modern sky-scraper and the engineering facilities providing for the comfort and convenience of its thousands of inhabitants are matters of as much import to those inhabitants as they possibly could be to the people of the small town. So every new building becomes, in its turn, the latest expression of all that is up to date in sky-scrapers.

In the first place the Bankers' Trust Company Building, if we exclude those sky-scrapers the height of which depends upon a tall tower, is the highest office building in the world—540 feet—for if the towers were to be taken off the Singer and the Metropolitan Life Buildings, they would by no means remain among the tallest.

In the next place, the structure has been planned more as though it were a huge business machine than as a mere business building. In the days when Alexander Hamilton's law office was just down the street, a desk near a window, up a flight of stairs, was considered sufficient equipment for doing business. But in this most modern building there are all sorts of contrivances for the

Continued on page 1272

The Ever-Changing Skyline of New York City, Showing the Sky-Scraper District as It Looks from the Hudson River

John Marchesson's Jewel

By KATHARINE HOLLAND BROWN

ALL through the golden autumn, John Marchesson lay in his great quiet room, his gaunt face turned to the window, his gaunt old hands folded upon the misty silken scrollwork of the counterpane. Round him, four-square, rose the ancient fluted pillars of his bed; between them hung stiff quaint curtains; their dwarf pagodas and fierce staring paroquets as clear to his eyes to-day as on the mornings, seventy years ago, when he would waken in that great bed, and turn a small awe-struck face to watch the dawn-wind blow the strange birds into eerie life. Beyond, the hearth-fire gleamed, a steadfast comrade. Framed in deep tarnished gold, above the crossed swords on the chimney-breast, his sweet girl-mother smiled down on him with tender wondering eyes. There Marchesson lay quiet, day after amber day, watching the fruitful year through its calm ending.

All the picturing sounds and fragrances of autumn floated up to him, an airy pageantry. The dusty tang of wild yellow asters; the rare spice of a cherished garden rose; the creak of loaded wagons, toiling under mounded yellow corn, and crimson apples, and bloomy lavish grapes; all the ripe portents of the mellow year. Night by night shone the broadening harvest moon; by late red sunrise the west wind softly tossed the reddening vine-leaves on the wall.

All these sights and sounds were friends. More welcome, perhaps, than the good friends who came and went beside his bed. Though he had spent his long life in this Kentucky village, a curious barrier stood between him and his neighbors. He was quite their own. Yet always they came, kindly, embarrassed, anxious to serve. Flushed clumsy boys from his farms; crisp girls from the factory; plump flurried housewives, with their broths and jellies, and their whispered questions. And Marchesson's old Diana would receive them all with sullen courtesy, and stiff jealous bobs of her gray woolly head. Sometimes there clung shyly to those brisk mother-skirts a child. Then Marchesson would smile drowsily at the clutch of small fingers, the cool brush of a flower on his palm. For to the children's eyes that barrier did not loom so high. But old Diana would look on, muttering. If the flower were jasmine, she would snatch it away. Wise in her dumb groping love, she knew that the breath of jasmine awoke old cruel dreams.

Then the doctors: the young surgeon fresh from the East, with his shrewd boyish face, his pelting talk of weird new miracles wrought against disease. The old doctor came, too, with his slow step, his placid healing speech, not of men's ills, but of other things. . . . Hour by hour Marchesson clung closer to these familiar uses. Hour by hour he shrank in dread of that swift-nearing day when he must turn from these pleasant trivial ways, and take up the one harsh task that yet waited.

Months gone, Marchesson had set his house in order. His long hard years stood written in open record. Yet that one last Account harassed his brain by night, ached in his tired heart by day. Soon, very soon, he must face this last, sternest reckoning: his reckoning with his own defrauded soul.

October passed, a shining processional. November ebbed through cold pale twilights and gray windy dawns. Then came the Indian summer, those fair exquisite days of golden calm. And now the bells were ringing to greet the Blessed Day, and still that autumn sweetness held the land, as in a peaceful charm.

One hushed afternoon the shutters were drawn above Marchesson's window till only a pencil of sunlight streaked the floor. The room was very still. One wandering gleam flashed high on the crossed sword-hilts; above, his mother gazed down with wondering, loving eyes.

Marchesson saw nothing. Sunlight and calm and fragrance were forgotten. Wan, intent, he lay and looked upon his strange guest. His guest, indeed, this stern silent Messenger, come, at last, to close the score of life with him.

He strained his eyes across the shadowy room. He saw only a grave mystic face: a silent waiting Presence. Dimly beneath the dark robes, he glimpsed the hands of his guest, close-folded; the hands of one who carries, shielded from curious eyes, some small priceless thing. Then his eyes grew dull again. Yet to his inward sight that waiting gaze shone clear as a face unveiled. And his trembling hands grew cold: his heart beat thick with an old relentless pain.

"Only the pearl lay there . . . That unforgotten face shone radiant through the dusk"

At last Marchesson gathered his powers, and spoke:

"I have little to bring to you."

The Visitant waited, silent.

"I have no real account to give." His tired voice dragged on. "All these weeks I have lain here and tried to add that sum. A few unfinished plans. A few years, crowded—and futile. A sum of failures."

"A sum of failures," the Visitant spoke at last. "You came into the world an heir to royal gifts. Your childhood was made smooth and beautiful. Through your youth there swept a war whose splendid terror kindled in you undying fires. You saw life, and you understood. With every breath your mighty talent grew. Yet you held back. You faltered. You, who could build a tower to dare the stars!"

Marchesson leaned his head on one cold hand.

"No. I had other work then."

"Other work!"

"I could not put away my first duty."

"You put away your supreme duty. Your duty to your God-given talent."

A gray shadow crossed Marchesson's face. It might have been the shadow of lifelong despair.

"I could not go away and study sculpture those first years after the war. The whole country was stripped, ruined. We had to clear our farms and rebuild our houses. Sculpture could wait."

"But the war had touched you lightly. Why did you not seize your hour and go?"

Marchesson pondered.

"Perhaps I was cowardly. I could not leave them all behind, my poor stricken kinsfolk. Then my brother's children were left to my care. They needed me."

"They were not poor. And they had others of their blood."

"But those others—they did not understand. They could not see that the old order had gone. They could not believe that we must all step down from our high places, and earn our bread with our own hands. It was hard for the young. It was cruel for the old. I had to stand by and comfort the dazed old people and help the younger ones, those first hard years."

"Yet they learned, at last. And you still lagged here in your dull wasted little town."

"I could not leave the town. It needed me." Marchesson's voice faltered.

"Did not your talent need you? Did it not call? How dared you deny your splendid promises? How dared you challenge the cry of your own soul?"

Marchesson's gray head sank. Night after night, year after year, he had fought it out, that eternal jeering question. Dully he wondered that, dying, a man must fight once more the battle that he had fought every day, every hour, of his interminable life. Well, he would die fighting.

"The town was my own home. And it was so poor, so forlorn—I could not go."

"So you spent all that you had upon the town. You brought the factories, and the mills. You built up the shattered place, and gave it courage and success. Then for the third time you put away your talent. Here, in your buzzing petty life, you stayed."

"But my work had brought new problems to the town. Look at the boys and girls who swarmed in to work in the factories. The town must give them more than work alone. They must have fit homes, clean pleasures. And the town could not understand. So I built the club-houses and the gymnasiums, and started the night schools. They were small matters, but they cost labor and time."

"Then—"

A long shudder caught Marchesson's heart: the stabbing agony of an immortal pain. Drifting through the dim room fled a wind of fragrance, heartbreaking sweet; the scent of jasmine, long since faded; the memory of a loveliness that gleamed upon his life like the passing of a white star, and left the shadows deeper by its flight.

"Then—my happiness came. And went away, before I knew. Afterwards I could never find heart for my gift. Its time had passed."

"No. Its time could never pass. Once more its spirit awoke, and cried to you. When you found that the boy, your brother's son, shared your talent, you set yourself to clear the road for him. You went with him to the Old World. You gave him all the training, all the wide opportunity that you had denied yourself. Then your heart sickened. You could not face the noble sculptures whose beauty taunted you for the beauty that your own hands had held and thrown away. The powers, the magic, that you squandered! The failure, twice failure, for you never fought to win!

"Then," the pitiless Voice spoke on, "Then, in that last disowning, the fire of your genius dropped to ashes. You came back to your dull town. Here you have buried your splendid talent. Here it lies, buried for all time."

The sunset burned on, a still and awful red. Across the glimmering crimson bars, the Face looked on him with deep accusing eyes.

Then through that hush there echoed the whistle of the factory. Down the hollow street came hurrying gay footsteps. Nearer, louder; till all the stones rang alive with that glad conquering tread. The feet of young men, turning home from work through the red sunset. As they passed Marchesson's door, their voices fell: they walked softly: and yet the bold gay ring of those swift feet was like the passing of some proud regiment.

Marchesson stirred. A vague light lifted in his eyes.

The Presence looked on him.

"There go your boys that you have started on their long road. A long steep road. But they will not fall back. For you have trained their bodies, and fed their minds; you have lifted their eyes to the hills. They will not fail you."

Up rose another sound, sweetly appealing. A child's voice, high and clear, brimming with eager question. Then, in soft antiphone, the mother's tones; at last, the mother's laugh, deep-throated, infinitely content; the tranquil laughter of a woman who lives her white destiny in shielded peace.

"In other times, I have not heard those eager steps, those happy voices. In the old years, the women went by with worn faces and with heavy hearts. But now you have given the little town work and hope; and the face of day is changed to them. They dare to laugh. They dare to be content.

"Our time is short," the Presence spoke once more. "Speak. What account have you to give?"

Continued on page 1278

OUR EDITORIAL FORUM

OTTO KOENIG, President GEO. H. SANDISON, Managing Editor THEODORE WATERS, Secretary

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly by "The Christian Herald," at the Bible House, Fourth Avenue, 8th and 9th Sts., New York City. The officers are: Otto Koenig, President and Treasurer, Bible House, N.Y.City; Geo. H. Sandison, Vice-President, Bible House, N.Y.City; Theodore Waters, Secretary, Bible House, N.Y.City.

Subscription Price, $1.50 a year, in advance.
Remittances should always be made in the safest manner available to the remitter. Register cash remittances.
Foreign Postage.—For each copy to be mailed outside the United States, Canada, and Mexico, add one dollar a year.

Change of Date.—It takes at least two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.
Expiration of Subscription.—The date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription ends.
Change of Address.—It requires three weeks' time to make the change. Give both old and new address.

Subscriptions may commence with any issue.
Letters should be addressed, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

Entered at Post Office, New York, as Second-class Matter
Entered as Second-class Matter at the Post Office Department, Ottawa

Is Church Union Possible?

IN SOME of our contemporaries we find a more or less free discussion of the attractive topic of church union. Many arguments are advanced on both sides, and some of these are interesting. Instances are cited of small towns in which there is not a sufficiency of population to support more than a single church, or two at the most; and in such cases a union of church interests has been carried out with apparent satisfaction to all concerned. This has been accomplished without any invasion of essential beliefs, and, indeed, has been a necessity on financial grounds, if on no other. It is quite a different matter, however, when the scheme of church union is to be applied to larger cities. Here the various denominations are well entrenched, and each is doing good work in its own particular field. Any appeal to denominational Christians to unite, except to the extent of co-operative action in seasons of revival, or for occasional friendly exchanges of pulpits, or to carry out some mission of Christian work or philanthropy, seems to fall very largely on deaf ears. One may be a thorough-going Christian and still be so loyal to his denomination that he could not give it up without a heart-pang. His own church is endeared to him by many hallowed ties. It was the church of his father and mother—the church in which he was first led to see the light. As a faithful soldier loves his old regimental colors, so the true Christian is attached to his old church and its simple, familiar ways. He knows what it has stood for in the past, and in all that it is doing in the present he has a warm personal interest. His own spiritual life is bound up with its life. Its individuality is very dear to him. He loves to look upon it as one of the many battalions of the Lord's army, every division of which, though under its own commander, gives allegiance to the general orders of the Great Captain of salvation.

In the broad scheme of church union known as "the Level Plan," Bishop William M. Brown of Arkansas has outlined a proposition which is, substantially, that all the Protestant churches should accept the superintendency of bishops, each for itself, at the hands of the existing historic order of bishops in his own communion—the Protestant Episcopal. He admits at the outset that there is no chance for the coming together of the churches for the world's evangelization on the basis of sacerdotal Catholicism, and believes the only basis possible is "republican Protestantism." But such a proposition would have the effect of creating an ordained priesthood, which is at variance with the principles of the Protestant church, organic and spiritual. No one who is observant of the religious progress of the time will contend that the church is ripe for so radical a departure. Protestantism is essentially republican. It had its origin in the reaction against the undue assertion of ecclesiastical authority and religious dogma, and the multiplication of Protestant divisions is simply a demonstration of the continuity of that independent spirit. Organic independence is valued too highly and has cost too dear to be lightly surrendered. We doubt whether any single Protestant denomination would consent to pass under the ecclesiastical authority of any body of Christians outside of its own lines, especially if that body be one holding exclusive views on the question of historic authority. Such, as we view it without bias, is the attitude of the Protestant churches at the present time.

It was the desire of the Divine Founder of Christianity that all his followers might be "of one fold, under one shepherd." This is being gradually realized in the drawing together of the Christian communities. On all the great, fundamental Gospel truths, they are already united. In every believing heart, the longing for a still closer union is an intense one; but that union must come in God's own way. It will probably be a result of slow and natural growth. Lines of denominational or sectarian division are no longer barriers to hearty concord and active co-operation. Everywhere we see the churches joining heartily in such splendid work as the Forward Movement and the Men and Religion Movement. They are drawing nearer, too, in the mission field. We hail these indications of the coming day, when Christendom will be as a solid unit for the world's redemption; when the last traces of the sectarian spirit will disappear and when all denominations will have a full understanding and appreciation of what Christian brotherhood means. Every year the church is putting on new strength. The Lord's work never goes backward. There is something magnificent in the work now being accomplished by those great historic divisions, the Methodists, Presbyterians, Baptists, Congregationalists, Episcopalians, Lutherans, Disciples, etc. Never were their energies so fully occupied as now; never were they so richly crowned with results. May God bless them all and enlarge their borders and make them all brothers and sisters in Christ! Whether in the future they may unite organically for the furtherance of God's kingdom on earth is a question that we are willing to leave wholly in His hands.

The McNamara Confession

THE confession of the McNamara brothers, on December 1, made a fitting climax to one of the most thrilling of recent public dramas. On October 1, 1910, the Los Angeles Times building was wrecked by a dynamite explosion, in which twenty-one persons were killed. On Christmas day, 1910, the Llewellyn Iron Works in the same city were also destroyed by dynamite. The confession of Ortie McManigal fixed the blame of both these disasters upon James B. McNamara and his brother John J., the secretary-treasurer of the International Association of Bridge and Structural Iron Workers. James B. McNamara pleaded guilty to the charge of murder in the first degree in connection with the Times explosion, and his brother acknowledged responsibility for the Llewellyn disaster.

The case against the brothers was worked up by Detective William Burns, who was accused by labor leaders of unjustifiable activity in pursuing the line of his suspicions, and of giving undue publicity to his work through the newspapers and magazines. The case for the State of California was in charge of a brilliant staff of lawyers, under the leadership of District Attorney John D. Fredericks. Labor unions throughout the nation rallied to the defense of the accused men, and it was said that the sum of a million dollars was raised for their use. This is denied, however, and Samuel Gompers claimed that not more than $190,000 was raised.

While the confession of the McNamaras clears up the facts of the situation, it by no means untangles the serious problems which are confronting the forces of capital and labor at the present day. The situation is growing constantly more complex and intense. Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor, had repeatedly expressed his conviction that the accused men were innocent. The news of their confession was an overwhelming shock to him. He still insists that the Federation of Labor is a law-abiding institution and that its leaders deprecate and discourage all forms of violence.

Throughout the whole case, the attempt was made by the labor leaders to cast serious reflections upon the course of justice, and to make the dynamite fiends appear in the light of martyrs who were being made to suffer through capitalistic persecutors and corrupt judges. The outcome shows how utterly unjustifiable were all such aspersions, and is a distinct triumph for American justice. A very considerable portion of the press was misled by the outcry of Gompers and his allies, into thinking that the McManigal-McNamara criminals were really worthy representatives of America's workingmen, when, as a matter of cold fact, they were reckless degenerates of the worst type, setting no value upon human life and ready to do any desperate deed that might bring them notoriety or profit. The result of the present trial should make labor more cautious and conservative, and less trustful of loud and boastful leadership.

The Tribune's Anniversary

THE New York Tribune, on November 29, issued an anniversary number celebrating the seventieth year of its splendid career. It issued on that day a magazine edition, full of material of thrilling interest. Not only was the history of the paper itself outlined, but the whole progress of the State and Nation was reviewed. A picture of Fifth Avenue seventy years ago shows a desolate and ungainly little house, which stood isolated on what is now the corner of that great thoroughfare and Forty-fifth Street. The statement is made that in 1840 there were as many trees on the Bowery as there are iron pillars to-day. It is hard to realize that less than seventy years ago Cyrus Field's project of a cable across the Atlantic was denounced as a "mad freak of stubborn ignorance." Progress in transportation, in manufacture, in finance, in military achievement, in architecture, in education, are outlined.

The surprising statement is made that when the Tribune was first published, literally all the work of the paper was performed by hand. There were no typewriters to prepare copy, no linotype machines to set it up. The papers were folded, counted and packed for delivery by hand. News was brought by the "Pony Express," the name given to the system by which carriers on swift ponies relayed the dispatches and letters from the scene of the news to the headquarters of the paper.

The Tribune, as every one knows, was founded by Horace Greeley, who began in 1834 to edit and publish the New Yorker. On April 19, 1841, the first number of the Tribune appeared. It was at first a weekly paper and was designed to stand for the cause of the common people. The Tribune did noble service during the controversy over slavery, and was a powerful factor in bringing about its abolition. Whitelaw Reid joined the staff in 1868, becoming, in 1872, the editor-in-chief. He was succeeded by Hart Lyman, the present editor. CHRISTIAN HERALD readers will be particularly interested in the work of the Tribune for the Fresh Air movement. It began this work in 1877, the year of the CHRISTIAN HERALD'S birth. For many years the two papers labored, side by side, in this splendid charity. In 1906 Dr. John Bancroft Devins took charge of the Tribune's Fresh Air work. A peculiarly striking quotation appears in the Tribune's anniversary number in connection with his work and his lamentable and unexpected death. A few months before he died, Dr. Devins, reviewing the Fresh Air work up to date and expressing his hope for its future, quoted these fine lines from Whittier:

> Others shall sing the song;
> Others shall right the wrong;
> Finish what I begin,
> And all I fail of win.
> What matter I or they,
> Mine or another's day,
> So the right word be said,
> And life the sweeter made?

General Notes

—CORRESPONDENTS WITH THE Italian forces in Tripoli cable intelligence of savage cruelties perpetrated by the Arabs upon Italian soldiers and Red Cross attaches who fell into their hands as prisoners. Some were decapitated and some buried alive, while others were horribly mutilated before being killed. A number were put to death by various forms of crucifixion.

—PRESIDENT TAFT, MR. CARNEGIE, Senator Clark of Montana and several other notables, who were announced as guests of honor at a Peace banquet to be held in New York on December 30, have simultaneously withdrawn their acceptances, and the project seems likely to fail in consequence. Just who authorized and organized the scheme seems to be uncertain.

—APPREHENSIONS OF ANOTHER season of famine in India, consequent upon the failure of the rains, have fortunately been dispelled. President A. McLean, of the Foreign Christian Missionary Society, writes from Cincinnati, O.: "There was fear of famine in India, the rains were late in coming, but they came and in abundance, and with the rain all fear of famine for this year passed away. Such is our latest information."

Contents of this Number

Wednesday, December 13, 1911

	PAGE
Our Mail-Bag	1262
Ancient Nanking Under Fire (Illustrated)	1263, 1278
The World's Eternal Summer. Sermon By Rev. Charles F. Aked, D.D.	1264, 1265
Just a Home Love-Letter	1265
Our Newest Highest Building (Illustrated)	1266, 1272
John Marchesson's Jewel (Illustrated) By Katharine Holland Brown	1267, 1278
OUR EDITORIAL FORUM	1268
THE BIBLE AND NEWSPAPER (Illustrated)	1269
The Opening Night at the Bread-Line	1270
Brander Cushing's Ambition (Illustrated) By Rev. C. M. Sheldon, D.D.	1271, 1274, 1275
The World's Biggest Parish (Illustrated)	1272
Our Boys and Girls (Illustrated)	1273
Chats by the Holiday Fireside By Margaret E. Sangster	1276, 1277
The Progress of Peace	1279
Sunday School Lesson. By Dr. and Mrs. W. F. Crafts	1280
Young People's Societies	1282

THE BIBLE AND NEWSPAPER

Conducted by FERDINAND C. IGLEHART, D.D.

Mobbed Female Suffragists

SIX woman suffragists went in an automobile down into the Wall Street district in New York the other day to hold a meeting, and especially to protest against the treatment accorded English suffragettes the week before by the London authorities. Among the number in the car was Mrs. Emmeline Pankhurst, their London heroine. A company of 3,000 men gathered about them. Mrs. Blatch, president of the Woman's Political Union, stood up in the car and undertook to speak. The boys began to yell and hiss, and not a word she said could be heard by those closest to her. Rev. Dr. Anna Howard Shaw was to have been the next speaker, but she insisted that Mrs. Pankhurst be introduced in the hope that they would listen to her. They would not, but yelled so loud and rushed the car so violently that she had to stop, and when the police squad that had been sent for opened the way, they rode away to safety. For by this time two of the suffragettes had knocked off the hats of some boys who had climbed on the car and torn their nice silk flags. "Never in my life have I seen such a disgraceful exhibition as yesterday's," Dr. Shaw said. "It was evident that the action had been planned, and in spite of the great number of gentlemen on the outside of the ring, nothing could be done to quiet the hooligans. Those who were the worst of all averaged twenty-one years of age and were old enough to know and behave better. One of the loudest to jeer and yell was a young man who stood near me. Finally I leaned forward and said to him: 'You are big enough to be a man, but you are far from being one.' He slunk away at that, and I thought his going might stop the noise, for he seemed to be a ringleader, but there were plenty more to take up the hue and cry and drive us away." It was not the best time and place to hold such a meeting; but they had a right to hold it, and their outrageous treatment was a disgrace. Of this uproar can be said what was said of the mob at Ephesus:

For we are in danger to be called in question for this day's uproar, there being no cause whereby we may give an account of the concourse. (Acts 19: 40.)

Mrs. Emmeline Pankhurst Attempting to Address the Crowd Before the Sub-Treasury in Wall Street

Maine Wrecked from Outside

The Joint Army and Navy Board of Inspection in session in Havana will find that the battleship Maine was blown up from the outside. The report, after it shall have passed through the hands of Secretary of the Navy George von L. Meyer, will be made public. This will settle forever the bitter dispute which has been going on for thirteen years. Admiral Sigsbee, who had command of the Maine and was on board of her at the time of the explosion, says that the report from Havana that the Maine was destroyed by two explosions only corroborates the conclusions reached by the divers who spent more than two weeks examining the hull of the battleship just after the explosion. Although the reports of the divers, which were the principal evidence before the Sampson Board, have proved singularly accurate, there have been surprises amounting almost to shocks at the revelations of the wreck itself. The Sampson Board reported that the battleship was blown up by a mine situated about Frame 18. It now seems certain that the explosion originated some thirty-five feet aft of the point named by the Sampson Board. The board has come to the conclusion, from an examination of the wreck now above water, that the vessel was destroyed by an outside explosion, which occurred under the ship a little to port of the keel frames 28 and 30. The outside skin was doubled over toward the starboard side by the first explosion. This resulted in a second explosion inside the vessel, which blew the transverse armor bulkhead aft from Frame 24 and buried itself in the mud through the hole left by the first explosion. "The fact that there were two explosions is in accord with the findings of the Board of Inquiry," said the admiral. "It was testified to in court that there were two explosions. Some of the men who were on board told me that they had heard two explosions, one a short, sharp sound, followed by a general roar. I was in my cabin at the time, and I only heard the general roar. The evidence that there were two distinct sounds of explosions is also corroborated by those who were not on the Maine." It was likely that the war with Spain would have been accorded anyway, but the explosion which sent 266 brave defenders of the government to a watery grave started the war, in which the penalty fell. Those responsible for the crime realize the truth that They that take the sword shall perish with the sword. (Matt. 26: 52.)

Sultan's Jewels Sold

The jewels of Abdul Hamid, ex-Sultan of Turkey, were sold at auction in Paris recently and brought a fabulous price. The sale of the opening day alone amounted to 2,700,000 francs ($540,000). The best price paid was for a necklace composed of three rows of 154 pearls and a clasp formed of three rows of brilliants, which brought 920,000 francs ($184,000). A string of ninety-nine pearls, with pendant composed of the imperial cipher in gold, three large rubies and a pear-shaped drop pearl, brought $124,700. Among other things sold were two gold coffee cups and saucers, encrusted with diamonds, which brought $5,040; a gold alarm clock with diamonds, which brought $7,120, and a walking-stick with a diamond head, which went at the bid of $1,000. Poor pitiable Sultan! How he cried for fear they would kill him when the soldiers came to the palace to dethrone him! He begged them to take his wealth or his crown, but to spare his life. How unsteady thrones are, and how easily crowns fall from king's heads nowadays! How flimsy are all the outer expressions and trappings of autocracy! What a mockery are the jewels of a dethroned emperor, especially as they are knocked down under the hammer of the auctioneer! The only jewels that are of any value are those of character. The jewels of the ex-Sultan, though sold for millions of dollars, are only pieces of brick or common glass when set over against an administration of selfishness and oppression. The humbling of Abdul Hamid's pride, illustrated by the scattering of the royal jewels by auction, reminds us of Nebuchadnezzar's humiliation at the loss of his throne.

But when his heart was lifted up, and his mind hardened in pride, he was deposed from his kingly throne, and they took his glory from him. (Dan. 5: 20.)

Edison Visits Taft

Thomas A. Edison called on President Taft at Washington the other day, and took occasion during the visit to explain to him his latest inventions, including the moving picture and the reproduction of the voice simultaneously. Mr. Edison in his interview claimed that practical use could be made of his new machine in the coming presidential campaign—that stump speakers could address any number of audiences at the same time, the phonograph reproducing the speech, and the pictures on the screen exhibiting the image of the speaker with every gesture. We are somewhat skeptical about the practical value of this most important invention as a political campaigner, as such meetings do not want so much the echo of a voice as the voice, nor the image of a man so much as the man himself. Any invention, however, that would eliminate at least a half of the stump speakers of the average political campaign should be hailed as a blessing. An invention that would reduce by two-thirds the amount of the campaign funds, a portion of which is proper, but so much of which is for corrupt purposes, would be a still greater blessing. Most of the questions of a political nature, as well as scientific, literary, industrial or religious character, are pretty well threshed out in the papers in this era of the all powerful press, and yet there will likely never come a time when the message of the living speaker to the living audience will be dispensed with. The word of the living preacher to the ears of a living people is God's ordained method for the world's evangelization. A powerful religious press can be an auxiliary to the living preacher. Edison's invention in these days of pulpit sensationalism might be set up in some churches in the desperate attempt to get an audience, but it will prove a failure, as similar substitutes for the live Gospel message of the live man have done.

It pleased God by the foolishness of preaching to save them that believe. (I. Cor. 1: 21.)

Possibilities of a Boy

Rev. Dr. Charles R. Brown, the new dean of Yale Divinity School, preached in the Plymouth Congregational Church, Brooklyn, recently. He said: "If ten years ago you had told a scientist that from a tiny particle of earth power could be obtained sufficient to keep a clock ticking for a hundred thousand years, he would have laughed at you. But since the discovery of radium he does not laugh. Neither does he dogmatize on the limits of science. As the discovery of radium has opened up new worlds to science, so does divine help open up new worlds to human endeavor. If a woman in this congregation should bring her jewels to me and I should drop them into the East River, I would know exactly how much wealth had been lost to the world. But if the same woman were to bring a kernel of wheat to me and allow me to plant it, to harvest the grain and plant again, and sell the produce, I should never know, were I to destroy that grain of wheat, what strength had been lost to a hungry world. And if she were to give me her boy, and I were to induce and instruct him to be a minister or an educator, I cannot tell now of what incalculable worth he may prove to his generation and to the generations that will come after. Nor need people to-day be ashamed of the little they are able to do. People in this congregation might endow colleges were they millionaires, write great books were they Drummonds, turn many to righteousness were they Moodys, but they are ashamed of their modest resources, forgetting that the Lord can do all things." What a splendid view the new dean takes of the opportunities, the obligations and the possibilities of young life in the kingdom of God! God leaves the gap between human ability and duty on purpose that it may be filled by divine help in answer to faith. The man of smaller or larger endowment is always doing more than he can, because God helps him. Christ knew this truth and taught it when he wrought the miracle of the loaves and fishes.

There is a lad here, which hath five barley loaves, and two small fishes; but what are they among so many? (John 6: 9.)

OPENING NIGHT AT THE BREAD LINE

Forming the Bread Line Before 1 A.M. on Thanksgiving Morning

The Hungry and Homeless Enjoying the First Bread Line Meal of the Season

Eleven Hundred Basket Dinners Were Supplied by the Mission to Poor Families on Thanksgiving Day

Brander Cushing's Ambition

A New Serial Story Written for The Christian Herald

By Charles M. Sheldon.

Author of "In His Steps"

Synopsis of Preceding Chapters

The story opens with a vivid description of the brilliant scene at the launching of the new American battleship Republic, 26,000 tons displacement, at the great navy yard at Dockville. The Secretary of War is present with many other high officials, members of Congress, army and navy officers. The great steel monster of destruction, the most perfect triumph of modern shipbuilding, is the work of Brander Cushing, the famous builder and naval contractor, who is present, with his son Sidney, on the launching platform. The signal is given, the music strikes up and the huge vessel is "christened" in the usual manner by Miss Pax Marston, the beautiful daughter of Rear-Admiral Marston. A tiny bow of ribbons, which was released by the impact of the stroke at the moment the conventional bottle broke on the vessel's bow, flutters past the high launching platform. Several snatch at it, but only one, Sidney Cushing, succeeds in grasping the little bunch of color, though he does so at the risk of losing his balance and dropping a sheer seventy-five feet to the river below. A dozen spectators, seeing his peril, spring to his assistance, but he recovers his poise, although his hat, caught by the wind, is wafted away.

After this adventure, he is introduced to Miss Pax, the Admiral's daughter, who has been an interested witness of his exploit. She questions him about his rescue of a young sailor on the cruiser Del Monte a year before, and although young Cushing modestly evades a direct answer, she is satisfied that the heroic act was his. Miss Marston invites him to call upon them in Washington. Leaving the launching platform, he is proceeding up town to buy a hat to replace his lost one, when a sudden explosion occurs near at hand in the big naval supplies factory of which his father is the principal owner. The whole building seems to burst into flame. Cushing, seeing numbers of women leaping from the windows, at the risk of his life succeeds in saving a number of workers. He is horror-stricken at the terrible tragedy he has witnessed and stunned by the reflection that his own father is responsible for the lack of fire-escapes, which he had been notified by the fire marshal two months before to provide, but had neglected. He goes back, half-dazed, to his father's office. The son tells his father plainly that he remembers the marshal's notification. "Somebody is guilty of the death of those girls," he says. "Who is it?" The next day the papers announce that criminal proceedings are to be instituted against the parties responsible for the disaster, Brander Cushing being mentioned by name. The builder is besieged by reporters, to whom he denies point-blank having received any notice from the marshal. He knows that the prosecution will be in the hands of District Attorney Fleming, his political enemy. Sidney is sent to Washington, to be out of the way while his father faces the coming trouble. Brander Cushing finds the men in his yard antagonistic to himself, regarding him as responsible for the loss of so many lives. Attorney Fleming visits him and an exciting scene follows. Fleming dares Cushing to open his safe and prove that he has not got the notification papers locked up. Cushing orders him out of the office, and he withdraws, after threatening to subpœna Sidney as a witness. In Washington, Sidney renews acquaintance with the Marstons and becomes a strong favorite with the Admiral, his pretty daughter, and his nephew. With the latter he visits the new armor-testing grounds. They note the frightful effects of the new secret explosive, bloxine. Brander Cushing is visited by Athanasia Ward, one of the girls saved by Sidney from the factory fire. She tells him how the door of the factory was locked, preventing escape and causing many deaths. Cushing is horrified at this revelation, which the girl makes to warn him.

CHAPTER VI—Continued

"WARN me!" exclaimed Cushing as he turned to face his strange visitor more directly.

"Yes, sir. The men in the yard. Have you noticed anything unusual?"

"Well?"

"They are ugly. They think you are to blame for all this. And I heard, I happened to hear some words that made me fear the men would do you harm, or do damage to the yard or the buildings or something."

"Well?"

"And I thought you ought to know."

"What was said? Who were they?"

"I don't know."

"You don't know who the men are?"

"No, sir, and I don't know exactly what they said. But what I heard made me afraid for you. I felt I must come over and see you. How can I ever repay your son for my life?"

Athanasia Ward spoke with a simplicity that made Brander Cushing forget his manners. He stared at her, and immediately apologized to himself. But in that stare he had caught a glimpse of the painful fact that Athanasia was what some people call weak-minded. And to his astonishment over what he had already experienced he added a dull sense of something like pity for her mental condition.

"So you thought you ought to warn me, eh?"

"Yes, sir. It's nothing sure, but after the funerals to-morrow, I shouldn't wonder if—" She hesitated.

"If what?"

"If they might try to do some harm. You see, it's awful. One of the men who works in the casting room lost three girls, and another lost—"

"Stop! I can't bear to hear it."

"I can't bear to tell it, either. But oh, do you think, sir, I will ever get over seeing those bodies falling, falling?"

The same question Sidney Cushing was asking at that very moment as he was speeding towards Washington. Would either he or Athanasia ever have untroubled dreams again?

"With a single bound a man was upon him"

"It was a terrible thing for you, poor girl. But your life was spared. Your hands were badly burned."

"Oh, no, sir. Not badly. There was Cora Vassil, her hands were—"

"No, I don't want to hear it. Was Hermosa badly hurt?"

"Hermosa? Hermosa? Why, here she is now!"

Hermosa Howard came into the office. Brander Cushing looked at those two girls as a man might look at persons raised from the dead. Both bore the marks of tragedy on their faces. But it was more than a tragedy dating from the horror of the day before. This was the life tragedy of a struggle from the time of birth to maintain the decencies of life. Even Brander Cushing, inexperienced as he was in the deep things of humanity, felt borne in upon him as he looked at these two creatures, that perhaps there was something more important than building warships.

"Did you come to warn me, too?" he said, speaking to Hermosa slowly.

"Yes, sir," she said simply. "That, and to thank your son. My father, you see, Mr. Cushing, is blind and a paralytic."

"I know. I remember him. He was in the yard—?"

"Eight years ago. His mind is clear and he doesn't suffer. I hoped to see your son, Mr. Cushing. They tell me he is not here."

"In Washington."

"Athanasia and I never can say our thanks. People do not thank others for saving them, do they?"

"I don't know. I never was saved." Cushing was staring at Hermosa as he had stared at Athanasia.

"I told Mr. Cushing what we heard, you and I. There is danger, isn't there?" said Athanasia.

"Great danger, I think," said Hermosa Howard gravely.

"What did you hear?" from Brander Cushing, shortly.

"The people are broken-hearted. Can you blame them, sir? One hundred and forty-seven girls. Oh! And they blame you for it, in part. They say you did not provide—I know, I know. You have explained all that. We believe it. We are not blaming you. You have always been kind and just to the men. But they feel, they feel deep. We are afraid for you."

"Afraid for me?" said Brander Cushing in his heart, listening to this girl of the people, this hard toiler in the loom of his human ambition. And he—?

"These threats you heard are very vague. Why should I pay any heed to them? What can the men do?"

"They threatened to wreck the draughting-room. To burn the works. Athanasia heard the same. They may even offer violence to you."

"I'm not afraid of it." Cushing rose, went over to the window which opened on the yard, and looked out. The whistles were blowing and the men had already begun to deposit their blocks and go out at the great gate. Cushing watched the increasing stream thoughtfully. Then he turned again, facing the two young women.

"I don't see that your warning is of any special value to me. What can I do? I feel very sorry for—for the victims of the fire. The company will be ready, it is ready, to give substantial aid to those who are in its employ. But your warning is too vague. It does not mean anything."

Hermosa stepped nearer. Since she came in, she had remained standing.

"Mr. Cushing, I believe you and your son are both in real danger. Greater than even I imagine. I dread to think that crime may be added to calamity."

"Crime to calamity?"

"Yes, sir. The men's minds are maddened by all this. They are talking about you, and, pardon, cursing you over their dead."

CHAPTER VII

BRANDER CUSHING was silent. Had they not a right to curse him over their dead, these rough-handed, hard-toiling men—these men whose main sweetness of life lay in their love of child and wife? And was it not true? Had he not committed crime in neglecting their safety?

"I don't see what I can do," he said out loud.

"We don't know, either," said Athanasia; "but we had to come and tell, didn't we, Hermosa?"

"Yes. I wish—I wish there was some way to guard—"

"We can call in extra police. But I don't think it necessary. You are good girls to come and warn me."

"And will you tell your son, Mr. Cushing, how we came to see and thank him?" Athanasia spoke, lifting her eyes to Hermosa, as she had repeatedly done during this interview, as if to seek her approval.

"Yes, I'll tell him."

"Will he be back soon?" timidly from Athanasia.

"I don't know."

"Come, Athanasia, shall we go?" said Hermosa, gently.

There was a faint red glow on Athanasia's cheek, burning through the marks of the smoke and flame of the tragedy.

"Yes. Let us go. I wish there was something more we could do."

"I don't see what more you can do, girls. I appreciate what you have done. But I'm sure there's no danger." Brander Cushing opened the door, with his best manner bowed them out, and then went back to his desk.

He stood there only a moment. Then he sent a message for the head superintendent of the draughting-rooms.

When he came, he told him briefly what the two girls had said.

"What do you think, Merrill? Is it worth while to pay any attention to this?"

Merrill spoke slowly.

"The men have acted ugly all day. Only 2,300 reported. I doubt if half that number turn in to-morrow."

"No one will turn in to-morrow. Haven't you got the order to shut down?"

"I have been out at the testing-dock. When your message came I was out."

"McLeish gave the order in your absence. The gates will not be open all

Continued on page 1274

THE WORLD'S BIGGEST PARISH

THE largest Protestant parish in the world, ministering, it is computed, to no less than 10,000 souls, is that of St. George's Episcopal Church in Stuyvesant Square, New York City. On November 19, this hale and vigorous veteran began the celebration of its one hundredth anniversary.

St. George's really commenced its life in 1748, as a chapel of ease for Trinity, in Beekman Street. It was the celebrated DeWitt Clinton who signed the act of incorporation which in 1811 made the church into a separately organized parish. By a singular coincidence, sixty-three years ago, on November 19, 1848, the first services were held in "the new church" on Stuyvesant Square.

Four honorable and devoted missionaries have officiated as its rectors—Drs. Kewley, Milnor, Tyng and Rainsford. Under Dr. Milnor, the church became fully established. Under Dr. Tyng, its contributions during his first thirty years of service increased from 77,097 during the first decade, to 560,284 during the third, with other growth in proportion. But it was under Dr. Rainsford that the most striking advances were made. When he left it after twenty-three years of labor, it contained in all its branches more than 7,000 souls, and the full outfit of a great institutional church, a parish house, a deaconess home, a trade school, a seaside cottage, an official staff of twenty men and women an army of trained volunteer workers; and the total sum of $2,500,000 had been raised during that period. Under the present pastor, the Rev. Hugh Birckhead, the same wonderful prosperity continues.

St. George's Church, the Centre of the Parish

The historical sermon for the occasion was delivered by Dr. William T. Manning, rector of Trinity Church, Bishop Greer also giving an address and administering the communion. During the offertory, Mr. J. Pierpont Morgan, the junior warden, stumbled over a cushion as he was passing the plate, but fortunately was not hurt. Mr. Morgan has just presented the site and half the cost of construction for a chapel near the church. Among the other vestrymen are several of national fame, also notably the Hon. Seth Low, Mr. J. Wright Harriman and Mr. R. Fulton Cutting.

The rectors of many others of the great metropolitan parishes were present, as were also several bishops and other high dignitaries of the church. The venerable edifice was handsomely decorated and the five Sunday services of commemoration were attended by enormous crowds. In all the addresses, stress was laid upon the close adherence of St. George's, through all the changes which have transformed it from a purely family church into one for the people, to the old Gospel which seeks first of all to win the souls of men to Christ. The exercises closed with a great parish reception in the Seventy-first Regiment Armory, one of the few buildings in the city large enough for the purpose.

OUR NEWEST HIGHEST BUILDING

Continued from page 1266

conservation of time and energy. And in planning these things, the health and even the nervous energy of the occupants of the building have been given the utmost consideration.

While from the outside the building is an artistic triumph, its very roof being an adaptation of the Mausoleum of Halicarnassus, its interior would appear to have been equipped with as many mechanical devices as a modern printing press. These things do not necessarily appear on the interior surface, but they are there just the same. Myriads of skeins of wire for electric light, telephones, telegraph, stock tickers, messenger calls, burglar and fire alarms, watchmen's time-detectors, etc., run through the walls. The great mass of these may be imagined when it is remembered that some first-class brokerage offices in Wall Street have as many as forty wires leading in and out.

Not only may the officers and employees of the Bankers' Trust Company communicate electrically with every part of the building, and even every part of the city, but they may exchange important documents with one another without leaving their desks. The building has been elaborately fitted with pneumatic tubes of large calibre, so that papers and pass books can be dispatched instantly from one part of the bank to another, and even to the twenty-first floor, to the offices of the Trust Company's legal advisers, Messrs. White & Case. Where hundreds of clerks are employed, the saving of time will be enormous. When it is necessary for one of these employees to move away from his desk, he may do so without disturbing his fellow workers in the least, since the floor of the main banking room has been covered with cork.

Even the men and women who clean the building (and it is no small job to cleanse forty floors containing many offices each), will be enabled to do so with the slightest expenditure of time and energy, since the whole building has been equipped with a pneumatic cleaning system, which will whisk away any dust that may possibly blow up through the windows from the busy street below. This cleaning system can be used also by the tenants in place of whisk brooms for cleaning clothes.

The banking rooms will be lighted by electricity, yet no one entering the main banking room will actually see the electric fixtures. These will be concealed in the walls and ceilings, and the light reflected from them will be diffused softly through the room.

The very air that enters the building through an elaborate ventilating system, will be cleansed of impurities before being allowed to percolate through the rooms.

And the vault. It is as far ahead of the ordinary bank vault as the building is ahead of the ordinary building. It is two stories high, and is approached and entered over a drawbridge that folds up inside the vault itself, leaving the latter isolated like an ancient fortress with an unfilled moat. It is more like a large room than a bank safe. It is 22 feet high, 27 feet long and 29 feet deep. The entrance door itself weighs 39 tons. The frame in which the door sets weighs 34 tons. The vault weighs 1,550 tons. It is elaborately equipped with an electrical signaling system, connected with the vault officer's desk, so that even when any one enters the vault that fact is made known to the vault officer by means of a little electric bulb which flashes on his desk every time any one enters the vault. It is, in fact, practically two steel rooms set one above the other.

It does not seem possible that the most ingenious burglar in the world could break through those steel walls, and even if he succeeded in doing so he would be far from being able to lay his hands upon any money, for inside these steel rooms are places for as many as 160 small safes, which in their turn are guarded by combination locks and electric burglar alarms.

Naturally it has been thought possible that a clerk might become locked in this great vault, and as a safeguard against this an electric system connecting with a six-inch vibrating gong has been placed in the vault. There are two entrances, and the closing of either door starts the ringing of the gong, which continues until the other door is closed and locked, thus giving any clerk within the vault ample time to get out.

However, arrangements have been made for releasing any one who might after all become locked in. A telephone has been installed in the vault, and over it a light burns continuously.

In the event of a person being locked in he can telephone the officers, who may give him instructions how to use a small tripping key for the time-lock, which will permit the operating of the bolts, if the proper officials who hold the combinations are there to unlock the door. The key is hung in a glass-covered box, and the only means of gaining access to the box is by breaking the glass. This key is useless except from the inside, and in conjunction with the officials holding the combinations for the locks.

The United States Government has not so remarkable a vault in its own treasury. However, as the Bankers' Trust Company is, as the name implies, composed of leading bankers, it is not to be wondered that either its building or its vault should be the latest and best possible to be obtained.

Atlanta's Memorial to Peace

Copyright by John Williams, Inc., Bronze Foundry, N.Y.

The Spirit of Peace Forbidding War

EARLY in October, President Taft unveiled at the entrance to Piedmont Park in Atlanta, Ga., one of the most beautiful and interesting works of American sculpture in the entire South. The memorial, which is of bronze mounted on a granite pedestal, is the work of Mr. Allen G. Newman, and was erected by the Gate City Guard to commemorate the establishment of peace at the close of the Civil War. That military organization was the first in Georgia to volunteer for service in the war, and was the first to make overtures of friendship when peace was declared. Against the advice of friends, they undertook a peaceful "invasion" of the North in 1879. In every city they were received with honor, and found not enemies but warm-hearted friends. Their trip was of inestimable value in restoring confidence and good feeling. It is in commemoration of this splendid trip that the new monument has been erected. The Mayor of Philadelphia and a committee of the common council escorted the "Liberty Bell," which first proclaimed the Declaration of Independence, to Atlanta for the ceremonies, and for three days the city was given up to entertaining guests from far and near. Military organizations from New York, Hartford, Boston, Philadelphia, Washington, Baltimore, New Orleans, and other cities were present.

In his dedicatory address Captain Jackson of the Old Guard said in part: "We have long forgotten the troublesome times of '61 to '65; they are only brought to mind once a year on Memorial Day, when the veterans turn out to decorate the graves of their comrades. We are looking forward, not backward; the North, the South, the East, the West, have all joined hands as one people living together in unity and peace."

How the "Bread Line" Ushered in Thanksgiving

THE Bowery Mission Bread Line opened for the season at one o'clock on Thanksgiving morning. A large crowd of men and boys was fed. The New York Herald gave the following description of the scene:

"To each man were given the bowl of coffee and roll and half loaf that are provided all winter every morning, and in addition a paper box containing a special Thanksgiving repast. This was made up of two chicken and two turkey sandwiches, half a mince pie, three crullers and two apples. All but a few of the men put away their boxes, reserving them for later in the day, when they might share them with others who, for illness or other reason, could not come.

"Standing at their coffee and bread, some of them told their stories while waiting for their time of entertainment to pass. One said he had been a cotton broker and had been broken in speculation and had lost heart. Another said he was a waiter, but had injured a foot and 'had never been trained to any other trade.' Faces about him lighted up as he told of the princely sums that had slipped through his fingers in the days when he was on the staff of a famous hotel. Another had been a banker's clerk, another an architect, three were lawyers, and there was one physician. Within the last two years the Mission has sought to send men who knew farming back to the fields. Thirteen hundred have been helped to farm employment in eighteen months."

When at last daylight had come on Thanksgiving morning the baskets for the needy families of the lower East Side were distributed. We give three pictures of these scenes on another page.

HAPPY COZY CORNER DAYS

MERRY CHRISTMAS AMONG THE BOOKS

Books are keys to wisdom's treasure; books are gates to lands of pleasure;
Books are paths that upward lead; books are friends. Come, let us read.

ONE of the most delightful features of the holiday season is the splendid array of Christmas books lined up and spread out on booksellers' counters and shelves. There they are, old friends and new, decked out in every color, shade and tint, sprinkled over plentifully with gold and silver, and looking for all the world like brilliant pictures woven in some rare tapestry.

We have taken pains to examine the holiday books pretty thoroughly in order to tell you about some of the best of them here in the Cozy Corner, in case Old Santa Claus should be asking you in little love messages what book you would like to have in your Christmas stocking.

Books Boys Will Like

THE first and second books of Boys' Model Aeroplanes. By Francis A. Collins. Mr. Collins's books on model aeroplanes are classics. They contain the best treatment on the subject. The construction is so simple as to be within the comprehension of every intelligent boy. (Century. $1.20.)

Stories of Useful Inventions. Illustrated. It tells simply and entertainingly the story of many familiar and everyday things. A match, a stove, a lamp, a plough, etc. An exceedingly interesting book. (Century. $1.50.)

With the Flag in Panama. By C. C. Weir. A timely story, full of delightful and accurate information, all about the greatest industrial adventure in the world. Every boy should read With the Flag in Panama. (W. A. Wilde & Co. $1.50.)

Track's End. By Hayden Carruth. No mollycoddle will care to read this book, but every live-wire, up-and-at-it American boy will be pretty sure to. I was going to say, if I were a boy anywhere between twelve and twenty and given the choice of the holiday books, I would choose Track's End. It is what I call an over-and-over book, because that is the way you are apt to read it. (Harpers, $1.)

On the Trail of Grant and Lee. By Frederick Trevor Hill. (Appleton. $1.50.) Perhaps no two men in the history of the world ever had such a series of coincidences linking them together. Mr. Hill tells you all about it in a delightful way.

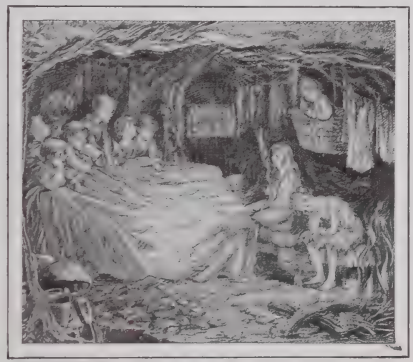
Stories of the Sea

Ensign Ralph Osborne. By Commander E. L. Beach, U. S. A. A spirited picture of life in the navy, its labors, dangers, triumphs and delights. For boys who like this kind of a story, this is the kind of a story you will like. (Wilde Company. $1.50.)

The Wrecking-Master. By Ralph D. Paine. (Scribner. $1.25.)

A Captain at Fifteen. By Gilbert P. Coleman. (Appleton. $1.50.)

Treasure Island, with new full-page colored pictures, wide margins, and large print. A heroic edition of one of the most stirring and successful boys' stories ever written. (Scribner, $2.50.)



New Books for Girls

Harper's Handy Book for Girls. (Harpers, $1.75.) A good-looking, well-bound book of arts and crafts, needlework, gift-making, physical culture, out-of-door life, entertaining, amusements, parties, collections, etc.

The good-comradeship of a boy and a girl at the schoolboy age is the delightful theme of a little story called The Iron Pirate, by Adeline Knapp (Westminster Press, 60 cents). The scene is laid in California. The story is unusually charming. The joys and sorrows of boarding-school life are entertainingly set forth in the Girls of Dudley School, by Ellen Deland (Appleton's, $1.50), and also in Just Patty, by Jean Webster. (Century. $1.20.)

Yellow Star, by Elaine Goodale Eastman, is an unusual story of Indian life (Little, Brown, $1.25). The heroine, little Yellow Star, was found in the arms of her dead mother after the battle of Wounded Knee, and is brought up in old-fashioned New England.

Aunt Jane's Nieces, by Edith Van Dyke (Rielly, Britton, 60 cents). Almost any nice girl would enjoy reading the story of three of the very dearest girls in the world and their real parties and pleasures and sorrows and trials.

Courtesy of Scribner Co.

Wendy's Story: in the Never-Never Land

New editions of the Katy-Did Series are especially attractive, with clear type, new illustrations and library binding. One reviewer said of Susan Coolidge, the much-beloved author of the Katy-Dids: "She has been endowed by the good fairies with the real gift of story writing." (Little, Brown. $1.50.)

For Little Boys and Girls

The Children's Book of Christmas. It has a bright binding, which is a picture of Santa Claus and his bright sleigh, and it tells you in verses and stories and pictures all about the ways in which Christmas is celebrated in many lands. (Macmillan. $1.50.)

Fairy Tales Children Love is oh, such a nice book, all about fairies. In Part One there are fairy tales for the littlest folk of all. In Part Two you will find fairy stories which boys and girls like best, and in Part Three (only think of it!) there are gathered together fairy stories for grown-ups which they cannot very well get on without, but of course little people love them, too.

Honey Bee. A beautiful fairy story, translated from the French by Mrs. John Lane. $1.50.

Honey Sweet, by Edna Turpin, and Peggy Stewart, by Gabrielle Jackson, rank easily in the class with dear Miss Alcott's Little Women, which is high praise. (Macmillan, $1.50.)

Adventures of a Doll, by Nora A. Smith, is quaint and charming. (Doubleday, Page, 75 cents.)

Nibbles Poppelty Poppett, by Edith B. Davidson. Nibbles is a nice little, plump little mouse who lives with his mother, and Sniffy and Snuffy the twins, and Topsy the baby. He goes forth to seek his fortune, and meets Tweeny Weeney, the dearest white mouse in the countryside, and they live happy ever after. (Little, Brown & Company, 75 cents.)

Santa Claus Dolls is a bunch of stories of good times with dolls. This is one of the Happy Hour Series that so many little boys and girls have learned to love. (Wilde, 50 cents.)

Everybody's Favorites

The Old, Old Story Book, compiled from the Old Testament, in bright red binding, with many full-page pictures of Old Testament days. Printed in large, clear type. (Houghton, Mifflin, $1.)

One Hundred Bible Stories for Children, written, says the author, Mr. Robert Bird, in the preface, for children who are too small to understand the Bible when they hear it, but are quite ready to listen to the same things told at greater length in simple words. This book is well printed and well illustrated in color. (Scribner, $1.50.)

How to Dress a Doll. Every little girl who loves her dolly should have this nice little book to go by. Everything that dolly wears, with the explanation of how to make it, is set forth in this little volume, by Mary H. Morgan. (Altemus, 50 cents.)

Tiniest Tots of All

Little Mother Stories: The Three Bold Pirates; Little Blue Rabbit; Bunnies, Birds and Blossoms; The Stories the Baby Bears Told. Charmingly illustrated in color and only 50 cents apiece. Almost any little boy or girl would love to have them. (Dutton.)

Untearable Books (Dollies' Pastimes and Our Baby's Own Book, Old King Cole, Dolls at Home, Book of Airships) are big bright-colored nursery books, 25 cents each.

My Santa Claus Book, My Book of Trains, My Airship Book, The Sunday School Model Book, My Menagerie, Dainty Dolls and their Dresses, are the very nicest kind of cut-out books, all printed in colors, 25 cents. (Dutton.)

Peter and Wendy, by J. M. Barrie, author of Peter Pan, is an especially Christmas book. (Scribner. $1.50.)

The Treasure Book of Children's Verse, arranged by Mabel and Lillian Quiller-Couch, and daintily illustrated with colored pictures (Hodder & Stoughton, $5), and The Doll Book, by Laura B. Starr (Outing Publishing Company, $3), are unusually attractive Christmas books.

But we must bring our list to an end by asking our boys and girls who care to know anything more about Christmas books to write and ask.

Special Extra Christmas Prize

We would like each and every Cozy Corner boy and girl to win a prize at the Christmas season, so here is an extra opportunity. Your choice of any book mentioned on this page for best articles with at least one cut or illustration, entitled, "I Made it Myself," or "I Did This Myself." All work in this competition to be in by January 4.

Be sure to enter this special Christmas Prize Contest, and if you have not already written, introducing yourself to the Aunt of the Cozy Corner, write to-day, and you will receive almost by return mail a nice Christmas letter written especially to you.

Good-Night Verse

And the angel said unto them: I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people. . . . Glory to God in the highest and on earth peace. . . .

A merry, merry Christmas to you all, and thanking you for your sweet Christmas messages,

Ever lovingly and faithfully,

The Aunt in the Cozy Corner

The Ostermoor SMILE and the BOOK that's FREE

A cheerful disposition makes the day's tasks easy. A night of sleep on an Ostermoor Mattress sends you forth to work or play in the morning with a smile that bespeaks renewed strength and refreshed nerves. The Ostermoor Mattress $15.

is built for Comfort; is lump-proof, mat-proof.

Send for

144-page Book and Samples—FREE

Book contains evidence of Ostermoors that have given comfort-service from 5 to 50 years. Avoid "just-as-goods" and imitations; our trade-mark is your guarantee. When necessary we ship mattress by express prepaid, for 30 nights' free trial, day check or postal order is received. Money back if dissatisfied.

OSTERMOOR & CO.
115 Elizabeth St., New York
Canadian Agents: Alaska Feather & Down Co., Ltd., Montreal.

Built—Not Stuffed

A Pony

A LITTLE BEAUTY

for Any Boy and Xmas Pocket Money.

Two Booklets

"How and where to sell Copies of The Christian Herald,"

and

"The Shetland Pony Offer,"

will be sent FREE to any boy.

You get 50 cents' worth of Magazines Free, too, as a Start in Business.

Simply sign this Coupon and mail it.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD,
Bible House, New York Date. .....

Please send me a Free start in business and the two beautiful booklets for boys.

Name. .....

Address .....

Town .....

Age State .....

That Persuasive, Delicious Flavor in Oatmeal

Have you ever thought how lavish Nature is with oats?

She has made this grain a Better body-builder,
Better brain-builder,
Better nerve-builder,
Than any other grain that grows.

She has crowded the oat with more digestible protein, more organic phosphorus and more lecithin than any other cereal food.

She has made it a vim-producer—an energy food—beyond anything else we know.

And to climax all, she has given oatmeal that fascinating flavor. It's the best-liked cereal which comes to our morning table.

What food is so delightful as oatmeal and cream?

Thus the elements needed for the growing child are made enticing to it. The vital foods for growth, work, play and study are made the most attractive.

For sheer delight, regardless of food value, nothing compares in the long run with oatmeal.

Quaker Oats

But the finest flavor lies in rich, plump, luscious oats. So we select those oats by 62 separate siftings. We get but ten pounds of Quaker Oats from a bushel.

These selected oats, prepared by our process, form the finest oat food in existence. Those who want the best—both in flavor and food value—always insist on this brand. The cost, despite its quality, is but one-half cent per dish.

Regular size package, 10c

Family size package, for smaller cities and country trade, 25c.

The prices noted do not apply in the extreme West or South.

Look for the Quaker trademark on every package

The Quaker Oats Company

(221) CHICAGO

Brander Cushing's Ambition

Continued from page 1271

day. I think perhaps you had better see to an extra shift of night watchmen to-night and—"

"And to-morrow night?"

"And to-morrow night."

"Will you guard your own house, Mr. Cushing?"

"No."

"I would if I were you."

"Why?"

"I think it would be safer."

Pause.

"I don't think there is any danger."

"If I were you, Mr. Cushing, I would take some precautions. The men are sore over the neglect on the company's part to put up the escapes."

Cushing turned on the superintendent.

"How are we to blame when we had no notice from the department to put them up?"

"We are not, legally, of course."

"Nor any other way. I had already made plans for them. The escapes would have been up this week. Have I never shown you the plans? Johnson was delayed on the dock valves or he would have had them ready. How could we foresee a defective gas main?"

"We couldn't, of course."

Cushing turned to the safe and with almost childish eagerness took out the plans to which he had called Sidney's attention and showed them to Merrill.

Merrill looked them over carefully and his manner seemed reassured. He handed the papers back respectfully.

"It's a pity, sir, that this could not have been done in time."

"Yes. Well, no one deplores the terrible results more than I do, Merrill. It will be a sad day to-morrow for many people."

"It sure will."

Pause.

"Is there anything more, Mr. Cushing?"

"I think not. You might give Fogerty a good strong word about the yard as you go out."

"All right. Good-night. I hope you will not—"

"No danger, Merrill. Dismiss the idea."

"Sidney is out of town?"

"I sent him to Washington to get things straight on the turret valves."

"Ah, yes, I see. Well, good-night."

"Good-night, Merrill."

When Cushing left the building it was nearly dark, and he was, or thought he was, the last man out of the offices. He stopped to speak to Fogerty as he went out at the big gate. The head night watchman came on duty with the blowing of the five o'clock whistle.

"Everything all right, Fogerty?"

"Yes, sir, I think so. Mr. Merrill gave me orders as he went out to be on guard with the extra night shift."

"I don't think there's any danger. But—go over the draughting-room yourself, before dark."

"I will, sir."

Brander Cushing went home to his solitary meal. He missed Sidney, and almost yielded to a sudden desire to wire him to come home.

But after his meal was over and he had gone into the library, he settled himself to a favorite book of fiction, and read steadily until eleven o'clock.

Then he took out the fire marshal's notice, and slowly laid it on the table. He picked it up again and unfolded and read it. He carefully noted the date, September 18, in a note book and put the book back in his pocket.

Then he rose and, taking the paper, went over to the fireplace. He lighted one of the fancy wax candles on the mantel and for a moment stood still, as if going over every possible point he had elaborated that morning. Then he slowly moved a corner of the paper over to the candle, and when it was lighted flung it down over the ashes of an old fire. As fast as it burned he beat up the charred pieces with the tongs and stirred them up until they flew in black patches up the chimney-place.

When he had gone back to the library table his face was the face of a man who fights at any odds against personal dishonor. But he had not been seated five minutes before a new fear seized him so strongly that he nervously went out into the dining-room, and from there into the hall. It seemed to him he could hear strange noises in different parts of the old house.

He listened. It was half past eleven. The servants slept at the rear up three stories. He opened all the doors between the rooms. The noises, if there had been any, suddenly ceased.

"Angus!" he called.

There was no answer.

He called once more and, getting no reply, shut the doors and went back to the library, smiling at his unusual nervousness.

But when he was seated, he put his hand up and felt the sweat on his face.

He swore; and realized as he did so that an oath was as strange to his lips as a drink of whisky would have been. But at the same instant he heard Athanasia Ward saying:

"She and Helvetia Slova ran to the door and tried to open it, but it was locked. They beat on it with their fists until the flesh came off."

That locked door!

Suppose that fact came out at the trial. What would save him from indictment for manslaughter? Even if he proved that he was not legally guilty of neglect to provide means of safety, how about conditions in the firetrap of a factory owned and controlled by the company, that is, by himself? Would a man like Silas Fleming be apt to overlook a point like that? And what jury on earth, confronted by such a fact as that witnessed by these two girls who were alive to testify, would dare do less than convict?

He stared across his richly furnished library and wished for the break of day. Again he was half minded to send for Sidney. But in the end he grew calmer. Slowly he readjusted himself. No one could charge him with locking the doors. That was the act of a hired hand. Not by his orders. Fleming could never indict him for that. Sidney would stand by him. He remembered what the boy had said that morning: "Father, you know I will stand by." He remembered the gesture of affectionate appeal that went with the words. He was sure of Sidney. And that was the main thing now.

Brander Cushing went up stairs and went to bed. No more noises were heard by him that night. His nerves became steady. He lay down and in five minutes his body was sleeping dreamlessly.

The day of the funerals of the victims of the naval factory horror was a day that will never be forgotten by those who witnessed its dark pageantry.

The entire city seemed to lie under the pall of death. Many of the victims had been recovered from the ruins as unidentified lumps of humanity. The individual funerals were fewer than the general blending of one large interment. Over one hundred bodies of these young girls were buried in terrible rows together in a common grave. The whole city stood still at the place. Thousands walked past the ghastly trench and dropped flowers so thick over the coffins that at the end of half an hour the boxes were glowing mounds of color; while from fathers, mothers and relatives standing there, crowded by masses along that ditch of death, there arose a cry that was like nothing but the united groan that rises

Continued on next page

You'll say "BEAUTIFU
when you see these exqui handkerchiefs with Mexican desi hand-drawn in all four corners natives. Done on daintiest ex sheer handkerchief linen lawn inches square. The very latest s in fine handkerchiefs.

Special ½ price bargain—To acqu you with our beautiful line of Mexi hand-drawn linens, Indian
Rugs, etc., we will send the 4 handkerchiefs shown, prepaid, for ½ price—only Regular price here is $2—city st ask even more.

Same handkerchiefs in rare, sh pure Irish linen, regular price each—all four for $1.60. Either se
Holly Gift Box Free.

$1 Extra Special Bargain—At Co

This very stylish point lace handkerchief is hand-made in Mexico by our best lace workers, imported direct. Made from wheels of No. 80 sheer linen lace thread, with extra sheer fure linen center. 11 inches square. None but our Mexican lace workers have the patience and skill to do this rare needlework. Just the thing to give that "Buffy" effect to your dress that the style demands. A Xmas gift anyone would be proud of. Regular value $1.75—Holiday bargain, not over 2 to a customer. at cost—each $1.

Mexican Lace Baby Hood of the same rare M can handi-work: all lace wheels; all sizes (state baby's age); regular price $1.75; Holiday bargain, each 98

SATISFACTION GUARANTEED or mo back—orders filled day received

FREE GIFT CATALOG of Mexican and Indian Handicr full of unusual Xmas suggestions. It will help you to your friends something different this Xmas. Write for it to

The Francis E. Lester Co., Dept. E 12, Mesilla Park, N.
The Mexican Drawnwork House of the World.

Send for Free Samples

Boiling water on a Steero Bouillon Cube makes rich, appetizing bouillon, ready to serve. Convenient, delicious. Box of 12 sent for 25c if your dealer won't supply you. Tins of 50 and 100 Cubes are more economical.

Schieffelin & Co., 145 William St., New York
Made by American Kitchen Products Co., New York

"STEERO" Bouillon Cubes

Direct from Factory, Freight Prepaid and Guaranteed by the Manufacturer

You can buy a Gold Coin Stove from us $5 to $20 less than dealer's prices. We pay freight; safe delivery insured, polished and all ready to set up.

"Satisfaction or your money back any time within 1 year" is our written guaranty.

Free Catalog—Illustrates all our Stoves. Gives Price List and tells our Plan and Offer. Send for it.

Gold Coin Stove Co.
11 Oak St. Troy, N. Y.

HOLIDAY COMBINATIO

2 Xmas Greeting Letters with Envelopes for . . . 1 or 6 assorted in Fancy Box for 2
10 Xmas Post Cards 1
6 Superior Xmas Post Cards 1
10 New Year Post Cards 1
Any three 10c. packages for 2
Special Assortment of High Grade Post Cards 100 for 6
MADISON ART COMPANY, - - MADISON, CON

Brander Cushing's Ambition

Continued from preceding page

from a great battlefield after the crash of conflict is over.

Brander Cushing had walked out to the place of burial, drawn by an attraction he could not resist nor analyze. It was the last thing in the world he had expected to do when he awoke that morning. But he never accounted for the impulse that dragged him out to the spot. He walked by an unfrequented road, and during the impressive services conducted at a trench he stood on the edge of the crowd, but on a rising piece of ground from which every detail of that day's tragedy was marked as distinct on his brain as if drawn there with a steel etching-point. He spoke to no one. And just before the people began to leave the place, he strode out by the way he had come and walked back into the city as if pursued by living torments.

Urged by another impulse, once in the city he went direct to the shipyard. Fogerty let him in at the big gate.

Once inside, Cushing was himself, alert, clear-eyed, keen and resourceful.

"Anything to report, Fogerty?"

"No, sir; all quiet. Mr. Merrill came over this morning. He made the rounds with me."

"All right, Fogerty. If he or McLeish should happen to come in, tell them I'll be in the loft."

He went to his office first and checked off a list which had been prepared the day before of employees whom he intended to help among the families of those who had suffered. He went over this list with great care and some mental relief. After he had made careful computation of the amount he had decided to use for this purpose, he filed the list away, and went up to the draughting-loft.

This great room at the top of the office building was in many respects the heart of Brander Cushing's whole life during the process of evolving a new warship.

On the floor were chalked out the lines of the vessel drawn to the exact scale. This draughtsmanship called for great skill and perfect knowledge of every detail of construction. No man in America, or for that matter in all the world, had more technical equipment for construction than Brander Cushing. Many of the draughting-plans in this big loft were entirely original with him and had been eagerly sought for by shipbuilders in Europe and South America, and Brander Cushing's name was regarded as synonymous with genius as an expert in the largest establishments in Belfast and Kiel, at Brest and Clyde.

He was alone in the place, and as always when confronting the magic white curves and cross lines of section divisions of the yet unbuilt wardragon, he soon lost himself completely in the vision he was able to see of the finished product, the stately, powerful, fully equipped vessel that those white skeleton chalk marks represented.

Already, with the closing of the door, had vanished from his mind the dirge and sob and heartbreak of that wailing-place out there where the unidentified dead lay so thick together. Already his mind had ceased to toss back and forth all the possibilities of Silas Fleming's action. The only thing in all the world for Brander Cushing was his ambition, his lifework crowned by this new creation of Death, biggest and most terrible of all civilized nations' armament to kill or defy killing.

He took a piece of draughtsman's chalk and got down on the floor to make a correction. He had measured off a line and put his knee on the marker when he heard a step behind him.

He had just turned his head, thinking the step was that of Merrill or McLeish, when with a single bound a man was upon him, flinging himself down on his back like some wild tropical beast.

He was taken completely by surprise. The impact of his assailant's body bore his own with a tremendous plunge flat upon the floor.

But instinctively his old trained athletic habits sprung into action. It was not for nothing he had prided himself all these years on his unusual vigor, and, above all, on a rapidity of muscular movement that most men of even thirty do not possess.

He flung his right arm up with a vicious and deliberate thrust into the man's face, which through the violence of his onslaught was down over his shoulder. He felt his elbow crash and the man's hold loosened, as he snarled an oath of pain. With a lightning swiftness, Brander Cushing twisted over, caught the man in a grip at the back of his neck, and twisted his whole body over. The two grappled as they lay, rolling over and over the chalk lines. Even then Brander Cushing was enraged to think that some of his most careful and painstaking work was perhaps being rubbed out. The very absurdity of it in one sense added to the fury of his struggle and shortened it. He managed to get his hands around the other's throat. He felt the murderer's red-blooded passion as he gripped him. And then the man suddenly, as if his strength were taken away, relaxed so quickly that his head swung over. Cushing fell with all his own weight upon him and bore him down. The man's head struck one of the measuring weights with a thud. And Cushing, breathless and torn, leaned over him as he lay there unconscious.

The man still lay there after Cushing had risen to his feet. Seeing that he was stunned, Cushing coolly went over to one of the washstands at the end of the loft, washed his hands and face, took off his coat, brushed it and his clothes, put his coat on, and then slowly walked back to where the man was still lying.

He looked frail and light to attack a man like Cushing, and Cushing's first feeling was almost one of chagrin that such an insignificant creature could have given him such a struggle.

The man opened his eyes and sat up.

Cushing pulled a stool out from one of the clerk's copying-tables, sat down on it and confronted him.

The man put his hand up to his head and looked with a dazed and questioning stare at the contractor.

"Well?"

"How did I come here?"

"Just what I was going to ask you?"

"Ask me?"

"Yes. You ought to know better than I do."

"What have I been doing?"

"Rubbing out my lines, for one thing," snarled Cushing suddenly. "Get up, you hound. Get up off my lines, or I'll break your neck!"

To be continued

How to Clean Old Laces

To clean old laces, too delicate in texture to be rubbed by hand, fill a quart pickle jar about half full of tepid water in which white soap has been boiled. Add a teaspoonful of powdered borax. Put the laces in the jar, shake the jar, but not roughly. The liquid mixture may be repeated several times if it shows discoloration. Rinse the lace in fresh warm water several times in the same way, then gently press the pieces out and pin them severally on white cloth or white paper. Bleach them in the sun. This recipe comes from high professional authority.

A GRATEFUL SUBSCRIBER

I thank you very much for your prompt delivery of the premiums, The Women of the Bible, also the Almanac, which is valuable. I will highly prize both and will try to get some new subscribers for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

Philadelphia, Pa. MISS E. L. PATTEN.

In the busy holiday time put in a good supply of this ready-prepared nourishing food that every one likes

Snider

PROCESS

Pork and Beans

Order them by the case and have them ready—for the Sunday breakfast, with brown bread; for the weekday luncheon; as a vegetable side dish, as a meat substitute or as a salad for dinner. They work in delightfully, in dozens of ways, and when a friend drops in unexpectedly Snider's Pork & Beans will enable you to set forth an appetizing, dainty and delicious repast in a few minutes.

They are one of the staples that should always be in the pantry. It is a matter of wisdom as well as of convenience, to serve Snider's Pork & Beans frequently. Beans are 84 per cent. rich in nutriment. In every pound of beans there is nearly a quarter of a pound of nitrogenous proteid—the element in food which makes and renews the body tissues, supplies strength. Beans are one of nature's richest food gifts and should form a constant and prominent part of the diet in every home. Beans are for strength—just what everyone must have—and Snider's Beans supply that strength in the most easily digestible form. The Snider way of preparing and cooking the beans dissolves out the elements which cause distress, in some beans. Snider's are digested with ease, even by persons whose digestion is very delicate.

BEAN CELERY SALAD

(Try this—one of the most delicious ways of serving Snider's Pork & Beans)

1 pint Snider's Pork & Beans
4 tablespoons celery cut into one-eighth inch rings.
2 tablespoons finely chopped onions.
½ cup Snider's Salad Dressing.
½ cup whipped cream.
Lettuce and olives.

Mix first four ingredients in a dish, marinating thoroughly, but stirring very lightly with salad spoon and fork. Arrange lettuce leaves around edge of salad bowl and in the center make a handsome mound of the salad mixture. Garnish with tiny lettuce leaves, and olives pitted and cut into fourths.

HELEN MAR THOMSON.

Snider's Pork & Beans give the housewife a feeling of security. She knows every bean will roll out "just so," handsome and whole, cooked, with a bit of pork jowl, to tender, digestible perfection, and deliciously seasoned with a sauce unequaled, made from the luscious Snider's Tomato Catsup.

Your order for a case of Snider's Beans should include a case of Snider's Catsup, and Chili Sauce, assorted.

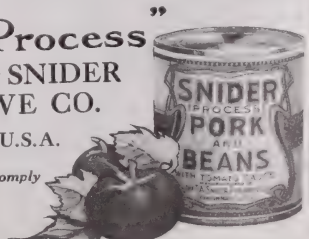
Snider's Tomato Catsup is indispensable to the housewife who has once learned its convenience in seasoning gravies, soups, making meat sauces, and as a zest for meats, hot or cold, fish and oysters in all forms.

Snider's Chili Sauce is, beyond all comparison, a most delicious relish upon meats.



Made of superior materials, Snider's goods keep. Be sure to order Snider's.

"It's the Process"

THE T. A. SNIDER PRESERVE CO.

CINCINNATI, U.S.A.

All Snider Products comply with all Pure Food Laws of the world.

Chats by the Holiday Fireside

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER

The Season's Bugle Call

WEEKS before Christmas is really here, the first bugle call of the glad holidays thrills us with its sweetness and charms us with its mystery. It is like no other bugle call, not like that which summons to fields of conquest, not like the tocsin of ambition, and, indeed, not like anything at all except the wonderful and gentle and divine intonation of love. Children just now are carrying about in their transparent faces the happiest secrets. They are hiding away bits of needlework that are to be slipped into mother's Christmas stocking. They are painting little pictures to be presented to father, and are planning surprises for their dearest friends. Wives are perturbed about Christmas shopping because they have to make their money stretch over so large a number of purchases, and also because they do not want husbands to say that the Christmas gifts bestowed upon them have in any way been paid for by their labor. As every one knows, the choice of gifts for a man is more limited than that for a woman. You may count upon your fingers the articles suitable to present at Christmas to the man of the house, while the list of desirable, beautiful and attractive holiday gifts sure to overbrim the lady of the house with surprise and gratification is almost endless.

At the first bugle call of the holidays, every one who can possibly do so should begin Christmas shopping and complete it if practicable. The congested condition of the shops during the holiday season bears hardly upon those who sell goods, and sends saleswomen and clerks to bed at night with haggard faces and tired nerves. If the task is difficult for the customer, especially if she be one of those who cannot make a quick decision, or who must very carefully count every penny that she spends, it is doubly hard for the tradespeople who must do their very best and whose feet grow weary with long standing behind the counter. The atmosphere of the shops is usually close, in contrast with the crisp air of the early winter outside. People who serve the public should be considered at Christmas-tide. The overburdened mails, the vast accumulation of parcels sent to and fro by express, the belated efforts of delivery wagons to discharge goods at the right places, and, in fact, everything else that inheres in the general flurry and bustle of tardy Christmas shopping, should appeal to the kind-hearted not in vain. We may all assist in relieving our neighbors who have too much to do in getting ready for Christmas.

A stroll through the holiday markets is extremely fascinating. Fruits have been brought from every corner of the continent, and in gorgeous heaps attract the attention of city purchasers. In many of the inland towns and villages there are markets even more interesting than those of the big cities, in which one may see the farmers' wives themselves presiding in their stalls over the products they have brought from home.

The bugle call of Christmas, faint and sweet and fluting in our ears, is bidding us now to our annual feast of love.

* * *

Open Secrets of Health

WHY should we not master the science of health in our daily living so thoroughly that the interruption of illness shall become extremely exceptional? Why must we take it for granted that colds are to be our portion in wintry weather? What excuse is there for being only half well, physically, and in consequence less than half well mentally and spiritually? Body and mind are so firmly and closely united that when one suffers the other is depressed. People in a high state of health are usually buoyant and gay, and they are good company for their friends and have little to do with morbid thoughts. What are the open secrets of keeping well?

These secrets are given by a medical writer as freedom from worry and hurry, with plenty of rest, plenty of sleep, and systematic exercise in the open air. Plenty of sleep does more to refresh the weary brain and ease the tired limbs of the workingman and the busy housewife than any remedy within reach of humanity. The amount of sleep needed by the individual differs according to age, temperament and daily toil. Children require from ten to twelve hours of nightly sleep. As they grow older eight hours may be sufficient. The division of the day into periods of eight hours is ideal, but for many of us it is not practical. Eight hours for sleep, eight for toil, and eight for diversion would divide the twenty-four ideally for many people. There are brain workers and men of affairs who habitually work twelve or fourteen hours of the twenty-four—not always because they are obliged to do so, but often because their work drives them with an insistent pressure unknown to those whose labor is chiefly manual. The quality of sleep has more to do with health than the quantity. Half-past ten at night is a good bed-time hour, but thousands of people scorn the idea of turning out the lights and slipping into the darkness and courting sleep so long before midnight.

Freedom from worry should be sought by all who would remain well. It is easy to prescribe this and few of us deny that we envy the little children who are as royal as kings and queens in their blithe acceptance of each hour as it comes. The truth is that our worries are not always selfish. They concern our dear ones, and while often they are unavailing, they eat like moth and rust into the tissues of life. Suppose we do our best to preserve health by dropping our needless worries and casting our cares upon Him who cares for us and keeps us evermore in his loving thought?

As for exercise out of doors, it is neglected by women in general unless they have an object to call them forth. The trouble of putting on wraps and thick shoes in wintry weather merely for the sake of a walk when there is not an errand to be done, a shop to visit or a meeting to attend, seems an insuperable obstacle. Indoor exercise may be taken with the windows open, but it does not afford the quality of vitality and the tonic that are gained from freedom of movement in the open air.

* * *

How May It Be Explained?

TWO figures are walking down the street. One is that of a tall, fine-looking and scholarly man; the other that of a plain, small and rather ordinary looking woman. They are husband and wife, and they have been married a quarter-century. Their friends know this, because only a month ago the pair celebrated their

Continued on next page

AGENTS Make $30 per Wk. This AWL sews a lock stitch like a machine. Best thing ever made for repairing Harness, Shoes, etc. A dozen exclusive features. Demand is immense. Sales astounding. Roy Sage writes "Rec'd Awl today sold 5 in 15 min." L. Perrine says "Sold 9 on way home with sample." Lowest price, biggest profit, greatest value, quick sales. Drop everything and write for sample and instructions. ANCHOR MFG. CO. Dept. 834 DAYTON, O.

Cornish Sent On A Year's Trial

Sold Under Bond To Please

Don't buy hastily—insist that the maker prove his instrument and you will know whether it will please you and is all the seller claimed.

Cornish pianos and organs are sent on trial to demonstrate quality without obligating prospective buyers to keep them and are sold on a binding basis that, if not exactly as represented or in any way unsatisfactory, the instrument will be taken back at any time within a year, refunding all purchase money, together with freight charges both ways.

Sold At Factory Prices

By the Cornish "Year's Approval Plan" you buy intelligently, save one-third or more of regular retail price, and get an instrument of renowned quality and superior tone. Perfection of material and workmanship guaranteed for 25 years.

You Choose Your Own Terms

Send today for the handsome Cornish Book, which explains fully our very liberal terms of selling plans and shows the latest styles of pianos and organs. You should have this beautifully illustrated book, whether you buy or not.

Cornish Co. Washington, N. J.

Established Over Half a Century

"DON'T SHOUT"

"I hear you. I can hear now as well as anybody. 'How?' Oh, something new—The MORLEY PHONE I've a pair in my ears now, but they are invisible. I would not know I had them in, myself, only that I hear all right."

The MORLEY PHONE for the DEAF

makes low sounds and whispers plainly heard. Invisible, comfortable, weightless and harmless. Anyone can adjust it. Over Hundred Thousand Sold. Write for booklet and testimonials. THE MORLEY CO., Dept. 754, Perry Building, Philadelphia

DON'T PAY TWO PRICES

Save $18.00 to $22.00 on

HOOSIER RANGES AND HEATERS

Why not buy the best when you can buy them at such low prices? Write for our Free Catalog and Price Book. Our new improvements absolutely surpass anything ever produced. SEND POSTAL TODAY FOR OUR FREE CATALOG AND PRICE.

Hoosier Steel

HOOSIER STOVE FACTORY 164 State St. Marion, Ind.

PATENT YOUR IDEA

$3,500 offered for one invention. Book "How to Obtain a Patent" and "What to Invent" sent free. Send rough sketch for free report as to patentability. Patents advertised for sale at our expense in Manufacturers Journals.

Patent Obtained or Fee Returned

CHANDLEE & CHANDLEE, Patent Attorneys

Established 16 Years

925 F. Street, Washington, D. C.

6% NET

For 36 years we have been paying our customers the highest returns consistent with conservative methods. First mortgage loans of $200 and upward which we can recommend after the most thorough personal investigation. Please ask for Loan List No. 8. 6% Certificates of Deposit also for saving investors.

PERKINS & CO. Lawrence, K

Chats by the Holiday Fireside

Continued from preceding page

ilver anniversary. They are a devoted couple, yet the question is often asked by those who meet them for the first time, what did these two see in one another? What was the special attraction that magnetically drew William to Lucy and Lucy to William? They still seem to outsiders to have little in common, the man absorbed in books when not occupied with business, and his wife finding her whole world—a world of contentment and peace—within the four walls of her home. What is the secret that explains the utter happiness in marriage of a wife and husband who are apparently quite dissimilar?

The first explanation is that they are both possessed by strong and faithful love, the love that lives, the love that stands all sorts of rough weather, the love that shares bravely the adversity, and tranquilly the day of prosperity.

The second explanation is that their differences of temperament complement their qualities, so that in their blended lives there is no dissonance and no discordant jar. A distinguished author, who had earned fame and glory on two continents, once observed to an intimate friend that he owed a debt far beyond his power to pay to the gentle wife who had been his companion and comrade, who had given him the sheltering atmosphere of her perfect housekeeping and home-making and who had stimulated him to do his best by always expecting it, and giving him the assurance that he could not fall below a certain standard.

A minister who was unusually successful in his parish work and whose preaching led many to come out and pledge themselves for Christ, said to one who congratulated him on the success of his ministry: "I should never have been able to do my work, and the congregation would have been the losers, but for the unobtrusive spirituality and the example set me by my wife."

When Abraham Lincoln was nominated for the presidency, he turned to those around him and said, "There is a little woman at home who will be glad of this." Love at first sight, or love after long acquaintanceship, if it be true love, is a divine gift. It is the alchemy that transmutes to gold the common things of the common day. At the wedding in Cana of Galilee, where our Lord was a guest, he changed the ordinary water into the best wine. When he sanctifies the love of the human heart he repeats this miracle. The outside observer may not know what William first saw in Lucy, or what made Lucy care for William. In point of fact, the outside critic need have no concern in the matter. He or she may be sure that the plain little woman, or, if the case be reversed, the ordinary man, is beautiful in the eyes of the life partner. Have you anything to say on this subject? If so, write.

How His Prayer Was Answered

JAMES BROWN was in the retail coal business in a seaport town in Massachusetts. War had been declared with Spain and Mr. Brown knew the railroads could not bring coal enough to supply the seaboard towns. His customers were all eager to order their next winter's coal. The coal companies would not drop the price. There was but one thing to do, order forward all the coal that was called for at the high winter schedule, and await the results, which he did, and very soon a large quantity of coal was being received, and more was on the way. With the victory over the Spanish fleet in Manila Bay, conditions changed. It was practically the end of the war. The price of coal dropped at the mines. Customers knew this and many either refused to pay, or asked to have their orders cancelled. Conditions began to look bad for Mr. Brown, who saw no way to pay for the large stock of coal so unexpectedly on hand. The coal companies had refused to wait for payments before. His only way was to do his best and trust in God for help, and he worked and prayed. For three months he worked as never before. He could hardly sleep or eat. The crisis was near. The coal companies had taken his notes, but with the understanding that no renewals would be given. It came Saturday afternoon. There were two notes still unpaid, one due next Tuesday for $700, and one due next Friday, for $800. The merchant earnestly sought God's help and guidance. And it came. He felt that his prayer would be answered, and that the notes would be paid. That night he slept well. Monday morning before seven o'clock he was at his office, and met a customer who said: "I made an agreement with you to pay for my coal on the first of September, but my wife had some money sent to her last Saturday, and we have concluded we had better pay for the coal and feel better, so I have brought you a check for $92.50." The nine o'clock mail brought a check from the School Board for $700, paying thirty days previous to custom. Before noon another man bought twenty tons of coal for cash. Everything flowed in like a river, and the obligations were fully met.

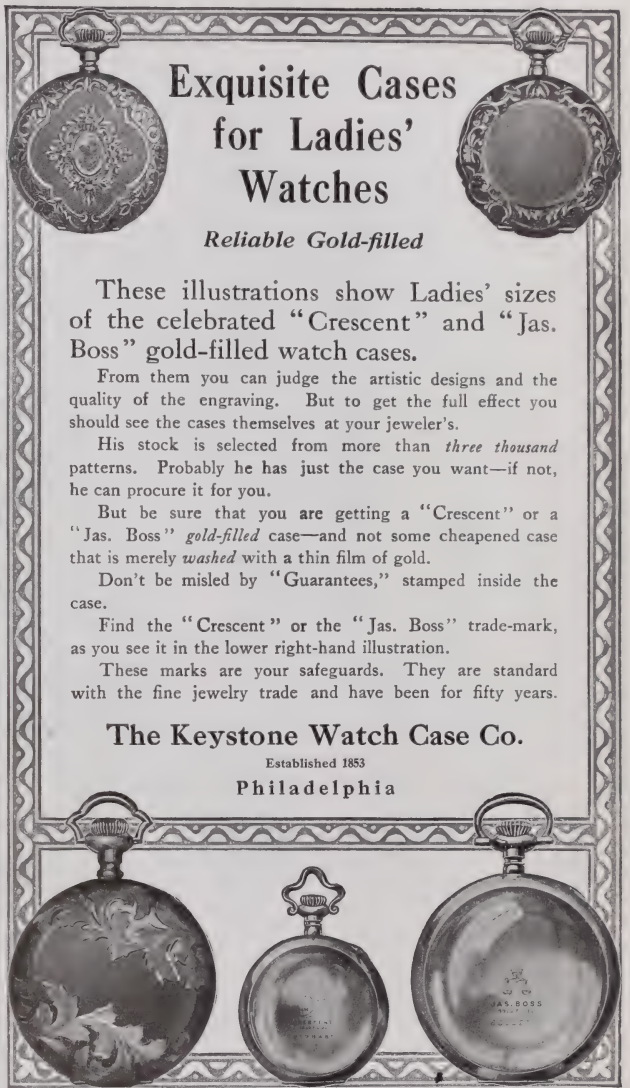
This is an actual experience of one who now holds an office of trust among his fellow citizens. A. W. W.

Needham, Mass.

Among the Workers

—THE UNION RESCUE MISSION of Poughkeepsie, N. Y., celebrated its seventeenth birthday recently. It was founded November 1, 1894, by the present superintendent, Charles H. Madison. Its employment bureau, lunch rooms, sleeping apartments and reading room and the helpfulness of its superintendent are recognized as of permanent worth.

—THE REV. DR. THOMAS C. YARNALL, rector emeritus of St. Mary's Church and the oldest clergyman in the United States, died on November 28 at his home, No. 3914 Locust Street, Philadelphia. Dr. Yarnall was ninety-six years old, and had been for more than fifty years rector of the church prior to his retirement in 1898. Dr. Yarnall was born in Philadelphia on December 10, 1815.



—MR. G. A. MATTHEWS, No. 144 South Clark Street, Chicago, writes to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD: "We have made arrangements whereby any lecturer can secure entirely free of charge, for an afternoon or evening entertainment, a very beautiful set of 125 lantern slides (colored) of the Yellowstone National Park. A lecture goes with this, thus enabling any one to give the lecture in showing the slides, which take you from Gardiner, Mont., through the Yellowstone, making the complete trip and seeing all the important sights of the world's wonderland. Requests will be filled in the order of their application. This offer remains good for the entire winter."

—MISSIONARY H. J. VON QUALEN, of Canton, China, asks interested readers to send him Sunday School cards and suitable picture cards, for distribution among Chinese Sunday School children and also for limited distribution in his services among the Chinese people.

Best of All Almanacs

Your Almanac for 1912 has been received. It is indeed the greatest and most helpful almanac I have ever seen. You have my many thanks for it. E. W. LANDIS.

Reading, Pa.

Exquisite Cases for Ladies' Watches

Reliable Gold-filled

These illustrations show Ladies' sizes of the celebrated "Crescent" and "Jas. Boss" gold-filled watch cases.

From them you can judge the artistic designs and the quality of the engraving. But to get the full effect you should see the cases themselves at your jeweler's.

His stock is selected from more than three thousand patterns. Probably he has just the case you want—if not, he can procure it for you.

But be sure that you are getting a "Crescent" or a "Jas. Boss" gold-filled case—and not some cheapened case that is merely washed with a thin film of gold.

Don't be misled by "Guarantees," stamped inside the case.

Find the "Crescent" or the "Jas. Boss" trade-mark, as you see it in the lower right-hand illustration.

These marks are your safeguards. They are standard with the fine jewelry trade and have been for fifty years.

The Keystone Watch Case Co.

Established 1853

Philadelphia

SEND A POSTAL FOR THIS

FREE ENCYCLOPEDIC DIGEST

Different from anything else you ever saw—in fact a little encyclopedia in itself—covering many subjects. Handsomely illustrated, showing Ely, the Aviator, flying from deck of a warship—fine halftone of President Taft—realistic pictures of animals and flowers—scenes showing new ideas in agriculture—modern methods of child instruction, etc., etc.

We want you to have this Digest, because it will tell you all about the most wonderful encyclopedia ever printed, all complete in two Bible paper volumes—each only 1½ inches thick, but 2,700 pages and 8,500 subjects in all. Handy to keep around anywhere—reliable up-to-date information, boiled down so you can get at it quickly. Costs so little you will be astonished. Get your postal in the next mail and we will also send you free a rich Christmas gift book without advertising. Send today.

W. B. CONKEY & COMPANY
Printers and Bookbinders
Dept. 29 HAMMOND, INDIANA

An Open Winter

for the man living in the Southeast.

Pleasant summers and mild winters make the South the ideal home country. Wonderful opportunities for investments in land which will soon be worth double its present cost. Its producing qualities are limitless.

Prices now range from $10 an acre up.

Two to three crops from the same soil per season. Fruit, truck, alfalfa, corn, cotton, wheat, etc., yield large profits.

Beef and Pork produced at 3 to 4 cents

Special literature on each State. Let us know which interests you. Write at once.

M. V. RICHARDS,
L. & I. Agt., South. Ry.,
Room 19
Washington, D.C.

CLASS PINS

Attractive New Catalogue of elegant up-to-date designs, Class and Fraternity Pins, Emblems, Enameled and Jeweled, Class Rings Trophies and Medals mailed free on request. All pins mounted with our patent safety clasp. Work Guaranteed.

PETER PAUL & SJN, Jewelers and Stationers
138 North Pearl Street Dept. A. Buffalo, N. Y.
COLLEGE SCHOOL FRATERNITY

MARVEL SOLDER

INSTANTLY MENDS ALL LEAKS

In all kinds of household utensils—enameled, tin, iron, copper, brass, etc. Solders Without Heat. Just squeeze from tube and spread over hole or crack with fingers. Hardening, it makes solid, smooth surface. Pitches all machinery. Fine for motorists.

Send 10c for trial tube.

MARVEL SOLDER CO. AGENTS WANTED
1937 Broadway Dept. 8 New York QUICK SALES BIG PROFITS

TYPEWRITERS FACTORY REBUILT

Save $25 to $50 on any make Typewriter. Our Factory Rebuilt Typewriters are perfect in quality, condition and lines. Durable and reliable in construction and serviceable in every way. Buy from the largest typewriter rebuilding establishment in the world. We guarantee for one year against defect in workmanship and material. Write for catalogue and address of nearest branch office.

American Writing Machine Co.
345 Broadway, New York

SPENCERIAN STEEL PENS

The Pens that put the ink on the paper without a splutter.

Sample card of 12 different numbers and 2 good penholders for 10 cents.

SPENCERIAN PEN CO., 349 Broadway, New York

Ancient Nanking Under Fire

Continued from page 1263

Seventy-two bells are suspended from these chains: altogether the bells of the pagoda number 152. On the outside of the tower hang 128 lanterns of thin oyster shell, which is, in China, a substitute for glass. This gentle light, bathing the delicately tinted tower itself, makes the great pagoda at night a thing of still more entrancing beauty.

The whole magnificent structure is a temple to Buddha. The great hall of the temple occupies the ground floor. On the site of the present edifice temple after temple has stood, reaching back to a very early age. In A.D. 240 the Emperor Ta Te repaired and adorned an obelisk which had stood here, dedicated to Buddha as the Fostering King. This obelisk was later entirely destroyed by fire. The present structure was reared during the years 1412 to 1431. The building was begun by the Emperor Yung Lo, as a tribute of gratitude to his mother. Yung Lo died six years before the tower was finished, but it is still called the Temple of Gratitude.

Pu Yi, the Five-Year-Old Emperor

Together with the accounts of the war, gloomy reports of famine in various parts of the empire are being sent. A famine relief committee has been formed, which will add to the regular work of relief the reclamation of land threatened by submersion.

Poor China! Torn by war, tugged at by two factions, neither of which seems really able to rule, watched hungrily by great powers who would doubtless be glad of an excuse for dividing her vast territories among themselves, suffering from famine and from flood, from a new generation of pestilential pirates and robbers, this pathetic nation labors toward a better life. And the new and better life will come. Ghastly as are the costs of the present struggle, the struggle itself will lead to a new age of peace and truth and wealth for the people of the Celestial Empire.

The Church will be at hand, ready to help guide the distracted nation toward the Light of the World. The brave missionaries have held their ground; some have lost their lives. And when the noise of war has ceased, their voices will have new and better access to the hearts of these people who are stretching out their hands for liberty—and for God.

John Marchesson's Jewel

Continued from page 1267

Sunken in heavy memories, Marchesson made slow reply.

"I have no reckoning. I ask no wages. I have thrown away my one great talent. I ask no pay."

The Presence sat as one in thought.

"Yet it is written: To each his hire. Take that which is yours."

He lifted his shielding hand from the mystery that it had hidden. Into Marchesson's palm he laid a small gleaming hoard: the wages of his weary days.

And Marchesson stared at that small shining treasure, unbelieving. For he knew that the riches of an empire lay in his hand. Strange jewels they were, of deep unearthly splendor. Rubies, like crystal fire; soft sparkling emeralds, fresh and clear as little happy voices; in the midst, like a white flame, one great white gleaming pearl.

"These are not mine! I have no right—" the old man stammered, trembling. Then a great wonder knocked at his heart, and a great wild, frightened hope awoke and beat its wings. "I have earned nothing—"

"You have earned nothing? What of the barren fields that you sowed? What of the old sad kin that you have comforted? What of your city? The city where the young men walk with the feet of conquerors; where the mother laughs to her child in content?

"Truly I have accused you. For you denied your royal gift. Yet you put it away to win a nobler fortune. You, sculptor born, creator in every breath, you turned from your marble to work in the living clay. Have you not earned your wage? Is not the laborer worthy of his hire?"

Marchesson lay and stared at the wonder in his hands. The rose and glow of the rainbow opals; the dew and flame of the royal stones. But the pearl—

It lay before him, exquisite as a white flower; lovely as the sweetness of rain on a parched land, the sound of a beloved name.

"The pearl?" He hardly dared to speak.

"Need you ask? Can you not know?"

Marchesson strained his eyes to see. Only the pearl lay there, in its white radiance. Yet the fragrance of jasmine came blowing softly across his cheek. He put out one groping hand. For a breath, that unforgotten face shone radiant through the dusk: the face of his fair love, with the starlight in her eyes.

The shadows deepened. The last coal dropped to ashes. The Presence rose, and stood as one who will depart.

Then John Marchesson turned on his pillows, with all his old grave courtesy, to bid his guest farewell.

But the Presence gave him no word. Only it pushed back the masking cowl that shielded its face. For a long moment, John Marchesson looked full into that face. Terrible it was, yet beautiful: transfigured with a stern and splendid light. The face of that talent that he had denied, and, in denying, honored. The face of his own Gift.

Then Marchesson gathered his wages into both tired hands. And the jewels seemed to turn and cling in his fingers, like a warm answering hand. And, brave and content, he turned his face away towards coming night.

So went John Marchesson out of the city that he had loved and served. And those who bent above him saw on his face the shadow of his long patient years, and yet a strange and wondering look of triumph. The look of one who stands, after long years of wandering, before the gates of his own home at last, and wonders to find it even more fair and splendid than all his wistful dreams.

HER PREMIUMS PLEASE GREATLY

Your Almanac for 1912 and the Women of the Bible were duly received yesterday, and I am delighted with both. I thank you very much. Would not know what to do without THE CHRISTIAN HERALD; it is invaluable.

West Chester, Pa. MISS MATILDA E. P.

Born "A Poor White"

IN hundreds of square miles of the mountain region of the South there are tens of thousands of children whose homes are squalid cabins; whose ancestors for generations, though honest, industrious and God-fearing, are ignorant and poor beyond belief—and who have no school books, let alone school—no wise and loving care, no hope for anything better in life unless we who have been born to better things give them a chance.

LINCOLN MEMORIAL UNIVERSITY, Cumberland Gap, Tenn., was founded by Gen. O. O. Howard on a plan offering admission to white boys and girls willing to work their way for their education. The principles have proven enormously successful, but the school has for some time been painfully overcrowded. Graduates returning to the hills to teach others have awakened a great eagerness for better things. The school is now a living tribute and will be the greatest of all memorials to Lincoln.

An Appeal In Lincoln's Name

The dollar bills of old soldiers, of country school teachers who had to struggle for their own education, the checks of the rich man and the small sums of the very poor are being received. With each donation comes a letter which shows just how profound is the love and veneration for the name of Lincoln among the American people, and how great is the sympathy for these white boys and girls at Cumberland Gap, Tennessee, the mountainous region of five southern States, who are shut off as their fathers have been, by barriers of ignorance and poverty, from participation in the affairs and the progress of the nation.

Every patriot should join in this tribute to Lincoln and do a share toward the education of these people—the only ones for whom no educational provision has been made.

We do not gauge the interest of our friends by the size of their contributions, and are thankful for each and every sum, whether it be large or small. Please send your contribution now, when it is so urgently needed, to the Treasurer, Theodore P. Gilman, 1170 Broadway, New York.

Lincoln University Endowment Association

1170 Broadway, New York

THOMAS H. HUBBARD, Acting President. WILLIAM H. TAFT, Honorary Vice-President.
THEODORE P. GILMAN, Treasurer. ROBERT LEE DUNN, Director.

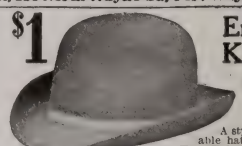
YOU CAN AFFORD to have a new Song Book in you Church or Sunday School, and on for every person when you can ge
"FAMILIAR SONGS OF THE GOSPEL" for $3 for 100. Words and music, 83 very bes songs. Sample copy 5 cents. E. A. K. Hackett, 114 North Wayne St., Fort Wayne, Ind

5% An Investment Both Safe AND Profitable



WE pay earnings from the day of deposit to the day of withdrawal. These earnings for eighteen years have been 5% on the deposits of our patrons compounded semi-annually, or remitted by check, as desired. Our business is conducted under the strictest regulations of the New York banking laws, and deposits are secured by mortgages on the best class of New York and suburban real estate.

Money May Be Withdrawn At Any Time Upon Short Notice

This convenience, with the thorough safety of capital and the liberal earnings, make deposits with this company an ideal investment. Assets $2,500,000. Deposits received personally, or by mail. Patrons all over the world. Write for particulars; probably we can refer you to someone in your locality.

INDUSTRIAL SAVINGS & LOAN CO. 5% PER ANNUM

Industrial Savings & Loan Co.
2 Times Bldg., B'way & 42d St., New York

$1  Englis Knocl abou Ha

A stylish serv able hat. Genu Fur Felt. Folds compact roll without damag Can be shaped into Alpine or Telescope. Silk trimmir Colors: Black, Steel Gray, Brown. Actual va $2.00. Sent postpaid promptly on receipt of $1. State size and color wanted. Money refunded if not satisfact

Packed in Beautiful Holiday Boxes

PANAMA HAT CO., Dept. C, 830 Broadway, New York

BEACON LAMP BURNER FREE

100,000 satisfied users Incandescent. 100 Candle Power. Burns common coal oil. Gives better light than gas, electricity or six ordinary lamps at one-tenth the cost. Fits your old lamp Unequaled for fine sewing or reading.

COSTS ONLY ONE CENT FOR SIX HOURS

We want one person in each locality to whom we can refer new customers. Take advantage of our Special Offer to secure a Beacon Burner FREE. Write today. Agents Wanted. HOME SUPPLY COMPANY, 324 Home Building, Kansas City, Mo.

These trade-mark cross-lines on every packag GLUTEN FLOUR DIET FOR DIABETICS

Kidney and Liver Troubles, Rheumatism, Obesity and ills arising from excess of Uric Acid

Rich in Protein. Ask your physician. Leading grocers For booklet or sample, write

FARWELL & RHINES, Watertown, N.Y., U.S.A.

NEWAY CUT-READY-TO-STITCH WAISTS

DRESSES and other GARMENTS will save you one-half the cost of you dressmaking bills. Cheaper and bette than ready-made garments. We d all cutting, furnish all material. Al you do is the sewing. Write to-da for catalog, free samples, etc

Satisfaction guaranteed or mone back. Agents who can furnish Al refer ences wanted for unoccupied territor St. Lawrence Mills, Box 69, Ogdensburg, N.Y

The Progress of Peace

ONE of the most inspiriting phases of the Peace Movement is the persistence with which its advocates continue undauntedly to work in its cause.

Most of the work is being done on conservative lines, with results that are little short of astonishing. Few people realized, for example, that on a certain day in November ministers of all denominations throughout the country and almost with one accord would, from their pulpits, preach the Gospel of Peace. Yet on Sunday, the 26th of November, the old argument that the Church should avoid entering into the spirit of politics or intruding into the domain of the state was set aside or modified, and International Peace was the text of many thousands of sermons throughout the land. This was a great step.

Five and ten-minute talks on the principles of Peace are becoming a part of our school curriculum. Peace tracts, pamphlets, sermons and messages are being printed in vast numbers, and dealt out to the public.

Few of us realize that emissaries from most English-speaking countries are distributed over the world, preaching the Gospel of Peace. Dr. Charles R. Brown of Yale Divinity School has been in England for many months preaching our doctrines of peace, and he announced to astonished audiences that the United States was spending 70 per cent. of its national income on war and the results of war. "What would you think," he asked humorously, "of a household that spent 70 per cent. of its earnings on guns and court plaster?" This astonishing announcement was taken up and quoted and thought upon the length and breadth of English-speaking nations.

A famous Dutch speaker at The Hague recently announced in his address, which all the world is reading, that a world truce of ten years or more will be absolutely necessary soon among the great powers to restore the industrial equilibrium, because the work of the soldiers is so greatly needed in agriculture, trade and art. The working people can no longer bear the burden of taxation. The European peasant is well nigh exhausted with carrying the soldier on his back. These are strong arguments.

Professor Nitobe, the great Peace emissary from Japan, is assuring us, in a series of lectures to be delivered in the principal cities from the Pacific coast to the Atlantic seaboard, that Japan is heart and soul a Peace advocating nation.

Rev. Dr. John Henry Jowett recently said, in speaking of the Church's attitude toward the great vital question of peace: "Our course is clear. In the name of the Prince of Peace we must by prayer and speech and deed strengthen the President of the United States in his great mission, and in the house of God we shall by prayer and supplication register our aspiration for that bright and holy day when nation shall not lift sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more."

An International Celebration

Prominent citizens in every large city are being appointed to arrange for a vast Peace celebration in the year of the hundredth anniversary of the peace among English-speaking peoples.

A national committee has been organized in conjunction with similar movements in Great Britain, Canada and other parts of the English-speaking world. This committee plans to commemorate the peace anniversary by the erection of permanent and beautiful memorials.

Senator Elihu Root suggests that for a given five minutes on February 17, 1915, the anniversary of the ratification by the American and British Governments of the treaty signed at Ghent, all human activity, as far as possible, shall cease, and that the hundred and fifty million English-speaking people throughout the world shall engage in a silent prayer for peace on earth, good will to men. Truly these are wondrous days!

The Federal Council of Churches, representing thirty-one American religious bodies with eighteen million members, has appointed a Commission on Peace and Arbitration, whose duty it shall be to set forth in every practical way the facts that Christ's Gospel is pre-eminently one of peace, and that it is the duty of the churches to indorse without reservation the treaties proposed by President Taft.

The development of the doctrines of international arbitration, considered from the standpoint of its ultimate benefits to the human race, is the most vital movement of modern times.

In his most recent message on the subject of Peace, President Taft appeals in this way to the women of America to support these treaties:

"Now is the time to act. Every woman who reads should write to one or more of the Senators representing her State in Congress, and urge that the peace treaties be ratified. Every individual, every club, every church, every newspaper and every magazine should use all possible means," he goes on to say, "to induce the Senate to submit to public opinion," which in this case is unquestionably with the President.

It is as though the world were preparing to bloom forth in a realized Gospel of Peace that shall hold nations at bay and cry "Shame!" on any that dare advocate cruel, unjust and bloody warfare.

Your Co-operation Is Needed

Peace Circles are urged to a purposeful and unrelenting effort. If every one who reads THE CHRISTIAN HERALD would make up his or her mind to help, the impetus that this would give to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Peace Movement would be incalculable. For while our spirited work has met with splendid response from intelligent sympathizers everywhere, nevertheless more Peace Circles are needed. We are very much in earnest and we need your help and co-operation. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD will spare no effort to organize in every city, village, community, church and school a Peace Circle. What we ask of you, our readers, is to help us to do this and thereby to do your share towards spreading the great gospel of truth.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Peace League is at present in line of the greatest world work. No more practical or ideal opportunity will come to you for spreading Peace principles. Will you take advantage of it? May we help you to do your share toward bettering the world?

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is prepared to liberally supply free of cost, to all those who will undertake to spread the Gospel of Peace either in their own way or in ways proposed by us, appropriate literature, bearing upon all phases of the great subject. May God grant every one of us grace to meet with enthusiasm this great duty and opportunity.

Programme for the Next Fortnight

Roll call, officers' report, minutes, unfinished business, reading of matter from headquarters. The article on this page should be read aloud and liberally discussed. General theme for the Christmas season, Peace on Earth, Good Will to Men.

Songs and Hymns, Christmas Carols, Rally, Disband.

FULL OF THINGS WORTH KNOWING

The Christian Herald Almanac received. Many thanks for it. It is full of things worth knowing, and fine to have for reference. You could not have given a more desirable premium.
East Orange, N. J. F. R. S.

EXCEPTIONAL OPPORTUNITY TO VISIT

South America and Panama Canal

20,000 Mile Cruise, leaving New York Jan. 20, 1912

Calling at Port of Spain, Pernambuco, Santos, Buenos Aires (Across the Andes), Punta Arenas (through the Straits of Magellan), Valparaiso, Rio de Janeiro, Bahia, Para, Bridgetown, and a visit to the Panama Canal. Duration of Cruise 80 Days—Cost $350 and up. Exceptional side trips everywhere. Cruises De Luxe to the West Indies.

Five Delightful Cruises to the WEST INDIES Panama Canal, Venezuela and Bermuda

Leaving New York by the Palatial Twin Screw Steamers

S. S. Moltke (12,500 tons), 28 days, Jan. 23, Feb. 24, 1912, $150 and up.
S. S. Hamburg (11,000 tons), 21 days, Feb. 10, March 7, 1912, $125 and up.
S. S. Moltke (12,500 tons), 16 days, March 26, 1912, $85 and up.
Every luxury of travel, every refinement of service insured

GRAND ANNUAL EVENT

Around the World

November, 1912, and February, 1913, by the Large Cruising Steamship, "VICTORIA LUISE" (16,500 tons).

GRAND ANNUAL CRUISE TO THE ORIENT

By the most palatial cruising steamer afloat, S. S. "VICTORIA LUISE" (16,500 tons). Sailing from New York, January 30, 1912, on a 78-Day Cruise to Madeira, Spain, the Mediterranean and the Orient. Cost $325 and upward. The "Victoria Luise" is equipped with modern features providing every luxury and comfort on long cruises.

Italy and Egypt

Special Trip by the superb transatlantic liner "Kaiserin Augusta Victoria," the largest and most luxurious steamer of the service. Leaves New York February 14, 1912, for Madeira, Gibraltar, Algiers, Villefranche (Nice), Genoa, Naples and Port Said. To or from Port Said, $165 and up. To or from all other ports, $115 and up.

Send for booklets giving information, etc.

HAMBURG-AMERICAN LINE
41-45 Broadway New York
Boston Philadelphia
Pittsburgh Chicago
St. Louis San Francisco

THE LITTLE WIDOW

A Mighty Good Sort of Neighbor to Have

"A little widow, a neighbor of mine, persuaded me to try Grape-Nuts when my stomach was so weak that it would not retain food of any other kind," writes a grateful woman, from San Bernardino Co., Cal.

"I had been ill and confined to my bed with fever and nervous prostration for three long months after the birth of my second boy. We were in despair until the little widow's advice brought relief.

"I liked Grape-Nuts food from the beginning, and in an incredibly short time it gave me such strength that I was able to leave my bed and enjoy my three good meals a day. In 2 months my weight increased from 95 to 113 pounds, my nerves had steadied down and I felt ready for anything. My neighbors were amazed to see me gain so rapidly, and still more so when they heard that Grape-Nuts alone had brought the change.

"My 4-year-old boy had eczema very bad last spring and lost his appetite entirely, which made him cross and peevish. I put him on a diet of Grape-Nuts, which he relished at once. He improved from the beginning, the eczema disappeared and now he is fat and rosy, with a delightfully soft, clear skin. The Grape-Nuts diet did it. I will willingly answer all inquiries." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Read the little book. "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs. "There's a reason."

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

HOW TO GET BETTER LIGHT From KEROSENE (Coal Oil)

Recent test by Prof. Rogers, Lewis Institute, Chicago, and Prof. McKergow, McGill University Montreal, on leading oil-burning lamps show the Aladdin Mantle Lamp is the most economical and gives over twice as much light as the Rayo and other lamps tested. It is odorless, safe, clean, noiseless. Better light than gas or electric. Every Aladdin Lamp fully guaranteed and protected by patents in nearly every country on earth. Our burners fit your old lamps. To introduce the Aladdin, we will give in each neighborhood. Send postal with name and address, ask for catalogue M, AGENTS Ball sold over 1000 on money back guarantee; not one returned. Bruner sold $800 in 15 days. Ask for liberal agency proposition. Sample lamp furnished.

ONE LAMP or BURNER FREE

MANTLE LAMP COMPANY, 104 Aladdin Building, Chicago, Ill.

I Was Deaf 25 Years

NOW I HEAR WHISPERS

with this artificial EARDRUM in my ears. I never feel them—they are perfectly comfortable, and no one sees them. I will tell you the true story, how I got deaf, and how I made myself hear.

Medicated Ear Drum Pat. Nov. 3, 1908 No. 906285

Artificial Ear Drum Company
Address GEO. P. WAY, Manager
2 Adelaide Street, Detroit, Mich.
G. P. WAY

SAW YOUR WOOD

With a Folding Saw Machine. 9 Cords by One Man in 10 hours. Send for Free catalog No. 161 showing low price and testimonials from thousands. First order secures agency. Folding Sawing Mach. Co. 161 W. Harrison St., Chicago, Ill.

Does Your Granite Dish or Hot Water Bag Leak? Don't Throw It Away

MENDETS

Mend all leaks instantly in granitewares, hot water bags, tin, copper, cooking utensils, etc. No heat, solder, cement or rivet. Any one can use them. Fit any surface. Smooth. Sample box, 10c. Complete box, assd. sizes, 25c, postpaid. Wonderful opportunity for live agents. Write today. Collette Mfg. Co., Box 122 Amsterdam, N.Y.

A Christmas Gift
Of Enduring Value

THE whole civilized world is thinking of Christmas Gifts. A year hence most of the millions of holiday offerings will be worn out, lost or forgotten. Why not choose a gift which will afford substantial, lasting pleasure to your wife, your son, your daughter or yourself.

The best of all Holiday Gifts is one which lasts—which grows in value from year to year, and which, when it has served its purpose, is worth in cash every dollar that was paid for it.

What is more practical than a sound 6% bond, paying interest every six months—a semi-annual reminder of the gift and the giver? It possesses intrinsic, sustained value; it does not wear out, depreciate or go out of fashion; it pays interest twenty times and returns its principal on the tenth anniversary.

Moreover, to its holder, it is a constant example of thrift and financial management—priceless gifts in themselves.

At this season, when interest or maturing principal is seeking re-investment, the purchase of a conservative Bond is particularly timely.

Conservative investors favor A-R-E 6's, the 6% Gold Bonds of the American Real Estate Company. They are issued in denominations of $100, $500, $1000, $5000 and upward, and pay interest semi-annually by coupons attached. They are based on the ownership of New York Real Estate, affording ample security, and they provide various conveniences.

These Bonds have been issued for 24 years, during which they have paid 6% without loss or delay, returning to investors nearly $8,000,000 in principal and interest.

Descriptive printed matter and map of New York City will be sent on request. Write to-day.

American Real Estate Company

Founded 1888

Assets $23,026,889.67
Capital and surplus, 2,011,247.80

Room 534, 527 Fifth Avenue, New York

The World Revival Songs and Hymns

The comment is: "I have often thought of a book like this myself." Many of the Moody and Sankey hymns are again in this book, and the choicest new ones sung everywhere, like "The King's Business," and the famous "Glory Song." Dr. R. A. Torry (all unsolicited) writes me: "It seems to me it is an unusually good collection. I am surprised that you were able to get some of the pieces that you have." The new Sunday School book that sings. The long-looked-for Revival Book. The Endeavor and prayer meeting book. It is the book you have been looking for in your home. The Sunday evening service book. Already over 100,000 sold. Cut out this notice and send for a copy at once. Bound in beautiful Leatherette at $15 per 100, 25c by mail. Cloth bound $25 per 100, 30c by mail. One 100 rate for any number of copies. U. S. stamps (bills taken) to patronize home concern.

W. ELMER BAILEY, Publisher, CAREY, O.

Red, Gold Holly Covers

CHRISTMAS
— FOR — SCHOLARS

1912 International Lessons are all in the New Testament

Give each scholar a Holly covered Testament. Eight Testaments postpaid and THE EVANGEL, one year (teacher's lesson helps) for $1.50

THE EVANGEL, 6 months, and six testaments for $1.00

Send 10 cents for sample Testament

F. M. BARTON
708 Caxton Bldg., Cleveland, Ohio

Christmas, Peace Day*

Sunday School Lesson by Dr. and Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts

SOME persons who read this lesson have made a pilgrimage to Bethlehem. If they were there at the Christmas season, they will "recall the delicate green and silvery foliage of the olive trees, and the pale pink of the almond—nature's 'early waker,' forming a beautiful combination with the darker color of the opening peach buds." The same pasture-fields are there with a divine atmosphere that will never be lifted. Even at the time of the birth of Christ it was in a sense 'holy ground,' at least consecrated ground, for the flocks which were pastured there were destined for temple sacrifices. The Jews were expecting that according to prophecy the Messiah would be born in Bethlehem, and they also expected that he would be revealed from Migdal Eder, 'the tower of the flock.' That was not the tower connected with the sheep pastures beyond Bethlehem, but was close to the town on the road to Jerusalem.

The Shepherds' Midnight Watch

We have very tender thoughts of the shepherds who watched their flocks that memorable night when Christ was born. Perhaps they were superior to other shepherds, because they were in charge of the sacrificial animals. But whether or not they were superior, we are told how true they were to the heavenly vision. When the angel stood by them and brought the message that Christ was born, they trembled from love and fear, but went immediately in search of the Holy Child, whom the angel said they would find wrapped in swaddling clothes and lying in a manger. They left their flocks in the care of the All-Father. Their hearts were attuned to the going forth by the heavenly music of the song of the angels. We are told "they came with haste, and found both Mary and Joseph, and the Babe lying in the manger."

The wise shepherds told Mary and Joseph about the appearance of the angels while they were watching their flocks by night, and Mary made their words the treasures of her heart. Then the wise shepherds returned to their flocks. We are not told that they brought gifts to the newborn King as the wise men afterwards did, but all along the way returning, they offered the incense of praise, glorifying God for all that they had seen and heard. We thank God for the shepherds. We thank him for the sweet mother and the gentle Joseph. We thank him for the angel messengers, but most of all we thank him for a Saviour, "that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have eternal life."

The First Peace Day

The song of the angels at Bethlehem when Christ was born ushered in a World's Peace Day. Twenty centuries and more have passed since then, and the echo, instead of growing fainter, grows stronger and reaches farther with each passing century. We would compare with it the few notes that are sounded by the guide in the tomb of Agra; as the tunes ascend they increase in volume and mingle in a wondrous harmony that reminds one of the whole world made vocal through the love of the Saviour.

The Peace Circles inaugurated by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD are a part of this universal harmony, and we must believe that there is rejoicing by the heavenly host, as at the birth of Christ, in the continuance of the Peace Movement which Jesus came to inaugurate. Let us rejoice that we are living in a time when "peace among men" is receiving so much thought, not alone by individuals, but by nations.

Constantinople used to be spoken of as a possible capital of the world, but there is a change of base since Peace has become a more important issue than the Eastern question, and now The Hague may fairly be named as the World's Peace Capital. Two great world Peace Congresses have been held there, a third is in contemplation, and more than this, a prominent Court of Peace and Arbitration, to be located at The Hague, is being considered by forty-five nations. Unquestionably the Hague Peace Congress is the high-water mark of civilization, the greatest miracle of Christ in this or any century. More and more the sentiment prevails that gore is not glory. Napoleon himself said: "The sight of a battlefield after the fight is enough to inspire a love of peace and a horror of war."

The first Peace Conference assembled at The Hague in 1899, and strangely enough at the call of the Czar of Russia, one of the chief warlords of the world. We may not understand it, but we must believe he was the instrument in God's hand, as Cyrus and Artaxerxes were in their times, when they sent out decrees for the peace of Jerusalem. The Peace Congress at The Hague was so novel a procedure that it was considered at first almost a joke even by the delegates who went there to take part in it. But before the conference adjourned "its members are said to have come to believe in it and its work with an enthusiasm which was as amazing as it was sincere." Briefly it may be stated what the First Hague Peace Conference accomplished: the establishment of a High Court of Arbitration; the recommendation of a commission of inquiry when two or more nations were in dispute, in order to adjust matters for a peaceful settlement; also that there should be a grace of thirty days after war had been determined upon before the first shot should be fired, to give a chance for making peace.

Progress Toward Peace

The Second Hague Conference was held at the initiation of President Roosevelt in 1907. By the unanimous vote of the delegates of forty-five nations, twenty-three decisions were made by the conference concerning matters which usually provoke wars. There were other progressive propositions which received majority votes, and may be ratified in future conferences. Baron D'Estournelles de Constant said: "The calling of this conference would have been justified if it had done nothing more than demonstrate the possibility of creating a universal parliament."

A Third Peace Conference is now being considered, but the time has not yet been set. There is, however, something closer to us just now in the line of peace than the Hague Conference. It is the arbitration treaties between the United States, England and France. These have all been signed by the representatives of the three nations, and await only the action of the United States Senate to make them effective. The members of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Peace Circles could do a most effective work if they would write letters to their Senators in Washington begging them not to delay, but to take immediate action to help in the celebration of the World's Great Peace Day, December 25, 1911—the Christmas Day, so near at hand. If such letters should be poured in upon the Senate it would

Continued on next page

* The International Sunday School Lesson for December 24, 1911. The Birth of Christ. Luke 2:8-20. GOLDEN TEXT: "Peace I leave with you: my peace I give unto you." John 14:27.

DECEMBER

OH, THE bare old trees in their sweeping grays,
And the gleam of the sapphire sea,
And the sun and the tang of these brilliant days
Are bread and wine to me!

Oh, the firm white road beneath my tread,
And the stubble, pinkish-brown,
And the hills in their wonderful purple-red,
And the clear-cut distant town—

And the stately glow in the orange west,
Still and lingering—
Have brought to weary hearts more rest
Than all the balms of spring.

ETHEL HOBART, in Scribner's.

Answered Prayers

E. R. D., Lawton, Okla. "I asked and the Lord answered."

Mrs. L. R. Sams, Leicester, N. C. "I wish to acknowledge a very remarkable answer to prayer."

E. M., Moundridge, Kan. "I praise and thank God for hearing and answering my prayer."

Mrs. L. E. R., New Market, Va. "I know that God has answered prayers, for mine are answered."

R. A. W., Tacoma, Wash. "God has answered my prayer, and saved me from a terrible disgrace."

Mrs. L. B., Redfield, N. Y. "God has answered my prayers for help in a great trouble that threatened me."

M. O. R., Kimberton, Pa. "My prayers were answered after a long, hard and trying struggle to receive my first appointment as teacher."

M. M. H., Elgin, Ill "I wish to testify to the Lord's goodness and mercy. Some years ago I prayed that he might deliver a loved one from an affliction. She recovered. He has answered my prayer in his own wise way."

The Lord's Prayer Versified

THE Rev. R. M. Ramsey (Presbyterian), Newport, Pa., writes us "I inclose a copy of a rendering of the Lord's Prayer, which I made for our installation service here. It went so well that I thought it might be useful elsewhere." He adds that it can be sung to the tune of "Dundee" "with the more regular and longer movement of the tune and not with the uneven opening."

Our Father, who in Heaven art,
Hallow-ed be Thy name,
Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done
On earth as heaven the same.

Give us this day our daily bread.
Forgive our debts as we,
And lead us not temptation's way.
But us from evil free.

For Thine the kingdom is of yore.
Thy power now as then,
And Thine the glory, evermore.
Forevermore, Amen.

PEARLS
XMAS

Frederic's famous scientific pearls in Graduated Strings, including Artificial Pearl and Diamond Cluster Clasp. Regularly sold at $5.00 SPECIAL $3.00

Illustrated Catalog Sent for 10c Postage

Three New York Stores FREDERICS Unusual Jewelry Manufacturers

Address Mail Order Office
N. Y. West 37th St., New York

$5 to $8 a Day

PERMANENT WORK IN YOUR OWN COUNTY

Men to call on women and demonstrate money-saving work-saving patented household articles; sells for $2.50; half profit; exclusive agency; not sold through stores; men selling seven to twenty a day; samples loaned to men who want to work.

S. G. CHASE,
116 Sycamore St., Milwaukee, Wis

Perfect FIRELESS COOKER

THIS one Cooker has stood the test of quality and efficiency. New and superior features for 1912. Our No. 2 Cooker pure aluminum kettles and linings, $18.00 freight prepaid if your dealer can't sell you

HOUSEHOLD EQUIPMENT COMPANY, Winona, Minn

For Developing and Printing You will save money by writing me for prices. Developing 10 cts. per roll. Prints, 3 cts. up. Send two films for FREE prints. H. A. CLARK, 3 Plaza, BROOKLYN, N. Y.

Sunday School Lesson

Continued from preceding page

ost assuredly accomplish the result. let each person, on the very day lesson is studied, send a letter to one aid of his State's Senators at shington.

ev. Henry Ward Beecher, about to ach a sermon on the text, "Blessed the peacemakers, for they shall be ed the children of God," said: "I e been preaching for fifty years I have never preached from this before. But I have preached on text: 'As much as lieth in you, live ceably with all men.' That is an irable command, but this is some- g different. This enjoins a much er duty. This says in effect, ssed are the men who make other live peaceably.'" He further : "Man is very much like a violin; ry change in the atmosphere will it out of tune. Yet it is within purpose of the Gospel and the mis- and command of Jesus Christ t we should do our share to make men happy." Let us begin with own homes, as Jesus told his apos- to begin at Jerusalem when he t them to preach the Gospel to all world.

For the Children

wo or three years ago a lecturer n Japan brought a very remark- document with him, sent by ool children in Japan to the school children of the United States. It was a proposition—a "treaty," if you please—by which the children of the United States and Japan should grow up to love each other and not to fight each other. In tracing the source of it we found that it emanated from only one school in Tokyo. We regret that it was not made universal in both lands, for that would certainly cause all rumors of war between these two lands to cease. We urge that the School Peace League which is being introduced into many of our public schools should in the near future make such a Children's Arbitration Treaty a fact. All children should grow up in love to help work out the world's peace in the name of Jesus Christ. This will be the most useful Christmas lesson they can learn.

Soon, over half the earth,
In every temple crowds shall kneel again
To celebrate his birth
Who brought the message of good will to men,
And bursts of joyous song
Shall shake the roof above the prostrate throng.

Oh, when the day shall break
O'er realms unlearned in warfare's cruel arts,
And all their millions wake
To peaceful tasks performed with loving hearts,
On such a blessed morn
Well may the nations say that Christ is born.

WILLIAM CULLEN BRYANT.

Manchu and Chinaman at Home

HEN in 1644 the Manchus, whose last imperial representative, the nt Emperor Pu Yi, is now being en from the throne, found that the g Emperor had committed suicide promptly seized the reins of hority, it was with the connivance famous Chinese general, who had nerly supported the Ming dynasty. his aid this general exacted four mises from the new emperor, and e promises have produced some of characteristics and peculiarities ch we to-day associate most closely h China.

he exactions were: 1. No Chinese nen to be taken into the imperial aglio. 2. No Manchu to be allowed graduate as "Senior Classic." The Manchu costume to be univer- y adopted for men, except as ial-clothes. 4. Chinese women to in their own dress and to continue ind their feet.

lause 1 was a bar to possible com- ations. As to Clause 2, the public minations for Manchus and Chi- e have always been conducted in a ner favorable to the former, the intellectual race. Clause 3 pro- ed great opposition, inasmuch as it olved the adoption of the queue. Manchus wore the queue, whereas form of coiffure was hitherto un- wn to the Chinese, who strenuously ected to its introduction. It was t strenuously resisted in the far South. The "buttons," or small globes of precious stones and gold, worn at the top of the official hat to indicate rank, were introduced by the Manchus; also the peacock's feather worn at the back of the hat, which is a badge of merit conferred by the emperor, and has one, two, or three eyes, according to the merit of the wearer. The coveted yellow riding jacket dates only from 1855, when the emperor drew off his jacket and placed it on the shoulders of his great minister and general, father of the late Marquis Tséng.

By Clause 4, foot-binding was perpetuated. The greatest and most powerful of the Manchu emperors issued an edict forbidding the practice; but the Chinese people obey only such edicts as they approve, and after four years it was withdrawn.

Thus the general appearance of the Chinese woman is quite distinct from that of the Manchu woman, even to the fashion of arranging the hair. There are also some slight variations to be noticed by close observers in the dress of the men; shops advertise different articles of clothing, and even restaurants provide separate bills-of-fare, for Manchus and Chinese. Intermarriage between the two races was forbidden—a necessary precaution, in spite of the fact that each hated and despised the other. Still, cases of intermarriage are not altogether unknown.

Household Hints

teaspoonful of powdered borax in a pint of r makes an excellent mouth wash.

is said that powdered borax sprinkled ly about sinks, pantry drawers and cabinets, tends to keep roaches away.

teap tinware may be made more lasting and from rusting if it is given a coating of lon wax. It should then be well heated in d oven, and finally rubbed clean and bright a soft cloth. It is then ready for use.

he brush of a carpet-sweeper should be rated with kerosene once a month and then in the open air until all the oil has evap- ed. If this method is followed, carpets will much brightened after sweeping, and there be less dust from the carpet-sweeper when se.

eat choppers may be used to advantage in ways than is generally known. Why not them to mash potatoes; crumb stale bread crackers, and even cheese; to grind prunes "prune whip," peanuts for peanut-butter, hard boiled eggs for sauces or sandwiches, or vegetables for chow-chow or chili sauce?

Gelatin should be kept in every household, for it frequently helps to utilize what might otherwise be thrown away. The syrup from canned fruits is often left, and this may be made into a delicious jelly for dessert if thickened with gelatin in the proportion of one tablespoonful of the gelatin to one pint of the syrup. If there is a small quantity of several kinds of syrup, mix them together and the result will be perfectly satisfactory.

A CANADIAN READER'S TRIBUTE

I have seen THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for many years, and while it was generally of a high order, I would say that the issue of November 15, 1911, surpasses any issue that I have seen. I have felt moved to accord this tribute. The periodical is above all praise.

Toronto, Ont. JOSEPH HAMILTON.

The spirit of Christmas finds a perfect embodiment in a Waltham watch. No gift crystallizes the refined sentiment of the season so perfectly as a Waltham, none combines such qualities in practical usefulness.

WALTHAM
WATCH

As timekeepers, Watham watches have no rivals, and for beauty of model, they are unsurpassed. Waltham offers a wide selection, from popular priced movements to the new Waltham Premier-Maximus at $250—the finest timepiece ever made. The standard Waltham grades are named:

Riverside has been a famous Waltham movement for a full generation. Made in various sizes for ladies and gentlemen. All 19 jewel Riversides are tested for temperature, isochronism and five positions.

The Waltham Colonial for business and social life combines the highest art with the sound principles of Waltham construction. It is a graceful thin model, adjusted and cased at the factory.

"It's Time You Owned a Waltham."

Handsome Booklet describing various Waltham movements and full of valuable watch lore free on request. Let your Jeweler guide your selection.

WALTHAM WATCH COMPANY, - - Waltham, Mass.

Unvarnished, Cashable Facts About Poultry Profits

If there ever was a straight-from-the-shoulder statement of facts, you'll find it in JOEL M. FOSTER'S book "THE MILLION EGG FARM."

Mr. Foster owns the famous Rancocas Poultry Farm, and in his book he tells his methods for producing upward of eleven hundred thousand eggs a year, and piling up a clean annual profit of close to $20,000.00.

We know that the statements in this book are cold facts—because we proved them before publishing

"The Million Egg Farm"

We have sold many thousand copies of this book, and we know, from the actual experiences of those who have read and followed it, that these facts can be profitably applied by you—whether you have a dozen hens on a back lot, or number your fowls by the thousands.

Up in Scranton, Pa., a clerk, Robert Liddle by name, read this book, followed its directions, and at last reports was cleaning up $17.00 a day profit on eggs.

In the light of such experiences, we know that farmers need this book. That's why we published it and are trying to put it into the hands of every poultry owner.

To serve the farmer is the whole purpose of FARM JOURNAL. To serve him with sound advice regarding every branch of farm work.

To enable him to profit by the labor-saving and money-making discoveries of other farmers. To serve the farmer's wife with helpful housekeeping suggestions. To serve the farmer and his entire family with clean, wholesome entertainment.

Upward of four million readers welcome its monthly visits.

You need this paper and you need the MILLION EGG FARM book, and you can have

Farm Journal every month for four years and "The Million Egg Farm" at once, postpaid, for only $1.00

Do yourself and family the favor of sending in the dollar to-day.

FARM JOURNAL, 184 N. Clifton St., Philadelphia

Young People's Societies

Christmas in the Heart*

AS WE meditate on the supreme sacrifice which crowned Christ's coming, we feel like crying, with the pontiff of old:

> Where is the gloriously decisive change
> Of human clay to divine gold, we looked > Should, in some poor sort, justify its price?

It is, indeed, a grand thing that the whole civilized world, broadly speaking, should commemorate at this season the birth of our Lord; but in the hearts of how many of those who loudly wish each other a merry Christmas, has Christmas really come? We ask with Browning again, "Is the thing we see salvation?" But, as he reminds us in another place, we must not judge too harshly. In many a soul, deterred by any of a thousand motives from expression, it may be that, though we know it not, the Christ-love is working and Christ is King.

The first fruit of the Spirit in the heart, Paul tells us, is love. (Gal. 5: 22.) If you feel welling up within you hatred, and those kindred sins, envy and jealousy, love is not there, and Christ has not come in your heart.

Joy is next mentioned in Paul's great list. The Christian should not let the near mote of grief or pain shut out the great sun of pure delight which rose upon the world when Christ was born. It used to be said that Christians were doleful and long-faced. Some of the newer sects are enjoining upon their members the duty of the smile, as though they had just discovered it; when here was Paul, nearly 2,000 years ago, placing this beautiful virtue second only to love itself—"the greatest thing in the world." We have too long neglected the culture of this joy, one of the most lovely plants in God's garden. Let us atone at this Christmas season for its long period of slight and misuse.

Then comes peace, the white-winged and tender-eyed angel, whom Christ especially left with his disciples when he parted from them, as he especially brought it to the earth when he came. Not only did the cherubim proclaim that with the Babe of Bethlehem should peace come to the individual heart and home of the race, but that a great world-peace should follow.

"Peace, in whom depths of wealth lie, of the blest immortals beauteousest," sang another than Paul, placing this divine virtue at the head of all. Mankind has mourned its long delay, has even doubted the promise, but the watchmen on the high towers announce that they can see it flying toward us from afar. Let us all join to help its onward progress.

Long-suffering comes next — sure sign that we were meant to bear trouble, and are bound, if Christ is in our hearts, to bear it bravely, not hoodwink it and pretend it is not there, but face it, grapple it and down it, thus and thus only winning Christ's own peace.

Turn to Galatians and read the rest of the bright list of virtues which denote the birth of Christ in the heart, and without which the keeping of his birthday is but an empty form.

Do you say that the human within you is too strong? that you try to love Christ and to let his Spirit rule your heart, and yet cannot? Ah, you little realize the power of your will, when reinforced in prayer by that mighty Spirit. "Impossible," said the seer, "has no place in the brave man's dictionary. Brother, thou hast possibility in thee for much; the possibility of writing on the eternal skies the record of an heroic life." For to have Christ in your heart means to be a hero.

*Topic of the Epworth League for Sunday, December 24. TEXTS: I. John 5: 20; Matt. 1: 21; John 1: 12, 13.

The Transforming Gift*

IT IS said truly that Mr. Carnegie's great gift of $10,000,000 to the cause of peace has made its final victory sure, even though at times the outlook may be dark. Nearly everybody can think of similar, if smaller, gifts to various good causes which have ensured their success. Without such help in a crisis, many a movement necessary to the progress of the world would have been fated to fail, at least for the time being.

The greatest gift of all, and the only one which has equally benefited all worthy causes, is that which we celebrate to-day. Truly, it is "unspeakable." One way of realizing most keenly its value is to re-read Christ's marvelous words (most easily done in the Red Letter Bible) and reflect anew upon their truly divine adaptation to all times and all countries.

Perhaps the deepest practical lesson for the Christmas season, to be learned from the transcendent fact of God's most precious gift to mankind, lies along the lines of personal helpfulness. The Christmas gifts, which each one of us is planning to make in greater or less numbers, should contribute, in the highest degree that we can compass, even if one gives but a card, to the uplift of the recipient. You may say that mere joy uplifts the spirit. That is generally true; and yet everybody can probably recall instances in which gifts which inordinately pleased the recipients were the very worst for health and character; such as a fond mother's bestowal upon a callow and unformed youth of a large sum of money, which leads to his moral downfall; a "vanity box" to a silly girl, with dainty receptacles, perhaps of silver or gold, for rouge, powder and other cosmetics. The list might be indefinitely extended. Something more than mere pleasure should be bestowed in every gift.

A writer in the Woman's Home Companion once related a story of a home in which everybody gave, so to speak, a Christmas gift to the home itself. One made fresh draperies for the guest-room; another hemmed a dozen napkins, which had been waiting for a long time; another mended a hole in the hall rug; another gave money to redecorate the living-room, and so on. It is a charming idea to beautify and make comfortable the home—no less than that practised in these altruistic days by many well-to-do persons, of giving something to some worthy cause every Christmas, besides the personal gifts. The thought of emulating Christ's example in the respect of bestowing a world-present is thus carried out, as nearly as mortals can do it. Christianity, if we truly catch its spirit, opens our hearts to the cry of world-sorrow, and teaches us, as Cecil Rhodes expressed it, "to think continentally."

There are certain sects which, by some mysterious process of elimination, seek to believe that our sorrows do not come from God. They cite selected passages of Scripture to prove their point, but ignore entirely the equally weighty statements that "whom God loveth he chasteneth," that he doth not afflict us willingly, and many others to the same purpose. Let us remember at this Christmas time that the most precious and purifying dispensations from God's hand are often those which tear our souls. "The less or the more is all God's gift." And we can confidently share in the expectation, paraphrased from a great poet:

> I shall behold thee face to face
> O God, and in thy light retrace
> How in all I suffered here, still wast thou.

*Christian Endeavor Topic for Sunday, December 24. TEXTS: II. Cor. 9: 15; Luke 1: 46-55.

A Christmas Letter Box

An Extraordinary Big Value Offer

Given Free as a Premium to Old Subscribers for Securing One NEW Subscription to The Christian Herald at $1.50. Or Sent with One Renewal for $2.00

10 Christmas and New Year Letters with Envelopes
5 Christmas Cards
5 Christmas Tags
10 Poinsettia Tags
25 Poinsettia Seals
50 Christmas Santa Claus Seals

105 Pieces, retail value $1.25

The two, three and four color Christmas letters in this box retail at ten cents and upwards each. We bought the remainder of the season's production of a large concern at less than cost of manufacture. The letters are extremely handsome and perfect examples of printing and embossing, with each verse or sentiment decorated in gold or bronze. Each letter is different and each is supplied with an envelope for mailing. With the letters in a box come cards, tags and seals as enumerated above. All printed and embossed in full color. The supply is limited, so do not delay to order at once. Postage, 10 cents extra. Address:

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York City

Now Ready for the Holiday Season

THE STORY OF MARCO

By ELEANOR H. PORTER
Illustrated by Laura Miller

CHRISTIAN HERALD readers will be pleased to learn that this story of unusual interest is now in book form. 326 pages. Illustrated. $1.35 postpaid.
Let us send you our Holiday Catalogue.

JENNINGS AND GRAHAM, Publishers
22 West Fourth St., Cincinnati, O.

MIDDLE AGE PEOPLE

offen suffer from sourness of the digestiv passages, a trouble that inactive men an women approaching middle age ofte suffer from. No drugs are needed t remove this condition and give a swee breath and comfort. Only Murray Charcoal Tablets (absolutely unmed cated), an agreeable and harmless rem edy, are required. Once only, to co vince you, a regular 25 cent box wi be sent for 10 cents in stamps. A. Ditman, 2 Astor House, N. Y.

LAME PEOPLE

OLD WAY

The Perfection Extension Shoe is worn with ready-made shoes. Both feet look alike. Shipped on trial. Write for booklet.
HENRY E LOTZ,
313—3rd Ave., New York

THE NATURAL WA

EARN FROM $21 TO $50 PER WEEK

LEARN ABOUT OUR FREE COURSE IN SHOW CARD AND SIGN WRITING

A Great Opportunity!

We are offering, for a limited time only, a complete learn at home course in show card and sign writing to those purchasing a trial assortment of our new and excellent "Litholia" ready to use Colors. This is a great opportunity for ambitious persons to increase their earning capacity. Good show card writers earn from $21 to $50 per week. Send 4c in stamps for booklets and complete information. Please note that the Show Card Course is not a book of alphabets, but a thorough course in lettering compiled by an expert New York Show Card artist especially for us.

LITHOLIA CO. COLOR CO.
247 West 125th Street, New York

ORNAMENTAL FENC
25 Designs—All Steel

Handsome, cost less than woo more durable. Don't buy a fen until you get our Free Catalog and Special Prices.
We can save you money.
Kokomo Fence Machine C
499 North St., Kokomo, Ind.

10,000 CHURCHES USE THE THOMAS INDIVIDUAL COMMUNION SERVICE

DOES YOUR CHURCH?

Send for list of churches and Special Introductory Offer. Outfit sent for trial.
THOMAS COMMUNION SERVICE CO., Box 125, Lima, Ohio.

Foy's Big Book MONEY IN POULTRY and SQUABS

Tells how to start small and grow big. Describes world's largest pure-bred poultry farm and gives a great mass of useful poultry information. Low prices on fowls, eggs, incubators and brooders. Mailed 4c. F. FOY, Box 30, Des Moines, Iowa

WANTED Men and Women, local, to represent National Society aiding boys. Paid and unpaid; all or part time. Can study work under experts. Address, Friends of Boys, New Haven, Ct., with 5 cents for copy of "Our Boys" (sells 10 cents).

PATENTS How to GET Every Dol Your Invention is Wor

Send 8 cents stamps for new 128 page book of Vi Interest to Inventors.
R. S. & A. B. LACEY, Dept. 36 Washington, D.

CHURCH BELLS SCHOOL

Ask for Catalogue and Special Donation Plan No. 44
THE C. S. BELL CO Est 1858 Hillsboro, Ohio

Christmas Presents

FOR CHRISTIAN HERALD SUBSCRIBERS

The following articles are selected from THE CHRISTIAN HERALD GUARANTEED PREMIUM LIST as being especially desirable at this season for Christmas Presents. A little effort on your part will secure the new subscribers required to secure any of the presents.

STENCIL OUTFIT No. 2

Given Free as a Premium to Old Subscribers for Securing One NEW Subscription to The Christian Herald at $1.50. Or Sent with One Renewal Subscription for $2.00.

This attractive outfit consists of 12 cut stencils (ready for use) of the latest designs cut from special oil board, 6 tubes assorted best oil colors, 2 stencil brushes, 5 solid head thumb tacks, and a handsome stencil-painted pillow-top on pure imported Art Linen, for outlining. Full directions for stenciling, also a copy of the book, Latest Ideas in Art Stencil Designs, are included as a part of this combination. The illustration above is for No. 2 Outfit.

STENCIL OUTFIT No. 1

Given Free as a Premium to Old Subscribers for Securing Two NEW Subscriptions to The Christian Herald at $1.50 each. Or Sent with One Renewal Subscription for $2.75.

With this unusually large stencil outfit you can decorate practically everything to which stenciling can be applied. It is equally suitable for either the beginner or for one who has had some experience in stenciling. This combination outfit was made up especially for us, and the eighteen stencils included in it were all selected because of their unique beautiful designs and adaptability to a wide range of usefulness. The furnishings of entire rooms, even the walls, can be decorated by their use. All are exceedingly graceful patterns. The four large stencils: morning glory design, 4 x 4½ inches; grape design, 5 x 13 inches; pond lily design, 9 x 3 inches, and conventional flower pattern, 10 x 13 inches, are cut out of extra heavy oiled card-board, permitting them to be used many times. Among the fourteen smaller stencils are many that can be combined with the larger ones, thus securing beautiful and original effects. The outfit consists of 18 stencils (ready to use), 8 tubes of the best assorted oil colors, 12 thumb tacks, 2 small brushes, 2 large brushes, and complete book of instructions. It also contains hundreds of other attractive stencil designs.

BUTTONHOLE SCISSORS

Given Free as a Premium to Old Subscribers for Securing One NEW Subscription for The Christian Herald at $1.50. Or Sent with One Renewal Subscription at $2.00.

These imported buttonhole scissors are made by Morley & Sons in Germany, and are guaranteed to be made of high grade steel, and to preserve indefinitely their sharp cutting edge. The graduating screw between the handles makes it possible to cut buttonholes to any desired length. Nickel plated and highly polished. Postage, 6 cents extra.

"SHUR-EDGE" SHEARS

Given Free as a Premium to Old Subscribers for Securing One NEW Subscription to The Christian Herald at $1.50. Or Sent with One Renewal Subscription at $2.00.

These eight-inch shears are the famous "Shur-Edge" brand. They will hold their sharp cutting edge after years of the hardest kind of service. Especially tempered and made of the highest grade steel. Fully nickel plated, both blades and handles, and guaranteed not to rust. Postage, 12 cents extra.

UP-TO-DATE FANCY WORK COMBINATION

Given Free as a Premium to Old Subscribers for Securing One NEW Subscription to The Christian Herald at $1.50. Or Sent with One Renewal Subscription for $2.00. Postage, 10 cents extra.

This combination outfit will surely please every woman, as it contains up-to-date designs for all kinds of fancy work. Some of these are stamped on the goods ready to be embroidered, others are perforated on bond paper, enabling one to use the pattern over and over again. This beautiful outfit consists of one 18 inch pure imported linen Centerpriece, one corset cover stamped on fine quality nainsook, one pillow top hand-painted on Aberdeen crash, five skeins of Queen Louise embroidery floss for outlining the pillow top, one bone stiletto. Also the following embroidery designs, which are full size, perforated on three sheets of 22 x 28 inch bond paper, strong enough to be used several times: One scarf, four Dutch collars, three turn-over collars, one pillow case, one doily 5½ x 5½ inches, one bow, seven sprays, one handkerchief case, one belt, one shirtwaist, collar and cuffs to match; one complete set of alphabet letters, three-fourths of an inch high; one complete set, 1½ inches high; one table cover, two borders, one anchor, a cake of "Ideal" Stamping Preparation, Poncette, and directions for stamping

AVIATION CAPS

Given Free as a Premium to Old Subscribers for Securing One NEW Subscription to The Christian Herald at $1.50. Or Sent with One Renewal Subscription for $2.00.

These extremely popular caps are made of very heavy soft all-wool fleece yarn. They are very stylish and suitable for wear with any costume, and are extremely comfortable for cold weather wear in outdoor sports, such as skating or driving. The body of the cap is pure white, finished with a turned up colored band. Choice of red, pink or blue. Postage, 10 cents extra.

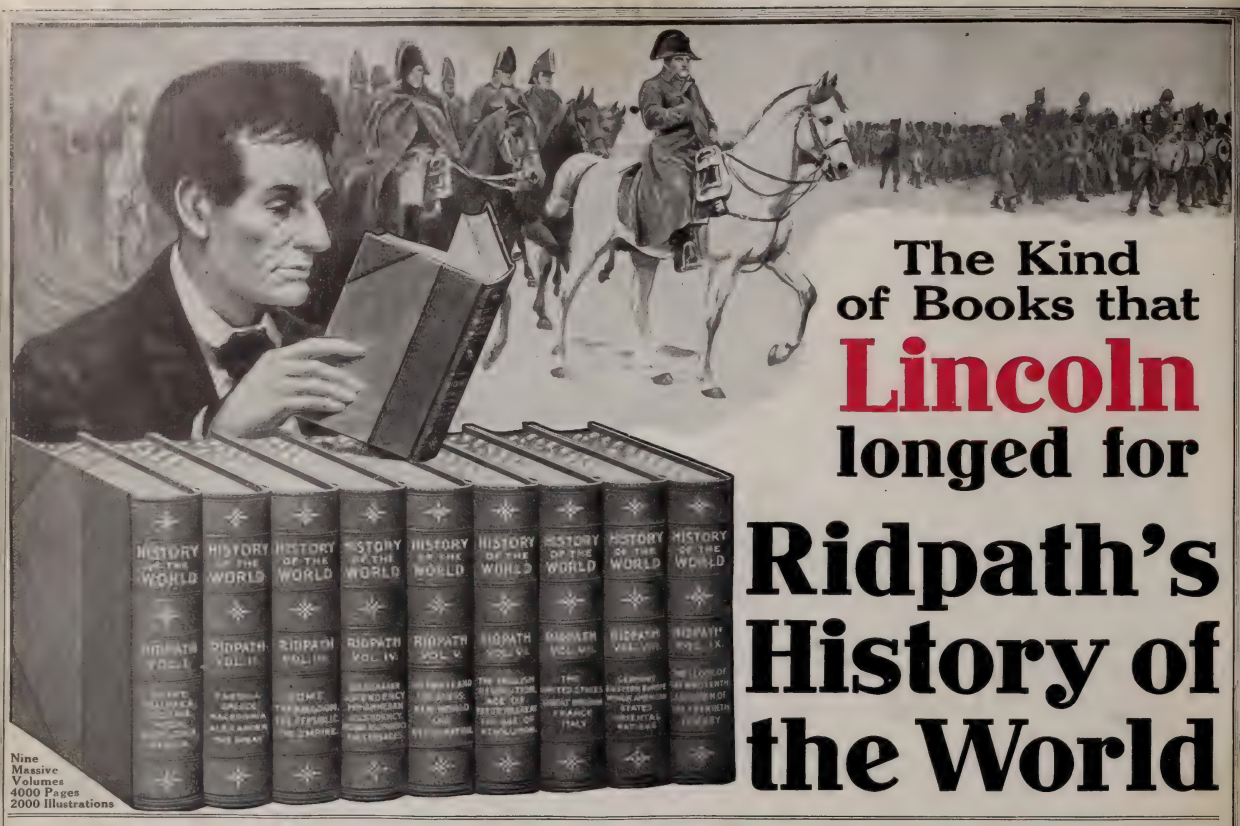
KNITTED COAT SWEATERS

Given Free as a Premium to Old Subscribers for Securing One NEW Subscription to The Christian Herald at $1.50. Or Sent with One Renewal Subscription for $2.00.

This sweater is one of the most serviceable and satisfactory garments a child can possess. It is made of fine quality yarn, cut the latest coat style, having two side pockets, and heavy knitted band down the front, fastened with white pearl buttons. Can be furnished in white, red or gray, and sizes 22, 24 and 26, so that children of all ages can be fitted. We will Give Free for Two New Subscriptions at $1.50 each, postage 20 cents extra, the same garment in misses' size, running from 26 to 34, with renewal for $2.50.

For Three New Subscriptions at $1.50 each, postage 20 cents extra, we will send a lady's coat sweater in either of the following colors: White or Oxford gray. This is a beautifully finished garment, and will be found extremely comfortable for cold weather wear. Can be had in sizes from 36 to 44, with one renewal for $3.00.

SOLID SILVER THIMBLE



Given Free as a Premium to Old Subscribers for Securing One NEW Subscription to The Christian Herald at $1.50. Or Sent with One Renewal Subscription for $2.00.

This solid silver Thimble has a pure gold band, highly polished and embossed, as shown in the illustration. It is a full-size thimble with thick walls, guaranteeing it to be thoroughly serviceable for the hardest kind of use. Registered postage, 12 cents.

Address THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK CITY

Nine Massive Volumes
4000 Pages
2000 Illustrations

The Kind of Books that Lincoln longed for

Ridpath's History of the World

Never Again Such a Book Bargain as This!

WE are closing out the last edition of Dr. Ridpath's History of the World at a great sacrifice in price. We are not at liberty to print this low price for the reason Dr. Ridpath's widow derives her income from the sale of this work, and to print the price broadcast would cause great injury to the sale of future editions. We will name our bargain price and our easy terms of payment only in direct letters to those sending us the coupon below. Tear off the Coupon, write name and address plainly and mail to us now before you forget it. The beautiful 46-page booklet of sample pages is free.

For the Father

HOW are you to judge of the great national questions that crowd upon us for decision except by some knowledge of the past? Our Tariff Policy, the Question of the Trusts, the respective rights of labor and capital, the conflict between Socialism on the one hand and organized business and industry on the other—these and hundreds of other important questions press upon us as a nation for intelligent discussion and decision.

Read the history of mighty Babylon, or of imperial Rome and familiarize yourself with her growth, development and decay. Read the history of the French Revolution, the establishment of the republic, out of which came the empire dominated by Napoleon. Then when you know history, when you know the cause of the rise and downfall of empires and nations, you will be able to intelligently discuss and decide the great questions that are pressing now everywhere for attention.

For the Mother

MOTHERS! You know, as all the world knows, that the success in life of your boys and girls is heaven to you. There is little else in the world worth living for. "Give your boys and girls a chance." Give them an education which will fit them for the stern realities of life. Teach them to love home by making the home so attractive that it is worth loving. Place in your home, good, interesting, truthful books for your children. In this day and age of fierce competition it is little short of a misfortune for any boy or girl to grow up without the equipment of a good education, and especially a knowledge of history. Send coupon to-day for free sample pages of the greatest history of the world ever written.

For the Young Men

ARE you engaged all day with your work? Are your hours long and is your work tedious? Do you sometimes look back on your boyish ambitions and feel that they are all dead? Have you to count the dollars carefully and hold tightly to the cents?

Don't stint yourself of mental food. But the money! Yes, I know. Mental food costs money, but you cannot be a MAN without it. If your room is furnished in a certain corner with Ridpath's History of the World you will be astonished to find that your expenses are growing less.

There are many things you might deprive yourself of with advantage, but you cannot afford to be without these books. They will enlarge your capacity. They will increase your usefulness and they will keep you young. As you read of how men lived and loved and fought and died from earliest days to within your own memory, you will become a bigger and greater man. If there is any good stuff in you it will come to the surface.

For the Young Women

ARE you a little above the average in your thoughts and tastes? Does your mind rise beyond hats and ribbons, frocks and feathers? Do you feel that life is a serious thing, not to be lightly laughed at and frittered away?

If so, get Ridpath's History and read of the women who thought as you think and acted as you would act if occasion arose.

Study the incidents that have made the world such as it is to-day. Then when you go among your friends to talk you will astonish them and yourself. For every event in daily life you will be able to suggest a parallel in history. You will be qualified to open and suggest topics. It will become known that your opinion is worth hearing, is reliable. You will be spoken of as that cultivated and brilliant conversationalist.

Don't hesitate. Your wish for further knowledge shows that you have exceptional capacities. If you do not encourage and cultivate them they will die out.

If you get the books; if you read them; if you are the woman I take you to be, in one month's time you will realize your increased value. In one year's time you will have made everyone who knows you realize it too.

You can take this great set of books into your own home, at comparatively little cost of money or space, and pay for it very easily—only a few cents a day or a few dollars a month. It is now in the homes of more than 200,000 American families. Can you afford to be without it?

For the School Children

YOUR boy or girl returns from school and wants to know something about the Missouri Compromise or Monroe Doctrine, about which there is an essay to write. You don't like to betray your ignorance; perhaps you don't like being bothered and would prefer to read the paper. If you would only put Ridpath in your library and refer your boy or girl to the index, you would not only give them the information which they seek, but might create in them a desire to know more; a desire for reading; for information, learning and knowledge, and "knowledge is power," not only in business but in society in general.

Run your finger down the index in Ridpath's History and you will find Leonidas, Galileo, Heroditus, Cervantes, Buddha, Cromwell, Bonaparte, Grant, Lee, Stonewall Jackson, Hampden, Mozart, Dewey, Schley, Farragut, Roosevelt, McKinley, Harrison, Taft, etc.

Do you mean to tell me that your boy and girl, with this wonderful index of Ridpath's History, would not be spending their time to better advantage—and perhaps bothering you with fewer questions? Perhaps they would be giving you information.

For Everybody

RIDPATH'S HISTORY is the story of the world from the very beginning down to the present year. It is made up of the different events of all the separate nations in the great whirlpool of world-growth. It is a series of historical narratives in which each nation, in turn, becomes the hero of its own story.

Ridpath's style is clear and simple, yet glows with the fervency of the orator. He puts life in the dry bones of the past. When he writes, the departed great are as real to you as your own neighbors. The great events of history pass before you in a series of living pictures. The great names of history—Alexander, Cæsar, Napoleon, Bismarck, Washington—are names no longer; they are men, moving, breathing, pulsating with life and high purpose.

Ridpath's History is praised by all for its wealth of learning, for its brilliant style, for its fascination as a story, for its educative value to old and young. To read it is a liberal education. It is a library in itself which is already in nearly a quarter of a million American homes and should be in every home.

Fold here, tear out, sign and mail

Free Coupon

12-13-11

Western Newspaper Association
Christian Herald Bureau, 140 South Dearborn Street, Chicago

Please mail, without cost to me, sample pages of Ridpath's History of the World, containing 4 photogravures of Napoleon and Queen Elizabeth, engravings of Socrates, Cæsar and Shakespeare, map of China and Japan, diagram of Panama Canal, and write me full particulars of your special offer to The Christian Herald readers.

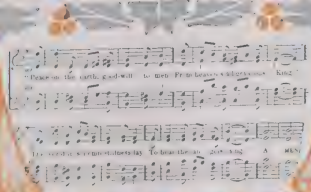
NAME .....

ADDRESS .....

Write letter if you wish. Just give Coupon, or copy on Postal and mail.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

Christian Herald



$1.50 A YEAR — 5c. A COPY
PUBLISHED 52 TIMES A YEAR

COPYRIGHT, 1911, BY THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

NEW YORK, DECEMBER 20, 1911

VOLUME 34 - NUMBER 51
OFFICES: BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK

Our Mail-Bag

Questions and Answers

G. H. A., Adamstown, Pa. In how many positions was prayer offered in the Bible?

The most frequent posture among the Jews was standing; if the occasion were one of special solemnity or the prayer one of special humility it was offered kneeling; on occasions of great distress or intense emotion the worshiper prostrated himself upon the ground. Our Lord's favorite posture in prayer was kneeling; he seems to have emphasized this preference in the parable of the publican and the sinner; and Paul, in his prayer for the Ephesians, uses the word translated "bow the knee."

A. H., Lakewood, N. J. What did Jesus mean when he said (Luke 12: 19-34): "I say unto you, Take no thought for your life, what ye shall eat; neither for the body, what ye shall put on. The life is more than meat, and the body is more than raiment"?

This was a part of the "Sermon on the Mount," and verses 19 to 34 are intended to illustrate heavenly-mindedness and confidence in God's providence. The particular passage quoted admonishes the believer not to be too anxiously concerned or worried about things that are purely temporal. It is right to make due provision for our own needs and the needs of those dependent upon us; but when we have done so, we should not fret and doubt and make ourselves and others miserable because of our fears of coming trouble. This applies to our food, our clothing and our worldly affairs generally. All such doubts and worries spring from unbelief, and are after the manner of the world. If we really believe and trust our heavenly Father, he will provide all we need. This promise, however, does not relieve us from the natural duty of making reasonable provision, though there are some people who mistakenly think so. The whole passage, broadly interpreted, means that we are to do our work here properly and cheerfully and to trust the Father for the rest, and never worry, always keeping in view the greater duty of "seeking first the kingdom," beside which all other things are insignificant.

F. L., Brooklyn, N. Y. I have always thought that I would love my dear mother in heaven more than any one else. A friend has just said: "No, you cannot love your mother more than others. That would be selfish, and there is no selfishness in heaven." Please give me your opinion.

Your friend's remark was very far from true. It is not selfish to love one friend more than another. In his group of twelve closest friends, Jesus had three whom he loved with a more intense friendship than the rest, and of the "chosen three" he loved one with a specially tender affection.

A. M. G., Lancaster, Pa. Please explain (1) Heb. 10: 26. Has it reference to the sin against the Holy Ghost? (2) I. Cor. 11: 29. (3) Luke 13: 24, last part.

(1) The best answer to all these questions about passages which seem to indicate the impossibility of repentance is that any one who is troubled about them may rest assured that God's Spirit is still striving with him and calling him to repentance. The man to whom such passages refer is the one who is not concerned, who is calloused, who no longer has any spiritual sensibilities. Any man who is sorry because he thinks he cannot repent is really repenting. (2) The marginal substitute for the word "damnation" here is "judgment." There is nothing in the passage to indicate that this particular judgment is final. Of course, any one who receives the sacrament of the Lord's Supper unworthily or carelessly is condemned for the act. (3) "Strait" here implies struggle and difficulty—a contention in which we should seek to have the mastery. The verses following indicate that the passage refers to those who are finally unsaved. It does not refer to any who in this life seek to enter into the way of salvation.

S. T. H., Whitehall, Ind. Please explain (1) "Where there is no vision the people perish" (Prov. 29: 18). What are visions in these days? (2) "In my Father's house are many mansions" (John 14: 2). (3) How often was Jerusalem destroyed, and does it now stand?

(1) "Vision" here means communion with God and the revelation of his will. When communities or nations get out of touch with God and cease to know his will, they begin to perish. The Hebrew verb means to become "dissipated" and "unbridled" and so perish in a word, to lose sight of moral and spiritual ideals, as a nation or community. Individual Christians and the organized church should be constantly seeking a clearer sight of God, closer communion with him, and a more perfect understanding both of his revealed will in the Scriptures and his providential will in present-day concerns. (2) The passage means that there will be room enough in heaven for all the redeemed, and implies also that each soul will have some kind of a habitation which will be specifically his own. (3) Jerusalem has been captured and recaptured many times by con-

Continued on last column

Precious Babe of Bethlehem

Fanny J. Crosby — Hubert P. Main

Copyright 1911 by the Biglow & Main Co.

THE following extracts are taken from a dispatch published in the New York World:

Washington, December 1.

"President Taft's Special Commission, headed by Supreme Court Justice Hughes, has drawn up for Congress a bill radically revising the second class postage rates.

"The bill provides that the second class postage rate shall be a flat rate of two cents a pound, or double the present rates on that class.

"Second class matter includes all printed newspapers and periodicals that appear at least four times a year; also certain periodicals of fraternal societies, scientific institutions, and trade unions."

We are constrained to announce the following:

On the day the above Bill passes in Congress, the subscription price of The Christian Herald will be raised to $2.00 a year without notice.

The present subscription price of $1.50 a year will be maintained, therefore, only until the above raise is forced upon us.

Our Mail-Bag

Continued from first column

tending forces. In many of the sieges it ha been partially ruined, but in at least four i has been practically destroyed, the first abou 1400 B.C., when captured by the tribes o Judah and Simeon; the second in 586 by Nebu chadnezzar; the third in 170 B.C. by Antiochu Epiphanes; the fourth, and doubtless most ter rible, in 70 A.D., by Titus. The city was re stored by Hadrian in 135 A.D., and since ther has changed hands many times. It now belongs to Turkey, and has about 60,000 inhabitants.

Mrs. H. C., Norwich, N. Y. 1. Is the day of miracles past? 2. What did Jesus mean by his words in John 14: 12?

1. Many books have been written on the subject of miracles, and practically the whole attack on Christianity is on that basis. But without the miracle of a revelation, revealed religion is impossible. Besides, there are many things even in nature which we, with our limited endowment, cannot clearly understand. If this be so in the natural world with the laws of which we are but faintly acquainted, how much more incomprehensible and miraculous must seem to us those spiritual operations which the human mind cannot follow or explain! To assume, therefore, that the day of miracles is past would be to assume that the Divine power is shortened. There are miracles in every believing life—miracles of transformation, of health and blessing, of succor in distress. 2. The "greater works" to which Jesus referred were those connected with the glorious ingathering of souls after his ascension, which it was not his own personal mission to accomplish. In the sense of numbers alone, they would be greater, but not otherwise.

S. E. A., Brookfield, Mo. Are we as a nation, or simply as a community, neglecting our duty as Christians by refusing to take part in public and family worship? This city boasts of between six and seven thousand inhabitants, with many devoted Christian men and women who love the house of God, who give liberally to church and missions and all benevolent institutions. Yet, in making inquiries (aside from ministers), I have not found a single instance where family worship is carried on. I can recall member so distinctly my father's and mother's morning and evening devotions. How their hearts would thrill and voices tremble with God's love. Why, in this age and generation, are we so remiss?

It is unfortunately true that family worship is greatly neglected. This is no doubt due in large measure to changed social and business conditions, rather than to a decline in spirituality in the home. Life moves more quickly now than it did some forty or fifty years ago. Many things conspire to interfere with the family gathering morning and evening, as was formerly the almost universal custom in well-ordered Christian households. We can only record the change with regret. We know of homes, however, where, even though the group be small, the dear old familiar simple service is still held with its accustomed regularity. The pulpit does not lay enough emphasis on the family altar.

Miscellaneous

Mrs. G. B. H., Sacramento, Calif. See the passage you want in Job 1: 7.

M. W. R., Calgary, Can. We have sent your letter to the Bowery Mission.

F. C. W., Spartanburg, S. C. There is no such statement in the Bible. It was a piece of vulgar discourtesy.

Reader, New York. Letters for the Answered Prayer column should be simply addressed to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

Mrs. A. M., Centreville, Ia. Under our laws and constitution, all religions are tolerated, and a candidate's religious belief usually does not bar him from political preferment.

J. H. G., Reading, Pa. The phrase "be ye wise as serpents" is found in Matt. 10: 16. It implies an extraordinary combination of qualities and the application to the best purposes of that wisdom and skill which are commonly used to attain selfish, worldly ends.

Mrs. E. D. K., Rialto, Calif. His claim of discovering the North Pole has been rejected by American and European geographical societies and by explorers and scientists generally. No other class is competent to pass upon the question.

C. A. S., National City, Calif. Louis Braille, a Frenchman, invented the raised alphabet for the blind. The whole subject has been frequently [illegible] in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. The interpretation of the particular passage in question is a matter of acute controversy.

A. B. C., Seattle, Wash. Our advice in such cases is that if a man conscientiously feels that his business involves the sacrifice of his Sundays, he should take the first opportunity to make a change. We are not to judge of others; those who know the moral law concerning the Lord's day can judge for themselves whether they are conforming to it as far as possible or contravening it.

NEW YORK, DECEMBER 20, 1911

THE · CHRISTIAN · HERALD

A WEEKLY ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER FOR THE HOME

The Church of the Resurrection of Christ, St. Petersburg

A Devotee in a Russian Church

The Temple of Our Saviour from the Kremlin, Moscow

Copyright by H. C. White Co., N. Y.

RELIGION IN THE LANDS OF THE CZAR

By Rev. FRANCIS E. CLARK, D.D., LL.D.

Christian Endeavor Founder and President

MANY of my readers will doubtless be surprised to hear that there are two hundred different sects in Russia. We have been so accustomed to think of Protestantism as the only religion that is divided infinitesimally into sects that the fact that the great Greek Church is also divided into different factions, with the addition of a large number of flourishing sects in Russia outside of that fold, will astonish others as it has myself.

However, the Orthodox Greek Church is the vastly dominating factor of the religious life of the great Empire of the North, and, ignorant and superstitious as much of this religious life is, I am not one who would deny to the Russian much genuine devotion. No one can go into the magnificent cathedrals of Moscow, St. Petersburg, and Riga, or into the little churches which dot the great Siberian plains, as I have often done, and there see the people of high and low degree kissing the icons in an ecstasy of devotion, or bowing to the floor until their foreheads touch the cold stones, without believing that, however darkened the minds of many may be, there is yet a sincere "feeling after God, if haply they may find him."

The amount of money spent upon their churches is always some gauge of a people's devotion. People do not spend great sums of money on their churches, and rob themselves of the luxuries and even the necessities of life, unless they believe in their religion and the things for which it stands. In every Russian village the church is the great building of the region. With its golden domes and its curious double crosses, it towers above all the homes and stores and factories. The village may consist of squalid huts, but the church is often stately, or, if more humble, is embellished with gold and silver ornaments and icons framed in jewels, while the priests are gorgeous in cloth of gold and rich embroidery.

Moscow is the religious centre of the empire, and here the shrines and churches are of unparalleled splendor. So numerous are they that the people are kept bowing and crossing themselves on forehead and breast at every turn, as they pass these holy places.

Let us go to one of these services. Long-haired, full-bearded priests, their beards and faces evidently trained to look like the traditional Russian conception of the Christ, abound on every hand. Sometimes, besides the lay readers and altar-boys, all richly clothed, as many as a dozen priests, gorgeously arrayed, take part in a single service in the large churches.

The great bells have boomed out their invitation to attend, and the people, bowing and crossing themselves, flock in from every quarter. At length the high priest enters, and is received with devout reverence by the others. He mounts a dais in the middle of the church (there are no seats), and all the people gather around him. The lesser priests take off his more sombre garments one by one, and array him in tunic and breastplate and collar of gold, and wristlets and outer garments, stiff with gold and jewels. A jeweled crown is put upon his head and a sceptre in his hand, each garment and article being kissed reverently before it is put on.

Other priests walk up and down from the Holy of Holies, into which no woman is allowed to enter, to the dais on which the chief priest stands, while they swing censers filled with fragrant incense. Occasionally the chief officiating priest blesses the other priests or the audience with his outstretched fingers, but he says no word, standing for the most part like a golden image, motionless and wordless. At length the attendants bring him three candles, united at top into a single flame, symbol of the Holy Trinity, and these he waves right and left, before and behind, toward the audience on every side, saying never a word. The reader, who often seems to be a layman, chants the service in stentorian tones, while the responses are sung by a splendid choir of male voices, for which all the Russian churches are famous.

St. Petersburg, as well as Moscow, has some cathedrals which are marvels of ecclesiastical architecture. St. Isaac's Cathedral, for instance, in the centre of the city, cost twenty-four millions of roubles, or twelve millions of dollars. Scores and scores of immense marble pillars adorn its four equal sides, while several of the beautiful green malachite columns within are worth a king's ransom. It is said that in the golden domes of St. Isaac's, and the jewels within, Russia has a "war chest" that would defend her from her enemies for many a month, if she should need the gold.

Another famous church of St. Petersburg is the Church of the Resurrection, built over the very spot where the good Czar Alexander II., the emperor who liberated the serfs, was assassinated by a cruel bomb. The stone gutter, into which his body was flung by the explosion, is beneath the dome of the church, and a magnificent altar is built over it. This gutter was within a foot or two of the railing of a canal, and over this canal, in part, the cathedral is built, in order that it may cover the very spot of the Czar's death. Perhaps this is the most gorgeous of all the Russian churches, for the vast interior is one series of pictures in brilliant mosaics. One screen alone of precious stones cost hundreds of thousands of dollars, while the icons, or pictures of Christ and the saints, are sometimes embedded in frames made of countless pearls.

The Church of St. Peter and St. Paul is no less interesting. This is within the fortress of the same name, and here are buried all the Czars from Peter the Great down to Alexander II. and Alexander III., the grandfather and father of the present emperor. Thousands of votive wreaths of silver and gold hang on the pillars and walls of this church, while fresh

Continued on page 1296

Copyright Underwood & Underwood, N. Y.

A Religious Procession in St. Petersburg Going to Bless the Waters of the Neva

The American Pulpit

A SERMON BY

Rev. Frederick F. Shannon, D.D.*

The Christmas Splendor

TEXT: Matt. 2:2—"We saw his star . . . . and are come to worship him."

ONCE again we are in the light and glow and beauty of the Christmas story. Teeming as it does with upperworld disclosures, once again we must ask after its inward wonder. Surely, it is a wonder we never weary of. Unquestionably, it is the fountain of a perennial freshness to mankind. What other story is so eagerly told and retold by the human heart? What other story has in it so much of hope and joy and gladness? What other story so ravishes the heart of childhood? What other story gives such rapture to the visions of age? What other story gathers all peoples of all climes, and of all conditions, within its vast and tender heart, making them all rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory? Of course, there is no other. Our Christian Christmas message stands solitary, unique, unapproachable in human annals.

Like the splendor of the sun, the Christmas splendor is everywhere. I want us to gather a few of its beams into our own hearts to-day. Following the words of the wise men, which I have chosen for our text, let our meditations be fashioned somewhat after this order: 1. The Beam of Spiritual Interrogation. 2. The Beam of Spiritual Vision. 3. The Beam of Spiritual Pursuit.

I. The Beam of Spiritual Interrogation: "Where is he that is born King of the Jews?" It seems to me that there is something in the question which is older than the sun, more ancient than the stars. In point of fact, it was asked nearly two thousand years ago. It might as well have been asked ten thousand ages ago. For it is an ageless question, because it contains an ageless hope. Originally planted deep in humanity's heart, it is still a fresh question on humanity's lips. "Where is he that is born King of the Jews," King of the cycles, King of the nations, King of the heavens? It is the age-in and age-out cry of the travailing earth and universe.

Dealing Kindly with the Lowly

Consider that it is the mute, unlanguaged question of the animal creation. Reading the Gospel Christmas story, I am more and more impressed with this fact: The Virgin Mother laid her firstborn son in a manger. It seems that God was not content simply to condescend to the level of our fallen humanity. He wanted, also, to get in beneath the sub-human and raise it to higher planes of being. He wanted the glow of his incarnate glory to illumine the dumb darkness of the lower orders of creation. Certain it is, that since Christ was born in a manger, even animals have become subjects of a human kindness they never knew before. It is not the least of the glories of this new century, that our under-neighbors are more kindly dealt with than in former times. Societies for the prevention of cruelty to animals, I think, are carrying forward a work definitely begun in the manger-cradle of Incarnate Deity. So doth the voiceless longing of the animal world find expression in this comprehensive question: "Where is he that is born King of the Jews?"

Coming up into the human sphere, every phase and feature of our life is lit up by the Christian splendor. First of all, it lends a holier glow to the brow of motherhood. Sometimes we men, in thinking of our mothers, wonder why it is that our thoughts flow right on and on, symphony-like, until we find ourselves bowed in the worship of God. May we never lose that wonder! To do so, is a sure proof of spiritual declension. Yet I venture to think that this wonder is not altogether inexplicable. When we think of our mothers, O men, why is it we feel that God is inexpressibly near? I think I can partially answer that question. It is because motherhood is one of the tender eyes of God. God looks through motherhood into our inmost hearts. If we are true to our humanity, looking back into their dear faces, we behold the transparent light and glory of the divine. Benjamin West said the kiss of his mother made him a painter. I rather think it was God's kiss behind his mother's kiss which caused Benjamin West to utter this noble sentiment. For upon the sacred lips of motherhood there is this radiant beam of spiritual interrogation: "Where is he that is born King of the Jews?"

Moreover, this is the question of childhood. Surely, it must have been upon the crimson lips of the innocents so cruelly slaughtered by Herod. How the heart of the Eternal must have ached when his entrance into the world as a little child caused the murder of little children! I think the wail of every mother's heart found an echoing sob in the heart of God. But, thank heaven! from that black-bright hour it has been more difficult to practise cruelty toward childhood. And because that hour has struck, the day is coming when heartless neglect of childhood will vanish from the earth. We shall no longer fail to give children an opportunity of becoming all-round, full-toned Christian men and women. We shall insist upon the trinal development of body, mind and spirit. Christianity holds no brief for fractional men and women. Its ideal is completeness, is Godlike perfection. As a modern poet says: "We are just waking up to the value of town-planning. And we shall by and by be awake to something bigger still—to planning and building the manhood that is to dwell in the towns." A little child shall lead us into this noble task. For more and more little children will ask: "Where is he that is born King of the Jews?"

The Luminous Pathway

Again: The Christmas splendor falls across the pathway of the toiler. Now, we are all toilers. If we are not, we ought to be heartily ashamed of ourselves. For we have indeed tarnished the crown God set upon our manhood and womanhood. Let it be engraved in diamond-bright, spiritual characters on the tablets of our memories: God's advent angel passed over royal idlers in the palace and stood by the shepherds "abiding in the field, and keeping watch by night over their flock." Wise men, too, are wrapped in the spiritual mantle of the Christmas glory. Then they came only from the East. Now they come from the four winds—East, West, North and South. Scholarship has to reckon with the Yuletide fact. Otherwise, it drives itself into an intellectual museum. And what is that? Why, just a place where meatless dry bones rattle. Just a place where deluded men vainly strive to look wise. Just a place where mental icicles need to be shot through with warm, Christian sun-glow. Only Christ can create the true religious consciousness. And even Herbert Spencer tells us that the religious consciousness is unlike the ordinary consciousness. He says the religious consciousness has to do with that which is beyond the sphere of sense. He further affirms that the religious faculty is an normal as any other faculty. Thus do modern wise men devoutly pray:

> Let knowledge grow from more to more,
> But more of reverence in us dwell,
> That mind and soul, according well,
> May make one music as before,
> But vaster.

II. The Beam of Spiritual Vision: "We saw his star in the East." I have said that the Christmas splendor is everywhere. Now, the essential thing for each of us is to have eyes to see it. How shall we get them? There is but one way. And that is to receive his gift of vision. He will lend us his eyes. But he always attaches this condition: We must constantly use them. Now, what is spiritual vision? It is the inward power of seeing the true worth of the little and the large, and all that lies between them. Back of the wise men's question lay their vision. They never could have inquired, "Where is he?" had they not also been able to say, "We saw his star."

Spiritual Vision

What, then, is the function of spiritual vision? Why, it unveils the significance of little things. Supremely, I think, is this in evidence at the Advent season. The doll the mother gives her child did not cost a great sum of money. But the love for which the doll stands is more precious than rivers of gold. The hobby-horse the father gives his boy would hardly bring so much at auction as a Kentucky thoroughbred. Yet, in the lad's eyes, the wooden creature is of more value than many thoroughbreds. But most valuable of all is the love between father and son, of which the toy is the symbol. All over the world kind hearts are pulsing their warmth and love beyond the immediate family circle. In places of want, where loveless hearts beat with aching loneliness, Christian souls are placing tokens of the Eternal Love. So, too, in the genial spheres of cultured homes and friendships, this holy commerce and communion go on.

Spiritual vision comprehends, also, the majesty of the large. "We saw his star in the East." The wonder of a little child is a profound wonder. Therefore, it is not difficult to reason on up to a shining orb flung out into space. I have read somewhere that Dr. Carpenter sent Sir Charles Lyell the copy of a monograph. He had written it one day on an obscure specimen of natural history. Fearing lest the scientist should think he was exaggerating the importance of the little, he sent along with the specimen a kind of apology. The famous geologist answered: "Any single point is really the universe." If true, it is vastly important to know the single point. It is easy enough to leap, in thought, from a pin-head to a world. Only, I must be able to take my mental and spiritual stand upon that. You remember what John Ruskin's father said to his son's drawing-room company. John was interpreting some Turners. Called out of the room for a few minutes, the old father promptly entered. He said: "Well, my friends, with all due respect to my son John's eyes, I want to say this to you: I really think John sees more in these paintings than Turner ever meant to be seen." Ah, no! Turner was never understood until John Ruskin was born into the world. Turner had vision and a brush. Ruskin had vision and a tongue. And the pupil explained the master.

But our Master explains himself. God was never understood until Christ was born into human flesh. He knows what is in man. He rounds out the complete circle of our humanity. He was born. He grew in stature and wisdom. He was hungry, thirsty, and tired. He was loved and hated. He was joyful and sad. He was understood and misunderstood. You see the likeness is very definite. So, also, is his unlikeness. He was before all worlds. He was begotten by the Holy Spirit. He was without sin. He spake as never man spake. He died, and in his death made atonement for sin. He was buried, but he could not be holden of death. He walked the earth after his resurrection. But the earth, which could not entomb him forever, could not contain him in bodily form forever. He vanished from the sight of men that he might abide forever in the hearts of men. Oh, the growing wonder of it all! First, he incarnates the Eternal. Then he creates the vision to behold it.

What True Worship Means

Oh, the blended mystery and glory! The Eternal becomes a little child. The little child, grown to manhood, is the Lamb of God that taketh away the sins of the world. Wise men saw his star in the East. But before the stars were, he was. For "he made the stars also." And when the stars have all spent their light, the light of his love and peace and joy will shine on with undimmed brilliance!

III. The Beam of Spiritual Pursuit: "And are come to worship him." What is the goal of spiritual interrogation and spiritual vision? Is it not nobly expressed just here—worshiping him? Do not, I beg of you, regard this as something nebulous, dreamful, unreal. For, believe me, it is the most essential truth of our lives. It reaches back into the secret springs of motive. Worship of him is not merely saying prayers. It creates prayers worth saying. Worship of him is not psalm-singing alone. It turns life itself into a melodious psalmody. Worship of him is not performing certain piously labeled acts at certain times. It makes all acts to be fine and high through the riches of his grace. It forgets the temporal place and remembers the eternal principle. It transfigures home, office and street into a Bethel. All becomes one wide-open gateway to heaven. It transforms the desponding pilgrim into the homing immortal. Wherever a human spirit, consciously or unconsciously, desires to do the will of God — which

Continued on next page

* Pastor, Grace M. E. Church, Brooklyn, N. Y.

A CHRISTMAS SONG

BABE Jesus lay in Mary's lap;
The sun shone on His hair;
And this is how she saw, mayhap,
The crown already there.

For she sang: "Sleep on, my little King,
Bad Herod dares not come;
Before Thee sleeping, holy thing,
The wild winds would be dumb.

"I kiss Thy hands, I kiss Thy feet,
My child so long desired;
Thy hands shall never be soiled, my sweet;
Thy feet shall never be tired.

"For Thou art the King of Men, my Son;
Thy crown I see it plain;
And men shall worship Thee, every one,
And cry, Glory! Amen!"

GEORGE MACDONALD.

How They Helped the "Bread Line"

A NUMBER of young employees of both sexes in the general offices of the Buffalo & Susquehanna Railroad at Galeton, Pa., having read of the Bowery Mission Bread Line and the thousands of homeless and destitute men and boys whom it is helping with an early morning meal these cold winter days, decided to send a gift to the Mission. These golden-hearted young folks—twenty-one of them in all—put in their loose change, dimes, quarters and half dollars, and they have forwarded the result in a check for $5 to the Mission. The donors are: R. Dimit, F. G. Lush, A. J. Griffon, J. E. J., C. T. S., C. R. F., Anna Ludeman, W. H. Voze, A. A. Berry, Anna Thomas, Cash, J. C. Holman, M. J. Curran, N. O. Johnson, J. S. May, G. Clark, W. J. R., J. W. Clark, T. C. Major, E. Schoonmaker, G. D. Reynold. This generous gift is all the more appreciated, since it comes from young workers who have little to spare and who in sending it have exercised much self-denial. They will have the satisfaction of knowing that it will supply coffee and rolls to some two hundred famished men and boys of the Bread Line. Their letter will be read from the Mission platform and will be a worthy example for others to emulate. They have the hearty thanks of the Mission and its managers for their kind and timely gift.

The Christmas Splendor

Continued from preceding page

always includes good-will toward men—that is indeed acceptable worship of him!

Spiritual interrogation, spiritual vision, and spiritual pursuit are fulfilled at last in the soul's dear, satisfying possession of him, because he possesses the soul for himself. Tholuck used to cry: "I have but one passion. It is He—it is He!" May he become the passion of each of us! And may these words of Dickens, which a radiant friend sent me in a Christmas letter, be completely realized by every one: "Many Merry Christmases! Many Happy New Years! Unbroken Friendships! Great Accumulation of Cheerful Recollections! Affection on Earth! And Heaven at Last for All of Us!"

ANVIL STROKES

..A GRIN is a cross between a smile and a frown.

..THE man who gets rich quick may not stay rich long.

..YOU can keep cool-headed without being cold-hearted.

..A BAD man in the end gets the kind of publicity he does not want.

..YOU can't get much good out of people whose chief good is their money.

..TO MANY people, automobiles are very handy things to run off from church with.

..THERE are three kinds of lies—the lie that is told for a lie and is not believed; the lie that is told for the truth and is believed; and the lie that is half a truth.

Temporal and Spiritual Building

By P. J. MEATH

IN THE Word, we are urged to look not at the things that are seen, for they are temporal and passing away, but at the things that are not seen, for they are eternal and shall never pass away. But unfortunately we are inclined to do the reverse. Things that are seen receive our greatest care. In temporal building, the outlay is too much.

For example, we are about to build a house of worship. We are all anxious to build, but are not all agreed on the price. Some of us say, "Will not thirty thousand dollars put us up a good substantial building and of quite sufficient seating capacity? We can afford to build a sixty thousand dollar building, and in so doing feed self and vanity; but would it not be much better for us to consecrate our building by giving the extra thirty thousand in feeding the hungry, clothing the naked and sending the Gospel to those that are perishing? Now, should our Lord appear before us just at this time, and give his advice in the matter, would any sane man or woman doubt what his advice would be? Think for a moment of him who, for example, was born in a manger, who did most of his preaching under the naked blue canopy of heaven, favoring this needless outlay on temples of wood, brick and stone, while temples of flesh and blood that he had come into the world to possess and save were left to perish!"

. . .

It is not too much to say that in the last six hundred years, between fifteen and twenty billions of dollars have been buried in extravagant church building, while in the same time innumerable souls have perished in darkness. Had this enormous wealth, with the spirit of unity, love and good fellowship, been applied to the conversion of China, India and Japan, a thousand millions of the earth's population might to-day have accepted Christ as the promised Messiah.

And, again proceeding in the same line of thought, we have to-day in the Christian world a body of worshipers who might come together with the spirit of reform and say, "We have in our churches an outlay of $500,000,000 in statuary that is a needless outlay and also a bar to spiritual worship. Would it not be well for us to stop this needless outlay, and use those millions for the spread of the Gospel of Christ?" Now, should our Lord appear before this body of worshipers, would any one of common sense doubt what his counsel would be in the matter? Would he leave the living to perish for this traffic in lifeless statuary?

. . .

But much as we need practical economy in temporal building, we stand much more in need of unity, love and good fellowship in spiritual building. Many will no doubt say that we cannot be one in harmony; we differ so much in our methods of worship. But we are commanded to be one in harmony. We stand on one foundation—that is, Christ. A house standing on one foundation ought to be one, and especially when our Lord, that Foundation, commands us to be one, and that pertinently and forcibly, to make the one thing needful thoroughly understood. A Pharisee comes before him and asks his opinion of the first great commandment, and our Lord replies as follows: "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, with all thy soul, with all thy mind and with all thy strength. And the second is like, namely this: Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself."

. . .

If our Lord had gone no further, we might still be in doubt, but to seal the naked truth he continues: "On these two commands hang all the law and the prophets." This is the one thing needful. No man can love God, to whom God has not revealed himself, and no man can know Christ as his personal Saviour to whom the Father has not revealed him. We are plainly told that on these two commands hang all Christian creeds and doctrines. If this is not a command from our Lord for unity, love and good fellowship, notwithstanding our creeds, what are we to understand from it?

But the Master continues. He will leave no stone unturned that we may clearly see the truth in this matter. The disciples, returning from their fields of labor, tell him they saw others casting out devils and they forbade them because they followed not them. The Master replied: "Forbid them not. Those that are not against us are with us." The disciples might have had reason to object, not knowing their Lord's will in the matter; but we have no reason to object, for Christ has positively stated what his will is in this matter.

. . .

Then let the creeds in harmony and love multiply. It is God's will. The Good Shepherd will find the folds, let them wander where they will. Competition is at least as wholesome in spiritual matters as it is in temporal. History shows that religious monopoly is an inhuman tyrant, with no iota of pity.

In this line of thought our Lord still continues and tells us that he has other sheep which are not of this fold, that he will bring them also and there shall be one fold and one Shepherd. If, then, we are to be the sheep of one fold and one Shepherd, is it not high time that we were putting on the wedding garments—that in unity, love and good fellowship we may work together as a united body of spiritual builders in the great work that is before us? Then we might read those words with faith and pleasure: "Blessed are the peacemakers, for they shall be called the children of God."

Let us not wait until the political powers of the earth put us to shame, for they are to-day making a greater effort for peace and good-will among the nations than we are among Christians who are supposed to be the children of peace.

WHY SHE LIKES THE ALMANAC

Please accept my thanks for The Christian Herald Almanac for 1912. I thought your calendars could not be surpassed, but in my estimation they will have to give way to the Almanac, as in it we have all the benefits of the calendar with a great deal of useful information in condensed form thrown in.

Zanesville, O. MRS. J. R. V.

NEXT TO HER BIBLE

I received my premium in due time and will say I am very much pleased with it. I will also continue to speak a good word for your valuable paper. I love THE CHRISTIAN HERALD next to my Bible. I wish you great success in securing many new subscribers. I have been one since Dr. Talmage was editor.

Bloomfield, Calif. MRS. N. McC.

PRIZES THE PREMIUMS HIGHLY

I have just received my premium book, Samantha at Coney Island, also The Christian Herald Almanac, both of which came safely. Many, many thanks for each of them. I shall prize them highly, as I do THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, which I feel that I cannot do without.

Seaview, Mass. MRS. E. W. W.

A READER'S EARNEST WISH

The Bible pictures and cards came safely, and have been admired by many of our friends. They nearly all wonder, as we do, how you can afford such beautiful and useful prizes for so little money. The paper alone is worth far more to me as a helper and educator than you ask for it. That it may find its way into many new homes this year is the earnest wish of one of its many readers. MRS. O. C. B.

Watertown, N. Y.

A CHRISTMAS CAROL

IF YE would hear the angels sing,
"Peace on earth and mercy mild,"
Think of Him who was once a child,
On Christmas Day in the morning.

If ye would hear the angels sing,
Christians, see ye let each door
Stand wider than ever it stood before,
On Christmas Day in the morning.

Rise, and open wide the door;
Christians, rise! the world is wide,
And many there be that stand outside,
Yet Christmas comes in the morning.

If ye would hear the angels sing,
Rise and spread your Christmas fare;
'Tis merrier still the more that share,
On Christmas Day in the morning.

Rise, and light your Christmas fire;
Christians, rise! the world is old,
And time is weary and worn and cold,
Yet Christmas comes in the morning.

DORA GREENWELL.

The Unfinished Story

IT HAD been snowing all day, but the late afternoon was clear and very cold. Street corners and doorways, window ledges and niches everywhere were heaped with holly and cedar, mistletoe and bay, and the streets and avenues were thronged with hurrying, bustling crowds, for it was Christmas eve in New York City. Where the crowds were thickest the curb was lined with toy-venders and tiny mechanical carts, tumbling cocks, clowns, acrobats, auto coaches, and wind-up animals of every variety, not three inches high, trotted about the pavement in the most whimsical way, up to your very shoes. That myriads of these little contraptions are not stepped upon and destroyed each season is another of those big-city miracles no one seems able to account for.

The bright shop windows in their holiday trappings were like fires freshly stirred, and over everything was the rich afterglow of the sunset.

On my way home, my arms heaped with holly, I turned out of Forty-second Street and walked several blocks up Fifth Avenue, thinking how good it was to be there in all the glorious Christmas pageant. If this avenue were suddenly turned on end, thought I, with the side streets for branches, what a Christmas tree it would make, with all the gay shop windows dangling; and I smiled to myself at my fantastic thoughts as I stepped into the Cathedral, where the great organ was pealing forth a Christmas hymn and the choir boys were rehearsing the Adeste Fideles for the midnight service, when a small boy stepped up to me. "I am hunting for the end of a story. Will you help me, please?" he said so earnestly that I answered "Yes, indeed," almost before I had quite understood him. The big gray cathedral, with its pillars and vines, its stained-glass windows, through which a soft, clear light spread everywhere, might have been a bit of wildwood in a yellow sunset and the boy a little live thing hurrying through it. I followed on after him and he stopped in front of a group of clay figures representing the mother of Christ and the baby and the shepherds, which had evidently been just uncovered.

"We know it up to where there was no room for them at the inn. Mother told it up to there, and Tillie—she's my little sister—has cried most ever since. She wants to know the end of that story; not another story will do," he insisted; "I've tried most a hundred."

"But your mother?" said I.

"Oh, she died a Sunday, just while she was a telling it. Will you hurry and tell it to me, please?" he urged.

As unastonished as I could manage to be, I took up the thread just where it had broken off and whispered simply and directly the rest of the Christmas story. At the end, where the angels and the stars sang together because a Baby King was born into the world and it was the first Christmas morning—"Thank you," said the boy, and threaded his way out into the streets so swiftly that you would not have seen him any more than I did when the story was finished. JANET PORTER.

Belfast Stirred by a Great Revival

OUR American visitors, Dr. Chapman and Mr. Alexander, during the revival campaign now in progress, tell us that Belfast is very like an American city. The revival of 1859 was born not far from Belfast, Ireland, and in County Antrim alone eighty-one churches received 4,000 accessions to the church membership. D. L. Moody did a remarkable work here. He came twice to the city, but his first campaign was the more remarkable. For six weeks he preached in a great tabernacle, and at the end of that time John McNeill came in to preach for six weeks more, and Belfast still tells the story of the united work of these great missioners. Eight years ago Dr. Torrey and Mr. Alexander came to Belfast. Their mission, too, was blessed of God, and to-day abiding results are found as the effect of their work.

For five weeks in October and November, the present mission has been carried on, the interest increasing with each passing day. The place of meeting was the Assembly Hall, the headquarters of the Presbyterian Church in Ireland. Mr. Alexander led the great congregations from night to night in a volume of song such as has never been equaled in the city.

Dr. Chapman secured the support of the leading ministers of the city and they stood by him to the end. Secretary David A. Black, of the Y. M. C. A., says: "Dr. Chapman, in one of his sermons, spoke about the money that had been wrongfully taken, and which burns a hole in your pocket. Since that address was delivered, I have had the experience of taking a young man, who had not the courage to go himself, to an office in the city to return money which he had wrongfully appropriated. As I handed the money to the master, he said he would like to meet 'that man Chapman.'"

The Secretary's report of the Belfast mission is as follows: "Three thousand one hundred and seventy-two people were personally dealt with by the workers chosen by the ministers, and the entire number publicly professed conversion. But this does not at all indicate the depth of the work. Possibly 3,500 would be nearer the mark."

There were three outstanding features in the work: First was the influence exerted by the mission upon men. For five successive Sundays, the Assembly Hall was crowded with men from all walks of life, many of whom professed to accept Christ as Saviour. Second, at the close of a special service, Dr. Chapman made an appeal for young men who wished to enter the ministry, and for young women who wished to give themselves to Christ for home or foreign mission work, to publicly announce the fact by rising or coming forward. The scene that followed was a most remarkable one. In response to a request to mothers and fathers to rise and indicate that prayer was sought for their boys and girls, a great percentage of the audience stood, and for some time nothing could be heard but trembling voices, speaking for sons and daughters. Then Dr. Chapman asked all the boys in the house to stand, who were willing to dedicate themselves to the Christian ministry, and nearly one hundred, several of them university students, rose. Dr. Chapman said he never witnessed such a sight. Of the girls 144 expressed their desire for fuller consecration to God's service.

On the last night, converts were admitted to the hall by ticket, and Dr. Chapman and Mr. Alexander stood in front of the platform and shook the hands of more than 2,200 people who had accepted Christ.

Dr. Chapman and Mr. Alexander in February will sail for Australasia.

R B.

Belfast, Ireland.

One of the Great Chapman-Alexander Meetings in Belfast, Ireland

TOPICS OF INTEREST THROUGHOUT THE WORLD

—THE ACCOMPANYING photograph of an Italian military aeroplane flying near the edge of a Tripolitan town shows that these machines-notwithstanding their first tests for scouting purposes in actual warfare. The Italians announce that they are eminently justified in expectations. Captain Piazza and other military aviators have on several occasions been able to follow the movements of the Turkish troops, and Captain Moizo has flown as far as forty miles inland on scouting trips. When the Turks assailed Tripoli it was a skilful aeroplane reconnaissance that discovered a large Turkish force—believed to be the army which it was believed to be still many miles away. The Italian machine in the accompanying map of that country shows the approximate route of that reconnaissance, and it was by this means that the Italians were informed that the Turkish army was approaching from the south and enabled to prepare for the attack.

—GENERAL BOOTH'S official portrait of the prominent citizens of Manchester for the Hague tribunal has provoked strong opposition, and it now looks as though the opposition to say the least, was exaggerated by considerable misrepresentation. The Manchester Guardian declares in denouncing the "atrocities" perpetrated by Turkish troops, which at the time, Commander Booker of the United States gunboat Yorktown is shooting at Moorish rebels. Private letters have since been received which show that the Turkish troops have been treated with the greatest kindness, and that no prisoners have been shot or otherwise harmed. Americans generally should be grateful if you can consider the misrepresentation, and the ugly stories commonly circulated.

—THE SWEDISH ACADEMY has awarded the Nobel Prize for Literature for 1911 to Maurice Maeterlinck. A year ago Maurice Maeterlinck refused to be "crowned" by the French Academy because that "immortal" should have to do the renunciation of the Belgian citizenship and the transfer of his allegiance to the French Republic. Although he lives in France in a monumental residence, he continues to remain a Belgian. Nobel, the inventor, by a codicil in his will, left the Academy power to bestow the prize upon any author who, in the opinion of the Academy, has produced the most distinguished work of an idealistic tendency. Maeterlinck is doubtful, but there is no doubt that the winners of Nobel Prizes achieve a distinction that marks them as the intellectual aristocracy of Europe and America. Maeterlinck, who is still a comparatively young man, having been born in 1862, is now recognized as the greatest literary figure of the present day. He is poet, philosopher, playwright, essayist, and in everything he does there is the combination of a style so perfect that his work can be translated with the utmost facility, and a love of beauty and feeling for the esoteric magic of nature and mankind render almost every line he writes suggestive and valuable as a contribution to the troubled thought of the twentieth century.

The Fourth Arm's First Appearance in Warfare

—DURING THE LATTER part of November, the news dispatches from South America contained many conflicting reports of uprisings and disturbances in Venezuela. That General Cipriano Castro, the formerly exiled ex-president, is again in the country is now generally admitted. On November 19 a body of several thousand revolutionists, supposedly under Castro's direction, met and, it is reported, defeated some government troops near San Cristobal. Castro's whereabouts are unknown, but a recent dispatch from Caracas announced that he was residing at his old plantation at Cucuta, in Colombia, near the border.

—A NEWS DISPATCH from Baltimore says: "Removed eight days ago from a squalid room at 106 Albemarle Street, Abraham Kalinsky, 117 years old, died recently in the Hebrew Friendly Inn. Kalinsky was the oldest man in Baltimore, if not in America. Not until he was 105 years old and had buried his second wife did Kalinsky leave the farm and come to Baltimore. It is said he served in the German army under Bluecher at the battle of Waterloo and helped burn the city of Moscow to prevent its falling into the hands of Napoleon. He had fourteen children, three of whom are alive; twenty grandchildren, twenty-eight great-grandchildren, five great-great-grandchildren and six great-great-great-grandchildren."

A TIMELY BENEVOLENCE

Miss Caroline L. Dikeman has generously contributed $200 to Thanksgiving and Christmas charitable work among the poor through the Bowery Mission, as follows: $25 in aid of the Bowery Mission's Thanksgiving dinner; $25 for the Mission's Christmas dinner to the poor; $100 to the Bread Line, and $25 each for the Thanksgiving and Christmas charitable work conducted by "Mother" Bird. The giver will have the satisfaction of knowing that her kindness is bringing momentary comfort and happiness to hundreds of the poor and destitute at this season.

THE SONG OF THE DAWN

By Elizabeth L. Gebhard

THE great cement plant opened in the spring, that is, they began to make cement blocks and lay them upon each other, till the mammoth structure resulting reached the dimensions of an ancient fortification. All this was not done without hands, and arriving in flocks like the birds that were building in the tree tops, came a host of foreigners. The men were of Hungarian nationality and came largely alone. Walking in pairs, and forming a solid column, one shift after another filled the sidewalks and the gravel paths on their way to or from work. For the most part they seemed a stolid crowd, rarely speaking or smiling at one another as they traveled along with their tin pails.

A company of American boys were soon added as time-keepers, and joined themselves with their leather lunch-boxes to the moving throng, stepping along like young athletes, laughing and joking as they went. Mechanics, overseers and superintendents filled out the working force, these latter riding back and forth to the works each day in a carryall. The papers announced occasionally a new relay of workers, and in a few months the great force reached many hundreds, and the moving mass of humanity came to be a settled factor in the life of the town.

One summer morning, between shifts, there passed up the street, and over the well-trodden road, some fresh arrivals, not in battalions this time, but what, in the comings and goings, had not been evident before — a little family complete. A young husband and wife walked side by side, she holding a baby lovingly and capably in her arms, while the father carried the cradle. A large proportion of the laborers were unmarried, though many a home had been left fatherless while the head of the house was finding work at a distance. But here was one home where the ties were too strong, or the courage to face unknown conditions too great, or the love too strong, for separation.

The great plant continued to grow block by block, the fires within belching forth smoke filled with sparks, till to the onlooker it seemed like a battlefield in the throes of warfare.

The narrow gravel path which led to the works had once been a grass-bordered pathway, but before the summer was ended, through the tramp of many feet it had broadened till the grass had become a thing of the past.

In the hottest days groups of men often caught a ride into town on a stone-wagon, and as the wages were paid regularly, this mode of locomotion became more and more popular, so that it became a common sight to see long wagons with a plank along each side, filled with laborers, closely packed, their feet swinging outside, while in the space left in the centre men stood clinging to each other for support as the wagon swayed over the rough places. This questionable comfort lightened the long homeward walk, and the relief changed their stolidity into jollity and song, so that these rollicking wagon-loads were a feature of the late summer afternoons.

The baby and the cradle had come back from that first walk to the works, to find a home at the foot of the town, crowded and cramped, but a home. Anton, the young father, walked the long stretch when his work was done, to save the nickel for wife and baby. He told Esther he could do this, because his lunch-pail held so much better food than the others, who had to buy their lunch at the bake-shop, and his wife, pleased that he said it, baked one day an apple tart, and another a big gingerbread, or some other home dainty, to make her husband's lunch the best of all the men's.

There was another reason for Anton's walking the two miles home at night. Sometimes he brought a bunch of buttercups or daisies picked along the road. Once a farmer gave him a bunch of lettuce, and a lady who lived behind a hedge of lilacs saw him picking daisies, and gave him an armful of the sweet purple flowers. In the fall he carried apples home in his pocket for the baby, for the ground under the trees was heaped with the fallen fruit. One couldn't ride and make Esther's eyes shine with the little gift at night—Esther, who never saw in the closely built tenement district even a blade of grass.

"Back in the little home he told the wonderful story"

A mission church had been started not far away, with preaching in their own tongue, and Esther, with her head wound in a bright handkerchief, about a face as fair and cheeks as pink as the baby's, carried Tony to the mission on Sunday afternoons. With her head-covering slipped back, and the baby's face near hers, blue eyes gazing into blue eyes, they made an exquisite modern Madonna and child. Anton's shift prevented him from going to church, but they told him all about it at night, Esther in words, and little Tony with crows and gurgles of pleasure.

So the hot summer days passed and the crisp autumn followed, then winter and another summer, and the busy colony of workers went and came as regularly as sunrise and sunset, with a contentment in their hearts, born of day's work, night's rest, and full dinner-pails. Baby Tony could toddle about now, and standing sturdily on his little square feet, and holding firmly to one side of the cradle, would sometimes rock it violently, then fill the room with laughter. The cradle had become his plaything as well as his nightly resting-place.

It was an afternoon in November that a rumor arose, no one knew quite where, that the works were to be shut down. Some of the men scoffed at it, others turned pale, while here and there a man tried to discover the source of the story, with an angry impatience born of anxiety. There were all kinds of reports in the air, but the day shift was allowed to go home without any verification of the rumor.

"Nothing in it," said the man who walked home beside Anton. "Some fellow started it for a joke, and it spread," and Anton answered that he guessed that was so, while all the time the hearts of the two men lay heavy in their breasts with fear, for both had their families with them in a strange town, with winter just ahead.

"See the boss?" Anton asked after a pause. "Looked as if he staggered when he heard it."

"Yes," his fellow workmen answered. "He came a long way, from a place they call Vermont, and his wife and girl are sick. Only came this fall. Don't know anybody."

"Perhaps it isn't true," said Anton, trying once more to persuade himself.

Before the next night it began to be noised through the town that the story was true. The night shift had been told not to report for work again, but to come for wages on Saturday. The tramp, tramp of the day shift in the early morning had the sound of men who dragged their feet toward doom.

Esther packed Anton's dinner-pail with a lump in her throat, and Anton took it without a word. Now in the cradle the dinner-pail had stood for the sentiment and comfort of the little home. An empty dinner-pail meant no work, no home, and hunger for themselves and the baby. When Anton came back that night he held no flowers in his hand, or apple in his pocket, but Esther found half his lunch in his pail.

Anton had earned enough for the high rent he paid for their one room, and food, and clothes for them all, but the wages given at the works to the common laborers did not allow of bank accounts. There were a few nickels and dimes and quarters in a broken sugar-bowl, saved bit by bit, but this would not pay the rent and keep them long.

"And isn't there other work?" Esther asked hopefully, trying to keep up Anton's courage.

"Other work for eight hundred men? No," Anton had answered bitterly.

As the days passed, it seemed that a large part of the Hungarians were about to leave town for their former homes, and the hope of work elsewhere. Only those bound by ties they could not break, or with no prospect ahead, stayed, but these counted up into the hundreds. A rumor ran about among them that there would be work on the ice —filling the great ice-houses— later on, if they could hold out till the river froze. Anton went home with this report, and they counted the diminishing coins to see how long they would last. It was early December now, and both Anton and Esther had picked up a kind of pigeon English, and an understanding of the language of their neighbors, so first one, then the other, came home with a bit of river gossip to keep up the courage of the one left behind. As the cold nipped their fingers and toes one morning, Esther came in from the bakeshop with her eyes shining.

"Dey say it zeero, tree mo' nights and ice goot."

"Ooo, Ooo!" she murmured in motherly fashion over baby Tony, as she lifted him from the floor, where he had played till his little fingers had grown blue, and his toes icy. "Po' Tony! Po' Tony so freeze!" she soothed, as she rubbed his fingers warm in her own numbed palms.

It would seem that the hopes and fears of the little household were continually running ajar of each other. With zero weather would come work, but till it came there could be but little fire, and they wrapped Tony in the bedclothes to keep him warm, while the glow of hope made his parents forget outward discomfort.

But the morrow saw a change in the weather, and Tony clapped his hands in the bright sunshine, while the glow faded in his mother's face, and his father went out and walked the streets.

Sometimes on these warm days he walked with others out to the works, now silent and lifeless, talking of the past months, their activity and hopes, and the wonderment whether the plant would start in the spring.

At last snow-flakes fell softly, and Tony crowed and laughed, but his mother turned away from the pretty sight with tears in her eyes. Then there came a rain, pouring in sheets, running through the gutters, trickling

Continued on page 1311

OUR EDITORIAL FORUM

OTTO KOENIG, President GEO. H. SANDISON, Managing Editor THEODORE WATERS, Secretary

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly by "The Christian Herald," at the Bible House, Fourth Avenue, 8th and 9th Sts., New York City. The officers are: Otto Koenig, President and Treasurer, Bible House, N. Y. City; Geo. H. Sandison, Vice-President, Bible House, N. Y. City; Theodore Waters, Secretary, Bible House, N. Y. City.

Subscription Price, $1.50 a year, in advance.
Remittances should always be made in the safest manner available to the remitter. Register cash remittances.
Foreign Postage.—For each copy to be mailed outside the United States, Canada, and Mexico, add one dollar a year.

Change of Date.—It takes at least two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.
Expiration of Subscription.—The date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription ends.
Change of Address.—It requires three weeks' time to make the change. Give both old and new address.

Subscriptions may commence with any issue.
Letters should be addressed, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

Entered at Post Office, New York, as Second-class Matter
Entered as Second-class Matter at the Post Office Department, Ottawa

The Heart of Christmas

IT IS a strange fact of life that we often understand one thing better by thinking of something else; at times, indeed, we see one thing more distinctly by looking at another thing. Very often we do one thing better by holding our thought and our emotion on something else.

Two artists are painting the picture of a sunset, each with the same technical skill. One is thinking: "When people see this, they will say it is a great picture." His real thought is not on the sky-glory; it is on the canvas—and on himself. The other is thinking: "When people see this they will say, 'That was a great sunset!'" You know which picture will be the really greater success.

The principle applies to many things. Saints are saints because they think of Christ. They must not think too much of the kind of character they are building, the quality of the work they are doing, the nature of the reward they will get. They must think of him. And thinking of him, looking at him, loving him, trying to catch the secret of his will and work it out, they do good work and build pure character and get great reward.

And Christmas? Well, Christmas is a day to build, a day to be made a merry day, merry for you and merry for as many as you can reach. How shall we make the day a real success? Christmas? Christmas means Christ. It is his day, his birthday. On the birthday of our friends we cry, "Happy Birthday!" We wish it to be a happy day for them; shall we try to make this a really happy day for him? Shall we keep our thoughts not so much upon the day as upon him? If we do, we may depend upon it, it will be a merry Christmas for us.

And as we love him cheerily and try to make him happy on his birthday, we shall remember how he liked to make others glad. The glory of Christmas is that he came down, that he came into our lowly life, into the stable, into the sweet beauty of the Judean hills, into the quaint life of the little streets of Nazareth, then into his greater work of spreading peace and gladness everywhere. On Good Friday we think of his wondrous death for us. At Easter we think of his radiant resurrection. But on Christmas we think of his gentle coming into the facts and details, the burdens and the joys of our daily life.

So shall every peal of child laughter, and every sparkle of holly berry, and every glint of sunshine across the snow, and every word of merry greeting, and every pleasure of gift received, and every joy of gift and affection and service given to others, take on new brightness and new glee and new beauty because our thoughts and our hearts are fixed on him.

Bright day of Jesus, glad day of remembering that God has come to stay with men, happy birthday of the Saviour, merry—merry Christmas!

Let the Whole Truth Come Out

IN THE widest sense, the dramatic trial just concluded at Los Angeles was a national event. Its import and the deep significance of its criminal disclosures belong to the whole country. It is not a matter for surprise, therefore, to learn that from this point on, the investigation of the gigantic conspiracy of dynamite and destruction, only a part of which is yet revealed, will be taken up by the Federal authorities and the States of California and Indiana. Now, although District Attorney Fredericks, the public prosecutor, has positively denied any bargain with the McNamaras, the apologists of crime are panic-stricken at the possibility of coming revelations implicating many men "higher up" in labor unionism, East and West, as accessories before the fact, and this not in a single crime, but in many that appear in the ominous roll of over one hundred dynamite explosions in a period of less than six years.

It is openly charged that, back of the McNamaras and their immediate associates, lurks an invisible line of figures who inspired, financed and otherwise aided and abetted the "men in front." Who were these men in the invisible line, who secretly plotted and furnished the funds, while their agents at the front went up and down the country with dynamite and clockwork bombs, destroying property and human lives? These invisibles—the men "higher up"—till now cunningly shielded, will be forced into the light and compelled to bear their share of the responsibility for the outrages they helped to devise and execute. It is true that some of the leaders, Mr. Gompers among the number, have sharply resented the imputation of any guilty knowledge of the dynamite crimes; but if the union leaders are innocent, as they assert—if their hands are really clean—they can have nothing to fear from the most searching investigation. Rather should they welcome it and co-operate with it, as a means of vindication; for it would be useless to deny that organized labor has sustained a severe blow in the whole outcome of the trial. Labor's attitude in the coming broader and deeper inquiry will go far toward determining public opinion concerning the complicity or innocence of its leaders. Wise counsels would seem to indicate only one course in the matter—that the unions, as a means of self-preservation, should purge themselves of the contaminating association of those who are shown to have given countenance and support in any way to the criminal operations of the dynamite wreckers. The law-abiding workingmen of America owe it to themselves as a class, to the cause of labor and to the nation, to see to it that no leader who had a part in the financing of these crimes; who used the union treasuries for that purpose; who knew, even by suggestion, the real character of the work in hand, and who planned to shield and protect the criminals and to supply funds for the defense—and even funds for bribes for the jurors—should have a voice in their councils hereafter.

Reorganization, readjustment, must be the order of the hour. There should be a thorough housecleaning, and those leaders who by their criminal intrigues have brought all the labor unions under suspicion, should be swept into the rubbish heap. No organization owes loyalty to a man who, by the commission of crime or collusion with criminals, has betrayed his sacred trust and disgraced his associates.

The toils of the law are already closing around the guilty. When the fair-minded and justice-loving American people once get going, they are hard to stop, and we do not believe they will stop in the present case until all the facts connected with the black dynamite conspiracy of the last six years are brought to light and the guilty punished as they deserve. Let the whole truth come out, no matter who shall stand or fall.

Sensible Gifts for Children

THIS has been aptly called the children's century. Almost no stone has been left unturned, no effort spared on the part of parents, teachers, doctors, writers, builders, earnest workers along the roadways of science and art, in their efforts for the welfare of the little child. Every department of child life has been exploited theoretically and in most instances practically, in what might almost be called an effort at making over this everyday world, with its inaccuracies and its stains and its problems, into a very pleasant and logical dwelling place for the child.

Apropos of the Christmas season, the kindergarten and primary instructors of Barnard and The Teachers' College, New York, have systematically planned and carried out an exhibition of sensible Christmas gifts for children. Perhaps the most interesting part of it is the Model Play-Room, sunny and light, pretty and simple, with sanitary draperies and flowers and a harmonious color scheme. Some few carefully chosen and very beautiful pictures hang on the walls, for that the child should discover beauty and not be told of it is an old kindergarten axiom. A toy pantry is full of good substantial playthings. There is a table of the right height with drawers and pockets for workbaskets and materials, where little girls may conveniently cut out their dollies' clothes. A box full of first-class tools, a huge box of smooth, plain, pine blocks and a good substantial work-table makes an ideal play place for boys. There are shelves with good editions of well-chosen books: There is also an open fireplace, with a large chair in the corner which was called "the place for Mother," for, of course, in every playroom there should be a familiar nook for mother. The dolls are the natural kind, with faces like real children, and everything in the exhibition as far as it is possible is indestructible. The principal idea of this somewhat ambitious undertaking is that children generally have too many toys, especially mechanical toys, which stifle initiative and dull the inventive instinct. On the whole, the exhibition of sensible Christmas gifts for children is a plea for simpler gifts and fewer of them.

The President's Message

ON THE day before the opening of the "long session" of Congress, the President's message was sent in, dealing exclusively with the trust problem. For the first time in its history, Congress listened to a message wholly devoted to a single topic. It was, of course, a vigorous defense of the administration's policy in regard to the regulation and prosecution of the trusts under the Anti-Trust Law. Mr. Taft protests energetically against any plan for the repeal or material amendment of the Sherman Act, although he concedes the wisdom of supplementary legislation to give it more effective expression. He points to the decisions handed down by the Supreme Court in the Standard Oil and Tobacco cases as instances of the effective solution of trust problems under a reasonable application of the Anti-Trust Law. He warms up visibly in his defense of the Supreme Court, which has been accused of emasculating the Sherman Act by its decisions. After urging the need of a Federal incorporation law and a national corporation commission, he reminds Congress that the Anti-Trust Law has been on the statute books for more than twenty years; that its practical value was long doubted and it seemed impossible of enforcement; but "the mills of the courts ground and gradually the majesty of the law asserted itself." Now that its efficacy is apparent and its object near achievement, he considers it unwise to call for its repeal on the plea that it interferes with business prosperity, and to abandon the work of twenty years to try some other experiment.

There is much in the message that is reminiscent of the President's speeches during his recent tour on wheels, but though not new, it is practical and serves the purpose of putting the matter squarely before Congress. As almost every member in both houses has thought out some more or less infallible remedy of his own for trust evils, we may look forward to a Niagara of oratory on the subject in the near future.

Dr. Clark's First Letter

ON ANOTHER page of this issue appears the first illustrated letter of travel from the pen of Rev. Francis E. Clark, D.D., founder of the Society of Christian Endeavor. Dr. Clark, who is now in the Orient, is writing this series of contributions especially for the readers of this journal. The first deals with "Religious Life in the Lands of the Czar," and shows what spiritual advance is being made in that country of two hundred different religious sects. Protestantism does not stand alone in its denominational divisions, for the Russo-Greek Church—the national church of that country—has quite as many as our own. Dr. Clark's first letter will be found exceedingly interesting and should be read everywhere.

Contents of this Number

Wednesday, December 20, 1911

	PAGE
Our Mail-Bag	1286
Precious Babe of Bethlehem. Music	1286
Religion in the Lands of the Czar (Illustrated). By Rev. Francis E. Clark, D.D., LL.D.	1287, 1296
The Christmas Splendor. Sermon. By Rev. Frederick F. Shannon, D.D.	1288, 1289
Temporal and Spiritual Building. By P. J. Meath	1289
Belfast Stirred by a Revival (Illustrated)	1290
The Song of the Dawn (Illustrated)	1291, 1303, 1306
OUR EDITORIAL FORUM	1292
THE BIBLE AND NEWSPAPER (Illustrated)	1293
The Great Dynamite Conspiracy (Illustrated)	1294, 1296
Brander Cushing's Ambition (Illustrated). By Rev. C. M. Sheldon, D.D.	1295, 1299
Our Boys and Girls (Illustrated)	1297
The Spirit of Christmas Lore. By Margaret E. Sangster	1298
An Historic Note-Book (Portrait)	1300
Life Here and Hereafter	1301
Buying Real Estate	1302
Sunday School Lesson. By Dr. and Mrs. W. F. Crafts	1304, 1306
Young People's Societies	1307

THE BIBLE AND NEWSPAPER

Conducted by FERDINAND C. IGLEHART, D.D.

Hague's New Peace Palace

AMONG the great buildings of the world, the new Peace Palace at The Hague stands out conspicuously. The first Peace Conference of the world at The Hague marked one of the important epochs of history. A permanent bureau was established there under the control of the ministers of the nations, and for the first time in human history the whole world was in one room, and all Christians were bound together for a while in plans to banish the darkness and cruelty of war. The new Peace Palace is a magnificent and spacious structure, with ample accommodations for the business of future Peace Conferences. Its superb architecture, with noble halls, audience chambers and reception rooms, together with its picturesque situation among the trees, suggests a royal palace. The building cost twelve million five hundred thousand dollars, and was the princely gift of Mr. Andrew Carnegie. The picture here presented is the first published photograph of the new Peace Palace. It seems like a parody on peace progress for Italy and Turkey to be engaged in a fierce war, for China to be torn with bloody revolution, for the Russian bear to growl and threaten to devour Persia, for Germany and France to have been recently near a clash, and for Germany and England to hint at a resort to force. And yet there is a marvelously rapid movement toward a permanent world peace. The Peace Palace houses the idea and reflects it, and will make the declaration of war harder for any civilized nation, and will hasten the era, which the Prince of Peace promises, of peace on earth, good will toward men. The new Peace Palace will continue to preach eloquently to the nations of the earth from this text:

Peace be within thy walls, and prosperity within thy palaces. (Ps. 122:7.)

The First Photograph Received in the United States of the Peace Palace at The Hague

Long Walk on Crutches

Ralph Tompkins, a one-legged youth of nineteen years, left New York on July 30 to walk to Chicago and back for a prize of $500. He reached Chicago on October 2, and remaining there two days, started on his return trip. Despite the bad weather he had to encounter he was only twenty-four hours behind the time he planned for himself, and reached New York December 5. He earned money for his trip by singing, and whenever he could do so was the guest of the Young Men's Christian Association of the various places through which he passed. He never stopped more than a night at any one place, was never sick an hour and gained 30 pounds on the journey. He says he made as great speed with his crutches as he could have made with two feet. It was a feat of physical endurance, and of purpose. So many make the journey of life on crutches, with physical and mental infirmities. A distinguished lawyer of Indiana who died the other day went to the front of his profession and to a life of singular Christian usefulness with a crippled leg and a crippled arm which he had carried from his youth. Business men on the streets of every city, men of every profession and calling everywhere, achieve enduring success under the greatest physical disabilities. Many of the men on two crutches are setting a rapid pace in the race of life. Many of the best traits of character are produced by the handicaps of life. It is the will, the all-daring purpose, the lofty moral ideals, and the spirit within that overcomes handicaps and gives success.

Then shall the lame man leap as an hart, and the tongue of the dumb sing. (Isa. 35:6.)

Diphtheria from an Apple

Wallingford, Conn., has been scourged with an epidemic of diphtheria, which was traced to a Hallowe'en party where fifty children bit into an apple suspended by a string. It is said that a large number of those who bit the apple contracted the disease, which spread rapidly to others. Moral contagion is easily contracted by children, and is as dangerous to the soul as diphtheria is to the body. It is a glorious fact, however, that health also is contagious in the spiritual realm, and that sweet and pure home life, and an invigorating moral environment in the school and church, are the health that is catching with children and older people. Cities and communities stricken with disease might justly pray for the promise of God in the words of the prophet:

Behold, I will bring it health and cure, and I will cure them. (Jer. 33:6.)

Costly Smoke Nuisance

Mr. Matthew Nelson, Chief Smoke Inspector of Cincinnati, has sent a pamphlet to Mayor Schwab of that city, calling his attention to the enormous waste and loss caused by smoke. "Smoke itself represents an appalling waste of money which can hardly be correctly estimated when we consider the smoke which comes from locomotives, steamboats, factories, dwellings and other sources, not to mention the incalculable waste of heat units which can be seen in waves coming from the tops of many stacks. These belong beneath the boiler, but from some cause or other they escape up the stack and the loss to the manufacturer is simply enormous. The annual loss to cities of the first class and population caused by the smoke fiend are calculated to the almost incredible sum of $550,000,000!" Whether the cash loss of the smoke nuisance is as great as Mr. Nelson claims or not, it is certainly very great. Our inventive age has been successful in utilizing the waste fires of nature, and there are devices for using the gases and smoke that otherwise would be lost. But as yet it is estimated that little more than twenty per cent. of the heat of fuel is utilized. The uilization of smoke is a practical problem that must be better solved. The wastes in the natural world are nothing to those in the spiritual world, where so many hours, energies and lives are thrown away, with loss to the possessor and to others. They have their counterpart in the young man who Wasted his substance with riotous living. (Luke 15:13.)

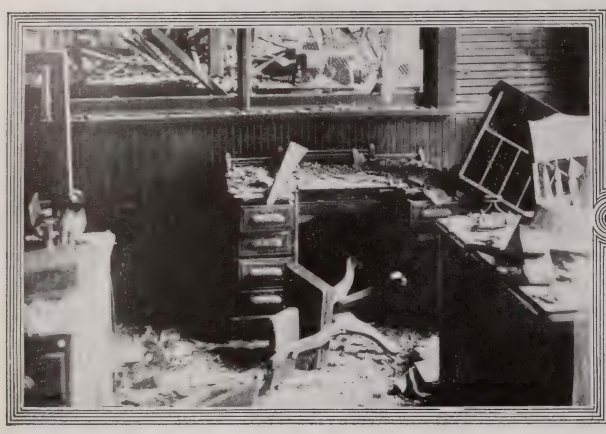
Carnegie's Seventy-sixth Birthday

Andrew Carnegie celebrated his seventy-sixth birthday on November 25. Early in the day he looked at his birthday presents and read his notes of congratulation. He received visitors in his library and talked to reporters on subjects ranging from American industrial conditions and his religious beliefs to the amount of salary that would allow a young man in New York to marry. The ironmaster wore a sprig of scented verbena in the lapel of his coat. He went in his motor car to make a call on his warm friend, John Bigelow, who was ninety-four on the same day. John said to Andrew, "How are you, young man? Come and sit down here close beside me." They had a delightful visit together, with the keenness of mental vision and warmth of love which belong to youth. Among some of his words of advice to those wishing to succeed were: "Live within your income. Do more than your duty. It's the horse that finishes a neck ahead that wins the race. Don't drink, nor even enter a drinking saloon. Marry early. I did not marry early, because I had to support my mother. Use your head. On your way to a home in heaven, have a heaven in your home." Birthday celebrations were customary in olden times. That of Pharaoh was not quite so delightful and peaceful as that of the ironmaster.

And it came to pass the third day, which was Pharaoh's birthday, that he made a feast unto all his servants. (Gen. 40:20.)



Trouble in Persia

Mr. W. Morgan Shuster, the able American citizen who served the Persian Government so successfully as a financier, did not please Russia or some other nations so well. In fact Russia, under the pretense of the unfriendliness of Mr. Shuster to Russian interests, demanded his removal, while Persia refused, and this is resulting in a march in force against Persia. A special news dispatch from Constantinople says that Turkey, in response to Russia's action in Persia, is preparing to send the Sixth Army Corps toward the Persian frontier. Turkey, the dispatch adds, has been long endeavoring to establish a hold on Northwestern Persia in the vicinity of the lake and town of Urumiah, in the province of Azerbaijan. She desires to share in the partition of Persia, which is believed to be inevitable, as Russia regards the empire as a strategic menace. It is thought in Constantinople that Russia's vigorous following up of the Shuster incident has been perhaps influenced by the difficulties caused to Turkey through the Turco-Italian War. The question of the position of Mr. Shuster in Persia came up in the British House of Commons. Mr. Philip E. Morrell sought to extract a ministerial statement on the Persian crisis. He described the Russian treatment of Mr. Shuster as scandalous and disgraceful. Mr. Acland, in behalf of the government, promised that Sir Edward Grey would make a statement next week. He added that the British Government had represented to Russia that Persia would be unable to pay an indemnity without raising a loan, and that the burden would make it harder for Persia to maintain order on the southern trade routes—a thing very necessary in the interests of British trade. The National Council of Persia has telegraphed an appeal for aid to the American Congress and to the sister parliaments of the world. Efforts on the part of friends of Mr. Shuster to have the State Department of the United States go on record as indorsing his official work have met with a definite check at the State Department. For several reasons explained to-day the State Department feels it must keep "hands off" so far as the official aspect of the case is concerned and confine itself to protecting Mr. Shuster in his rights as a private American citizen. Russia wants a piece of Persia, and the incidents that occur or are manufactured are the excuses given for the "benevolent assimilation" of spheres of power. The Persian Government has warned Russia that if her troops come beyond Kasbin it will take the offensive. In these times of greed for national power, these words of the law should not be forgotten:

Thou shalt not defraud thy neighbor, neither rob him. (Lev. 19:13.)

The Great Dynamite Conspiracy

How the McNamaras, after a Career of Crime, were Convicted and Sentenced—A Startling Eleventh-Hour Confession—Federal Government Taking Action to Convict "Men Higher Up"—Great Disclosures Impending—Labor Leaders in a Panic

Scene in the Llewellyn Iron Works Offices After the Explosion

Los Angeles Times Building After the Explosion in Which 21 Persons Were Killed

NOTHING that has occurred within our borders in many years has caused such widespread interest and excited such general indignation as the disclosures in connection with the McNamara trial at Los Angeles, Calif. With the history of that trial every newspaper reader is already familiar. An extraordinary series of dynamite outrages, beginning six years ago, had reached a tragic climax in the blowing up of the Los Angeles Times building, causing the death of twenty-one persons. Coming on the heels of so many other outrages, it aroused not only the people of the Pacific Coast but the whole nation to a determined effort to search out and punish the perpetrators.

Copyright, Underwood & Underwood

Samuel Gompers

Who declared the McNamaras innocent

The owner of the Times, General Harrison Grey Otis, had been an energetic advocate of the "open shop" and had incurred the hostility of the labor unions in consequence. Immediately after the Times explosion, the charge was made that labor was responsible for the dynamiting — that it was done in revenge for General Otis' attitude toward the unions. This the union officers denied at the time, and they even pronounced the destruction of the building and plant a "plot" by capital to discredit labor. But such a preposterous interpretation could not be accepted by the public of Los Angeles or the State.

Clarence Darrow

Who got $50,000 retainer for the defense

The city of Los Angeles promptly employed Detective William J. Burns to hunt down the criminals. Rewards aggregating $325,000 were offered for their arrest and conviction. Many other detectives took up the work, only to drop it after a time, completely baffled. Burns, however, persisted, and after many failures succeeded in getting a substantial clue. Meanwhile, the Los Angeles grand jury returned indictments against the "Doe" family, and a local committee of investigation, after a thorough and painstaking inquiry, decided that the Times had been dynamited and that the deed was the result of a conspiracy. At the same time, a committee of the Federation of Labor, appointed to make a similar investigation, reported that the explosion had been caused by gas. This report was severely denounced by the Los Angeles grand jury in its presentment of the indictments.

Ortie McManigal

Who made the first confession

It was not until April 20 of this year that Detective Burns had the satisfaction of arresting James Barnabas McNamara (the younger brother) and Ortie E. McManigal, of the Structural Iron Workers' Union, in a Detroit hotel. Several days afterward, on a clue furnished by McManigal, the detective and his men abruptly intruded upon a meeting of the Iron Workers' Union in Indianapolis, and arrested the elder McNamara, John Joseph, on the double charge of complicity in the Llewellyn Iron Works explosion in Los Angeles, and also of being an accomplice in the destruction of the Times building. Having extradition papers, he took his prisoner quickly through to California. Next he succeeded in locating the dynamite-supply stations used by the three prisoners, and so, step by step, and in the face of many perils, the plodding detective got his chain of evidence woven link by link, until it was practically complete.

Then, when least expected by the public—which was watching every development with deepening interest—came the confession of McManigal, which lifted the lid and revealed the ghastly secrets of the most startling story of crime ever known in this country. He involved two others besides the McNamaras and himself, viz., M. A. Schmidt, a Chicago labor union official, and Dave Kaplan. He told of over twelve explosions they had perpetrated in 1910. The Times explosion he laid to the door of J. B. McNamara, Schmidt and a man named Palin. J. J. McNamara, however, he declared, was the brains of the conspirators. Some days later he made a supplementary confession, telling how he, with J. B. McNamara, had helped to wreck, wholly or partially, sixty-nine structures, building or just completed by the National Erectors' Association. J. J. McNamara was captain and paymaster in these diabolical crimes, the recital of which seemed to trouble the confessing prisoner but little. The elder McNamara, McManigal said, was a lawyer and knew the value of evidence. The two brothers instructed him in the use of clockwork bombs in such a manner as to defy detection and assure an alibi. To his mind, their plans seemed infallible. He usually got $200 in advance of a "job" and from $1,000 to $5,000 after he had "pulled it off." It was J. B. McNamara who placed the "dynamite suit case" with sixteen sticks of giant explosive in a "blind alley" of the Times building and who broke off a gas jet to give color to the story of a gas explosion.

Burns, after the McManigal confession, worked harder than ever to complete his case against the McNamaras. To defend the latter, Clarence Darrow, the lawyer who conducted the defense in the Moyer-Haywood case, was retained by the union forces, which raised a "defense fund" of $190,000. Job Harriman, a labor union attorney, and ex-Judge Hilton of Denver, attorney for the Western Federation of Miners, were engaged to assist Darrow. Union leaders almost to a man stood by the accused and declared them innocent, notwithstanding McManigal's confession.

Then followed the long trial before the Los Angeles court, the details of which need not be repeated here. It was only when the meshes of the law were fast closing about the McNamaras, and when conviction was admittedly inevitable, that the younger brother—"the weakling" of the pair—pleaded guilty and made a confession which cleared up absolutely the tragedy of the Times explosion which caused the death of twenty-one human beings. His confession, which was followed shortly afterward by that of J. J. McNamara, forever set at rest the claims of the labor union leaders that the tragedy was the result of a gas explosion and not of dynamite, exploded to wreck and kill. An effort has been made to give the impression that the confession was procured through a promise of leniency, but this is positively denied by the counsel who tried the case before Judge Bordwell, and especially by District Attorney John D. Fredericks, the prosecutor. Attorney Darrow of the defense declared that he had advised confession as the best course under the circumstances. "There was no other reason or motive. The case presented a stone wall."

William J. Burns

Who unearthed the great conspiracy

J. B. McNamara's confession was as follows:

"I, James B. McNamara, defendant in the case of the People, having heretofore pleaded guilty to the crime of murder, desire to make this statement, and this is the truth:

"On the night of September 30, 1910, at 5:45 P.M., I placed in Ink Alley, a portion of the Times Building, a suit-case containing sixteen sticks of 80 per cent. dynamite, set to explode at one o'clock the next morning. It was my intention to injure the building and scare the owners. I did not intend to take the life of any one.

"I sincerely regret that these unfortunate men lost their lives. If the giving of my life would bring them back I would gladly give it. In fact, in pleading guilty to murder in the first degree I have placed my life in the hands of the State.

"JAMES B. MCNAMARA."

J. J. McNamara

The "brains" of the dynamite plotters

His brother, J. J. McNamara, pleaded guilty of causing the Llewellyn Iron Works

Continued on page 1296

J. B. McNamara

Who confessed the "Times" explosion

Brander Cushing's Ambition

A New Serial Story Written for The Christian Herald

By Charles M. Sheldon.

Author of "In His Steps"

Synopsis of Preceding Chapters

The story opens with a vivid description of the brilliant scene at the launching of the new American battleship Republic, 26,000 tons displacement, at the great navy yard at Dockville. The Secretary of War is present with many other high officials, members of Congress, army and navy officers. The great steel monster of destruction, the most perfect triumph of modern shipbuilding, is the work of Brander Cushing, the famous builder and naval contractor, who is present, with his son Sidney, on the launching platform. The signal is given, the music strikes up and the huge vessel is "christened" in the usual manner by Miss Pax Marston, the beautiful daughter of Rear-Admiral Marston. A tiny bow of ribbons, which was released by the impact of the stroke at the moment the conventional bottle broke on the vessel's bow, flutters past the high launching platform. Several snatch at it, but only one, Sidney Cushing, succeeds in grasping the little bunch of color, though he does so at the risk of losing his balance and dropping a sheer seventy-five feet to the river below. A dozen spectators, seeing his peril, spring to his assistance, but he recovers his poise, although his hat, caught by the wind, is wafted away.

After this adventure, he is introduced to Miss Pax, the Admiral's daughter, who has been an interested witness of his exploit. She questions him about his rescue of a young sailor on the cruiser Del Monte a year before, and although young Cushing modestly evades a direct answer, she is satisfied that the heroic act was his. Miss Marston invites him to call upon them in Washington. Leaving the launching platform, he is proceeding up town to buy a hat to replace his lost one, when a sudden explosion occurs near at hand in the big naval supplies factory of which his father is the principal owner. The whole building seems to burst into flame. Cushing, seeing numbers of women leaping from the windows, at the risk of his life succeeds in saving a number of workers. He is horror-stricken at the terrible tragedy he has witnessed and stunned by the reflection that his own father is responsible for the lack of fire-escapes, which he had been notified by the fire marshal two months before to provide, but had neglected. He goes back, half-dazed, to his father's office. The son tells his father plainly that he remembers the marshal's notification. "Somebody is guilty of the death of those girls," he says. "Who is it?" The next day the papers announce that criminal proceedings are to be instituted against the parties responsible for the disaster, Brander Cushing being mentioned by name. The builder is besieged by reporters, to whom he denies point-blank having received any notice from the marshal. He knows that the prosecution will be in the hands of District Attorney Fleming, his political enemy. Sidney is sent to Washington, to be out of the way while his father faces the coming trouble. Brander Cushing finds the men in his yard antagonistic to himself, regarding him as responsible for the loss of so many lives. Attorney Fleming visits him and an exciting scene follows. Fleming dares Cushing to open his safe and prove that he has not got the notification papers locked up. Cushing orders him out of the office, and he withdraws, after threatening to subpœna Sidney as a witness. In Washington, Sidney renews acquaintance with the Marstons and becomes a strong favorite with the Admiral, his pretty daughter, and his nephew. With the latter he visits the new armor-testing grounds. Brander Cushing is visited by Athanasia Ward, one of the girls saved by Sidney from the factory fire. She tells him how the door of the factory was locked, preventing escape and causing many deaths. Cushing is horrified at this revelation, which the girl makes in warning him of danger of violence from the employees of the shipyard. Hermosa Howard enters and confirms the rumors of trouble. As the funerals are to take place next day he orders the yard closed and puts extra watchmen on duty. Next morning he goes alone to the scene of the burials, hears the service and returns unseen to the shipyard. On entering the great draughting-room he sets to work on the drawings on the floor. While so engaged he is assaulted by a man who has secreted himself in the building. A struggle ensues in which the assailant is rendered unconscious. He recovers slowly, while Brander Cushing brushes himself and straightens his clothing. As his assailant revives Cushing orders him off the drawing which he has damaged.

CHAPTER VII—Continued

THE man looked dazed and then sullen. Cushing leaned over and took him by the shoulder and jerked him up on his feet. The man's eyes gleamed viciously, but his physical vitality seemed exhausted. He looked at Cushing furtively.

"What were you doing up here?"

"Nothing."

"You lie."

"I wasn't doing anything."

"What's your name?"

"Andrew Brodig."

"Why did you attack me?"

The man was silent.

"Talk up, man. I'm going to have the police here in a few minutes."

"You're an enemy," said the man sullenly.

"An enemy?"

"Of mankind."

"How's that?"

"You're a capitalist."

"And you?"

"I am one of the people."

The man folded his arms and assumed a theatrical pose.

"One of the people! Heaven have mercy on the people then."

The man was silent, eyeing Cushing with that furtive glance that suggested both fear and cruelty. At the same time, Cushing felt somehow that if the man had been an animal his ears would be pricked up as if to listen to something. He had that expectant alertness.

"How long have you been in the loft?"

"Since yesterday."

"Why?"

"A man must sleep somewhere. Would you have me sleep in the street?"

"Why did you attack me? Have I ever harmed you?"

"You are an enemy."

"Bah!"

"Of the people," said the man.

Cushing looked at him more closely. He was an object to excite compassion. Starvation looked out of his haunted eyes. Ignorance, bigotry, poverty, all the vices and misfortunes struggled for a foothold in his miserable body.

"He's not worth arresting. The creature's half-witted. One of those half-sane anarchists that lately jam the water front. What charge have I against him? I don't want to go to the bother with all that I have on hand to—"

Aloud he said:

"Andrew Brodig, if that is your real name, I am tired of your company. You interrupted my work when you butted in here, and I have some of it to do over again. There is the door. I will see you through it."

The man looked dazed.

"You will not hand me over to the police?"

"What for?"

"For attacking you."

"Did you attack me? I had forgotten it." Brander Cushing spoke with scorn.

He started to whistle down the tube for Fogerty or one of his deputies to come up, but paused.

"Wait a minute. Are you employed by any one in the yard to come in here?"

The man looked absolutely blank.

"Because if you are you can go to them and give them Brander Cushing's compliments. Tell them to send on all their assassins at once, so I can get the job off my hands. I'm too busy to fool with one at a time."

"'Oh, they have fired the shipyard!' cried Hermosa"

The man stared dully. Cushing blew down the tube and asked Fogerty to come up.

The man looked as if he were about to faint. Cushing pushed a stool under him and he sank down on it in a huddled heap.

"You look bad, man. How long since you had a bite?"

"I don't know."

"Here, take this." Cushing pulled out a silver dollar. The man took it, and looked at it stupidly.

The watchman came in.

"Here is a man you can escort to the gates, Fogerty. Put him on the outside where he belongs, and see that he stays there."

Fogerty grabbed him not too gently by the arm and moved with him towards the door. Cushing sat looking quizzically.

Suddenly past his head the silver dollar came flying. It just missed him and went spinning down over the smooth floor. Cushing eyed it scornfully.

"That's what comes of yielding to sentiment." He called after the watchman, "Ask an officer to keep this fellow away from the yard." He had a feeling of resentment that even when he had yielded to a finer feeling it met with no response. He felt the contempt one cannot escape entertaining towards ingratitude.

He purposely stayed at the works until after dark, telephoning Angus not to serve dinner until eight o'clock. With a perfect absence of nervousness he went over the obliterated and confused chalk lines, until they were again as perfect as when he came up to the room. And then he walked down to the gate, giving the watchman as he went out rather careful instructions about keeping a good lookout.

He had been seated at his dinner several minutes when a servant brought a piece of paper which he said had been put under the door after some unknown and unseen person had rung the bell.

Cushing opened it and read in printed letters:

"MR. CUSHING: Don't go near the draughting-room to-night."

"Really? This is getting too melodramatic." But he thought it worth while to call up Fogerty a little later and ask him to make a careful round of the entire yard and keep an eye out for anything unusual.

The night was very clear and still. A sharp touch of frost. He looked out of his library windows on the street. By the light of the street lamps everything looked as usual. He sat down to read, avoiding the evening paper which Angus always put in the same place on the reading table. He did not wish to go over all the details he knew would be there describing the horrors of the day. Not even his nerves were quite equal to it.

He was reading Gaboriau's Madame Lerouge and comparing it as he went on with Conan Doyle's later work, when the front door opened. He looked at the clock on the table. It said fifteen minutes after eleven.

A step he knew came along the hallway, through the sitting-room, and into the doorway of the library. He stood up. It was Sidney.

"What! You have come back? Why? What is the matter?"

"Father, I could not stay after hearing—after hearing that you—that you—"

"Well?"

"Is it true that you have denied the service of the papers by the fire marshal's deputy?"

"It is—true."

"And you expect—"

"Wait. Do you know what I face? Sidney, do you realize that I have got to make the fight of my life to keep out of State prison, and be branded as a murderer? Am I not justified in one falsehood to save a whole lifetime of honor?"

"Will Fleming bring the case into court?"

"You may be sure he will and that he will leave no stone unturned to convict me either of criminal negligence or of manslaughter."

"Will I be summoned as a witness?"

"You will, of course. Sidney, you will not bear testimony against your father? Tell me, boy, you will not see me go to prison in eternal disgrace? What, boy?"

Sidney Cushing walked over to the window and looked out on the street. Then he turned and looked at his father. Brander Cushing will never explosion. He was sentenced to fifteen years' imprisonment and J. B. McNamara to imprisonment for life.

Continued on page 1299

THE GREAT DYNAMITE CONSPIRACY

Continued from page 1294

At the moment these confessions were made in court, the two McNamaras were apparently the most unconcerned persons present. They smiled at each other and chewed gum, while admitting their guilt. There had not been a single loophole of escape left, and now that they had taken the only step possible, by advice of counsel, they acted as though they were indifferent to whatever might happen. But the effect of their confession fell like a thunderclap upon those union leaders who had been proclaiming the innocence of the accused. Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor, had been one of the most ardent defenders of the McNamaras and his organization had contributed largely to the defense fund. Now, however, he denounced them as "impostors and fanatics of the worst type." Various unions throughout the country met and adopted resolutions repudiating and denouncing the men whom but a short time before they had eagerly proclaimed as innocent victims of capitalistic persecution. Never was there a more complete reversal of former opinions. And when further startling disclosures were made showing that the prosecution had got hold of some 1,500 letters, written to J. J. McNamara during the last six years and all having a direct bearing on what seemed clearly a preconcerted movement for the destruction of non-union buildings, plants, bridges, etc., the shock to the labor leaders was intensified. Something very like panic struck in when it was announced that the whole matter would be taken up as a subject for investigation by the United States Government and the California authorities, and that enough evidence was in hand to justify the belief that a conspiracy of gigantic extent and far-reaching importance would soon be uncovered and a number of men in different States —some of them high in the ranks of unionism— would probably be implicated. That men hitherto unsuspected had knowledge of the nature and extent of the operations of the McNamara band of dynamiters will probably be the next development. United States Attorney-General Wickersham has already started the probe and arrests may soon be expected. It is regarded as incomprehensible that those labor leaders who were in constant communication with the McNamaras, who informed them where non-union buildings, plants and bridges were going up, and who are believed to have "financed" them on their dynamiting trips all over the country, could have been unaware of the real mission of these men and the incendiary and murderous nature of their operations. A flood of light will be thrown upon this phase of the question. It will be a severe experience for those who may have sanctioned, even in a remote sense, the programme of destruction which the McNamaras and their associates vauntingly proclaimed to be "the only way to teach capital a lesson."

All the evidence in the McNamara case goes to prove the existence of a secret organization, formed for the purpose of destroying bridges, buildings and other steel structures erected or in process of erection by non-union labor in different parts of the country. In 1905, the International Association of Bridge and Structural Iron Workers declared a general strike against the American Bridge Company. In that year, there were four dynamite outrages that startled the country. In 1906, there were twelve cases of property wrecked by dynamite; in 1907, six cases; in 1908, twenty-nine cases; in 1909, twenty-two cases. Last year (1910), there were twenty-nine dynamite outrages, including the following:

The new building of the American Steel Foundries Company at Indiana Harbor, Ind., March 27; Pan-American Bridge Company's plant wrecked at Newcastle, Ind., April 6; Utah Hotel, Salt Lake City, while under construction, April 19; car powerhouse, Mount Vernon, Ill., April 19; C. & E. I. bridge across Wabash River, Clinton, Ind., April 19; storage yard, Interborough Rapid Transit Company, New York, May 24; bridge building material, Cleveland, O., June 2; Davenport Locomotive Works and machine shops, Davenport, Ia., June 4; Peoria and Pekin Railway Company's bridge, Peoria, Ill., June 4; Lehigh Valley Railroad viaduct, Greenville, N. J., July 9; West Side Belt Railroad viaduct, Pittsburg, Pa., July 15; street railway power plant, Omaha, Neb., July 21; unloading-rig of Philadelphia and Reading Coal and Iron Company, Superior, Wis., August 1; yards of McClintock-Marshall Construction Company, Kansas City, Mo., August 23; plant of Lucas Bridge and Iron Company and adjoining buildings, Peoria, Ill., September 4; two car-loads of steel girders for bridge at East Peoria, Ill., September 4; Philadelphia and Reading Railroad bridge, Nicetown, Pa., September 27; Los Angeles Times building and two dwellings (twenty-one persons killed), October 1; derrick car at railroad bridge, Worcester, Mass., also street bridge same place, October 10; derrick at West Philadelphia National Bank, November 28; Llewellyn Iron Works, Los Angeles, December 25; Van Stan's Furance Works, Kansas City, Mo., December 30.

In the present year, there have been eleven similar outrages, viz.:

Susquehanna Coal Company's car dump, Erie, Pa., January 29; Iroquois Iron Company's new plant at Chicago, twice on February 24; viaduct of McKinley Traction system at Springfield, Ill., twice on March 8; unloading bridge of Milwaukee Western Fuel Company, Milwaukee, March 16; Hotel addition, French Lick Springs, Ind., March 30; County Court House, Omaha, Neb., March 24; plant of Caldwell & Drake Iron Works, Columbus, Ind., March 24; Picklands & Mather's ore conveyers, North Randall, O., March 25; viaduct of Grand Trunk Railway, South Bend, Ind., April 2; clock tower of Municipal Building, Springfield, Mass., April 4; Westchester & Boston Railroad viaduct, Mount Vernon, N. Y., September 3.

The New Chinese Minister and His Family

ALFRED SZE, the newly appointed minister from the old imperial government of China, has recently taken up his residence at Washington. Mr. Sze is the youngest envoy that China has ever sent to the United States. He is not a stranger to American ways, however, as he was educated in Washington, is an all-round athlete and an enthusiastic devotee of base ball.

RELIGION IN THE LANDS OF THE CZAR

Continued from page 1287

flowers, and lamps that are never allowed to go out or grow dim, adorn the tombs of the best-loved Czars.

If I should give the impression that all the religious life of Russia is centred in such churches, it would be far from correct. Besides the Orthodox Russian Church there are millions of Jews and millions of evangelical Christians. Most of the sturdy people of the Duchy of Finland are evangelical Lutherans. In the Baltic Provinces, in Poland and in St. Petersburg are many German Lutherans. In Russian Poland and other sections are some millions of Roman Catholics, while the Stundists, the Dukhobortsi, and other dissenting sects are found in many parts of the vast empire.

But my readers will be especially interested in some forms of Protestant evangelical work that flourish in the large cities. St. Petersburg is the centre of this work. Here the Lutheran churches are strong, and here flourish various enterprises manned by Americans. The Maiyak, or "Lighthouse," is a sort of Y. M. C. A., under the auspices of the Greek Church itself. The chief secretaries are two Americans, Mr. Gaylord and Mr. Moreller. Here are evening classes of many kinds for Russian young men, a fine gymnasium, baths, libraries, reading and game rooms, while the public religious instruction is largely given by eminent Greek priests. The commodious building was donated by Mr. James Stokes of New York, and the work is wholly supported by Russians, the Czar himself contributing 5,000 roubles, or $2,500, annually.

An important and fruitful work for students has recently been started under the care of Count Nicolay, a Lutheran noble, noted throughout Russia for his evangelical zeal and his noble service for Christ. This society is also manned by young Americans, Mr. Day of California and Mr. Anderson of New York. Here gather hundreds of students of both sexes to read the Bible, to sing Gospel hymns, and to discuss religious questions. I have never addressed a more intelligent or earnest body of Christian students than those I met on two occasions during a recent visit. When it is remembered that there are forty thousand students in St. Petersburg in the University and higher technical schools, and thirty thousand more in Moscow, the importance of this work cannot be overestimated.

Baroness Nicolay, the sister of the Baron, has established a Y. W. C. A. for German young women of St. Petersburg, where young ladies can have bed and board for the small sum of sixty kopeks or thirty cents a day, a remarkably small sum when it is remembered that St. Petersburg is one of the most expensive cities in the world, the average of prices, I should judge, being higher than in New York. Here is a delightfully warm, religious atmosphere, fostered by the devout spirit of Baroness Nicolay, Countess Pahlen, and other German Protestants. The Germans also have a "Juenglingsverein," much like our Y. M. C. A.

The Methodists have begun a good work in St. Petersburg and other parts of Russia, under the energetic head of Dr. Simons of America, and the Baptists claim one hundred thousand adherents. I must not forget to mention the British-American Church of St. Petersburg, an oasis indeed for travel-tired and heart-hungry Americans. For seventy years this church has been sustained with abundant success. Started originally by Mr. Ropes, an American merchant in the Russian trade, his descendants ever have been and still are among its chief supporters, though most of the congregation are Scotch or English. Here, for thirteen years, a vigorous Christian Endeavor Society has held its weekly services, concerning which said Baron Nicolay to me: "When I drop into the meetings, it seems like a little piece of heaven on earth."

In all, through Russia, there are some sixty Christian Endeavor Societies, fifteen in the Lutheran churches of Russian Poland, some in Riga and other parts of the Baltic provinces, and in St. Petersburg, while the majority are in Finland the brave, with one or two even in far-off Siberia. There are no more useful societies or more devoted Endeavorers in the world than these.

I have just visited Russia for the third time, and have seen all the religious organizations I have described, and others as well. Once more I have been impressed with the deep devotion of the Russian character, its sense of the presence of God, though often felt in a blind and groping way. I believe that better days are to dawn for this great nation, and that it will have a large contribution to make in the future generations to the religious life of the world.

Cracow, Galicia, November 8, 1911.

The Church of St. Isaac, St. Petersburg

Happy Cozy Corner Days

BEFORE THE PALING OF THE STARS

By Christina G. Rossetti

BEFORE the paling of the stars,
Before the winter morn,
Before the earliest cockcrow,
Jesus Christ was born:
Born in a stable,
Cradled in a manger,
In the world His hands had made
Born a stranger.

Priest and king lay fast asleep
In Jerusalem,
Young and old lay fast asleep
In crowded Bethlehem:
Saint and angel, ox and ass,
Kept a watch together,
Before the Christmas daybreak,
In the winter weather.

Jesus on his Mother's breast,
In the stable cold,
Spotless Lamb of God was He,
Shepherd of the fold:
Let us kneel with Mary maid,
With Joseph bent and hoary,
With saint and angel, ox and ass,
To hail the King of Glory.

When the Christ Child Came to Bless the Tree

A LEGEND

WHEN mother was a little girl an old lady came to Grandmother's house one Christmas Eve and told this story to the children there. Mother used to say she thought it was a German legend, but I have never been able to find it anywhere but just in mother's memory.

It was Christmas Eve, and the tree was very bright with popcorn and cranberries, sugar almonds and nuts, fringed bonbons and cakes and candies and toys. There it stood in the little drawing-room, safely out of sight, and the folding doors were fastened between, so the children should not be seeing it before the proper moment.

But the big black pussy cat saw it, and the Maltese and the two gray kittens, because they had slipped in and out when the big folk did. Senator, the house dog, and the yellow canary that lived in the parlor, made no bones of staring at everything, and even the mice that were not too afraid had seen the Christmas tree. But the spiders who lived in the corners of the sunny attic and along the ledges of the cellar and lintels had not seen the Christmas tree, for just before it came there had been such a great cleaning and scrubbing, such dusting and poking into corners and ledges, as had frightened the little spiders out of their busy little wits.

Festooned With Christmas Tinsel

Dusted and Broomed Away

NOW, everybody knows that spiders are busy, inquisitive little creatures, liking to know all about everything concerning the house in which they live, and, because they had been poked and dusted and broomed away, they were very sad. So that night they went in a company to the Christ Child and told him all about it.

"Others have seen the Christmas tree, dear Christ Child," they said, "but we who are so domestic, so busy and interested, so loving of beautiful things, are brushed out and frightened. We are not allowed to see the beautiful tree at all."

Then the Christ Child took pity on them, and promised that they too should see the Christmas tree.

Then, never waiting for a moment, into the beautiful room they slipped, to look as long as ever they liked and feast their eyes on the pretty things. There were fat mother spiders, and gray father spiders, and little tweeny weeny house spiders. Round and round the tree they crawled, and examined and loved it so busily and so seriously that had any one been noticing, they must soon have thought that the spiders believed it was all their very own.

In the Still Dark Night

UP AND down and in and out, over every branch and twig, they threaded their way. Not one of the pretty things hanging there did they miss. No, they even climbed to the tips of the angels' wings at the topmost bough, then creeping, creeping away, they all went up the attic stairs and along the cellar walls and crevices. But oh, they were all so happy; they had seen the Christmas tree.

In the still, dark night, just before the dawn, the Christ Child came to bless the tree, for there never could be a real Christmas tree unblessed by the Christ Child, they say. But as he looked at it waiting there in the soft light of the night-lamp, lo, its lovely boughs were entirely covered with filmy webs hanging in fine festoons from every twig and toy. "Ah," said the Christ Child. "I am sorry for this, for though the spiders spin their nets in king's palaces, no Christmas tree should be covered with cobwebs on Christmas morning. The little spider folk should have waited."

Then, as the first sunbeams slanted in at the window, the Christ Child, vanishing, touched the soft veil of spider webs into fine threads of glittering gold and silver. The tree was lovelier then than ever; and some people think that this is the way it came about that Christmas trees are so often trimmed with threads of filmy tinsel.

"Dear Santa, will you bring me, please . . . "

"Santa Claus will get very dirty coming down the chimney. I'll just leave a bowl of water, a couple of towels and a cake of Ivory Soap in front of the fire-place—so he can wash up."

Our little friend has discovered what a great many older people have known for a great many years, and that is, that when one is "very dirty," the best way to "wash up" is with Ivory Soap.

Ivory Soap. . 99 44/100 Per Cent. Pure

Around the Christmas Hearth

A MERRY, Merry Christmas to you all, my dear boys and girls. I wish that, by some magic spell, we might gather together around a Christmas hearth in the Cozy Corner, and, telling many splendid old tales and legends of the most blessed day in all the year, spend Christmas Eve together. Would not that be a beautiful evening for us to remember always? Of course the story we would all love best would be the true one which begins with angels singing "Peace on earth, good will to men." Why, dear me! even as I write about it I feel the glow of the Christmas spirit through and through me, and I dearly love writing you this Christmas letter.

Have you ever heard of a Wonder Ball? In Germany grandmothers and aunties have a curious custom of presenting wonder balls at Christmas time to their favorite nieces and nephews. It is a huge ball of yarn or rag-strippings wound around some precious treasure, and during the winter the girls—and boys, too—are supposed to work up the yarn or rag-stripping into tippets and mittens, horse-reins, stockings, or narrow strips for carpets and rugs. You may be sure that during many long winter evenings most boys and girls who have been lucky enough to receive one are kept quiet and busy working down the wonder balls. Often a sum of money is hidden in the wonder ball for boys, but for girls it is different. There is more apt to be a ring, a brooch, a gold thimble, a necklace, or some bit of highly prized jewelry. Now will you think of this letter, please, in the light of a wonder ball with a treasure in the heart of it, and if day after day, through all your life, persistent good things come to you; if love, ambition, success and kindliness follow you everywhere and dwell always in the house with you, then within your wonder ball is hidden a treasure that will last, and among your Christmas gifties there is a little answered prayer.

Ever lovingly and faithfully your friend,

The Aunt in the Cozy Corner

The Spirit of Christmas Lore

By Margaret E. Sangster

The Coming of Santa Claus

WHEN Canta Claus comes to the Sunday School in the patriarchal beard and snowy wig that are the traditional outfit of a good fairy who lives near the North Pole and spends his time the year round in preparing gifts for children all over the world, there is not a voice uplifted against his masquerade. Everybody knows that Bob Morris or Jack Chilson is personating the Christmas spirit. Everybody is perfectly satisfied with his dramatic entrance, his jolly speech and his final hurried exit. There are, however, men and women, not very many of them, it is true, but still a few, who are literal and practical, and who make haste in home life to destroy the innocent belief of the children in the most charming and fairy-like fiction that ever bestowed its sacred benediction on household life. People who early clip the wings of imagination unwittingly do their children immense and almost irreparable injury. There are folk in the world who cannot in the least understand the exquisitely fanciful story of Peter and Wendy, who consider Alice in Wonderland an absurd farrago of nonsense, and are ready to put Grimm's Fairy Tales into the fire. One pities these unfortunate people because they have missed in themselves so much of the joy of life. One compassionates them as, with the immortal Mr. Gradgrind, they clamor for facts, facts, as if the material were higher than the spiritual, and as though dreams were not always coming true. Thrice blessed are those of us who in the cloudy day are sure of the sunshine up in the blue, who wait patiently on the shore watching for the little ships to come in, and go on dreaming happy dreams without a single fear that one day the dreams will not come true.

Let the children believe as long as they can in the coming of Santa Claus. There is no deception involved in this, since the good fairy is only the embodiment of a spirit of good will that is abroad on the earth, that slips across our thresholds and makes us happy on Christmas eve and Christmas morn. When the children are early tucked in bed, while father and mother sit up to pack the stockings full and arrange the surprises of the next morning, there may be no actual sounding of tiny hoofs on the roof, but the sleeping children, if they stir and laugh in the midst of their rosy rest, may dream of the reindeer and hear in their slumber the jingling of the silver bells across the snowy land.

We forget what Santa Claus ought to bring us, if we omit the destitute and forlorn from our Christmas cheer. There is somebody perhaps in an Old Ladies' Home, some one whose kith and kin have passed away and who is peculiarly lonesome when Christmas comes. It might be worth while to give her a thought, and send the children with a soft shawl, a new book, a pair of slumber shoes or a box of flowers to brighten her shadowed lot. If the children have read Little Women, as all children should, they may like to do occasionally what Jo and Beth and May and Amy did, and go without their breakfast that some one else may be fed. If it is not breakfast, a little girl who has several dollars may do without one of them and send it to a child who lives in a tenement room, a mountain cabin or any home of poverty. A boy will not enjoy the coming of Santa Claus less if he share his Christmas gifts with a lad not so fortunate as he.

Can we not mingle in our thought of Santa Claus the higher, sweeter thought of what it all means, this pause of the world in its activities, this general chorus of gladness and congratulation, all harking back to one night in Judea two thousand years ago, when a child, the Child of heaven, lay in the arms of a sweet young mother, while the angels sang and the shepherds knelt and the wise men brought their gifts from afar. The coming of Santa Claus and the mirth of Christmas are heaven's gifts to earth.

"God rest you, merry gentlemen,
Let nothing you dismay,
For Jesus Christ, our Saviour,
Was born upon this day;
To save us all from Satan's power,
When we were gone astray."

* * *

Hang Up the Baby's Stocking

I DO not know who wrote the beautiful verses that I am quoting on this page. Very likely one of my readers may be able to tell the author's name. The poem has so much of the real Christmas sentiment that it is worth a place in your scrap-book and a rose-leaf in your memory:

Hang up the baby's stocking;
Be sure you don't forget;
The dear little dimpled darling!
She ne'er saw Christmas yet;
But I've told her all about it,
And she opened her big blue eyes;
And I'm sure she understood it—
She looked so funny and wise.

Dear! what a tiny stocking!
It doesn't take much to hold
Such little pink toes as baby's
Away from the frost and cold;
But then for the baby's Christmas
It will never do at all!
Why, Santa wouldn't be looking
For anything half so small.

I know what will do for the baby.
I've thought of the very best plan:
I'll borrow a stocking of grandma,
The longest that ever I can;
And you'll hang it by mine, dear mother,
Right here in the corner, so,
And write a letter to Santa,
And fasten it on the toe.

Write, "This is the baby's stocking
That hangs in the corner here;
You never have seen her, Santa,
For she only came this year;
But she's just the blessedest baby!
And now before you go,
Just cram her stocking with goodies,
From the top clean down to the toe."

* * *

A Christmas House Party

A HOUSE party at Christmas affords the young people of the family a chance to be gay and cheery for a week-end or more. The charm of a house party is in the bringing together of congenial guests who spend several days with their hosts. When the girls and boys return from college or boarding school for the holidays they often bring with them as guests classmates whose homes are too remote to make it worth while for them to take a long and expensive journey for the recess. The girl who lives in Colorado or California, and the boy who hails from Montana or Oregon to attend an Eastern school of learning, may be forced to spend a homesick holiday if no comrade tenders an invitation to join a family group.

Outdoor sports, skating, coasting, tobogganing and sleigh-riding are the pastimes of the country, while the city offers sight-seeing, music and the other diversions. The long evenings at home, the little parties invited to meet the visitors, and the whole merry and swiftly passing time make a Christmas house-party one of the gala seasons of the year. The housekeeper finds that her provision for the table must be ample. Her pies and cakes disappear like magic, for young people are noted for good appetites. Tableaux, charades and conundrums are among the amusements appropriate to such a party. Story-telling around the fire with the lights turned down, if the tales are of ghosts and spooks, is sure to be a favorite feature of the festivity.

* * *

Mr. Inglis on the World in General

MR. INGLIS, one of the dyspeptic people who flaunt their low spirits as though they were a sign of peculiar piety, looked up from his morning newspaper with a portentous sigh.

"Dorothy," he said to his wife, solemnly and sternly, "how can you be so frivolous? You and the girls behave as if we were in Arcadia. The reality is, little as you apprehend it, that the twentieth century and its inhabitants are drifting with railway speed back to Sodom and Gomorrah. The world is growing worse every day. Here are stories of crime and corruption, of infamy and hypocrisy, of theft and murder fairly shouting at us in bold type on every page of this paper. It pains me to see how little you all care about the degeneracy of the age."

Mrs. Inglis smiled. She was familiar with her husband's diatribes. She knew he enjoyed his own eloquence, and she seldom took him too seriously.

His daughter Edith laughingly said, "Change your newspaper, Daddy, or else change your acceptance of these nightmare stories. The world isn't growing worse. Our professor says it is growing better, that we are not half so bad as they were in Nineveh and Babylon, in Rome and the rest of the ancient world."

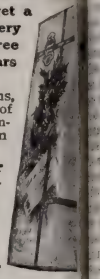
His son Eugene seconded Edith. "Why, father," he said, "think of the hospitals, the associations for Christian work, the churches, the home and foreign missions, and the millions of beautiful, quiet, tranquil homes in this great country of ours. Think of the peace and prosperity we have, of our freedom, and the advance we are making all along the line. You are a pessimist, I am afraid."

"Yes," said the wife again smiling, "your father is a pessimist, Eugene; but it is only on the surface. At least, I attribute it to his wasting so much nervous energy at the office and in business that he cannot digest his food. At heart, when he takes a vacation, he is as buoyant as yourself. Optimism quarrels with a devotion to hot bread and strong coffee, when a man has a tendency to be dyspeptic."

Mr. Inglis shook his head, but he did not sigh. Addressing his wife as "Mother," which was his favorite term for her, he conceded that the world in his home was a pretty satisfactory world, and as he donned his overcoat and picked up his hat to go off for the day, with Edith's kiss on his cheek and his boy's hurried step running down the stair to join him, he called back:

"Probably you are right. I'm not going downtown to show the white feather. I'll try to-day to believe that the world is growing better."

SAVE the Darning Hour!



Get six pairs of Holeproof Hose guaranteed to wear without hole for six months. You get a return coupon with every pair, and a new pair free for each pair that wears out, if any do.

Think what that means, men and women! Holeproof Hose, with all their advantages, cost no more than common kinds.

Women, lighten your household cares! Especially you with large families. Why waste your time darning hose when there are those that don't need it at all?

Men, help rid your wives of this work! Have hose without holes always ready when you want them.

Note the Christmas Box!

FAMOUS Holeproof Hosiery FOR MEN WOMEN AND CHILDREN

Reg. U.S. Pat. Off. Carl Freschl

The genuine only are soft and light. No common hose were ever made better. Give a box of six pairs to each of the family for Christmas. Insist on this signature on every pair— Carl Freschl. Pres. Unless it is there the hose are not "Holeproof."

Six pairs of plain or mercerized "Holeproof," guaranteed six months, cost $1.50 up to $3.00, according to finish and weight.

Silk hose for men cost $2.00 for three pairs, guaranteed three months. Three pairs of women's silk hose cost $3.00, guaranteed three months. The genuine are sold in your town. We'll tell you the dealers' names on request, or ship direct where there's no dealer near, charges prepaid on receipt of remittance. Write for free book, "How to Make Your Feet Happy."

HOLEPROOF HOSIERY CO.
934 Fourth St., Milwaukee, Wis.

Holeproof Hosiery Co. of Canada, Ltd., London, Can. Distributors for Canada

Tampico News Co., S. A., City of Mexico Agents for Mexican Republic

Are Your Hose Insured?

5% Three Splendid investment Features 5%

OUR patrons are assured of the safety of the capital, of liberal profit, and of the privilege of withdrawal of their money upon short notice, when they need it for other purposes. Our patrons are careful investors all over the world who recognize what an ideal investment this combination of advantage represents. For eighteen years we have paid 5%; this is paid for every day on deposit, and is compounded semi-annually, or remitted by check, as desired. In eighteen years our assets have increased from $9,000 to $2,500,000. Loans are made only on real estate mortgages, following the stringent regulations of the New York banking laws. Deposits received personally or by mail. Write for information.

INDUSTRIAL SAVINGS & LOAN CO. NEW YORK CITY

Industrial Savings & Loan Co.
2 Times Building,
Broadway and 42d St., New York

This Jacket Keeps You Warm In All Weather

Closely woven, won't easily snag. Just the garment for automobilists and for men who work out-of-doors in cold weather. Comfortable, durable

PARKER'S Arctic Jackets

Registered in U.S. Patent Office

Made of a closely woven, knitted fabric lined with thick gray wool fleece. Snap fasteners. Riveted pockets. Ask your dealer or send postpaid on receipt of $2.50

JOHN H. PARKER CO. Dept. 25 James Street, Malden, Mass.

CLASS PINS

Attractive New Catalogue of elegant up-to-date designs, Class and Fraternity Pins, Emblems, Enameled and Jeweled, Class Rings Trophies and Medals mailed free on request. All pins mounted with our patent safety clasp. Work Guaranteed.

PETER PAUL & SON, Jewelers and Stationers
136 North Pearl Street Dept. A. Buffalo, N. Y.

COLLEGE SCHOOL FRATERNITY

Brander Cushing's Ambition

get that look, nor the words that lowed.

CHAPTER VIII

ATHER, do you mean that you want me to perjure myself to—"

Save me from State prison—yes."

Silence.

"You have taught me all my life to k upon a falsehood as a thing of honor. Is there no other way?"

"No other way, Sid, that I can see."

Silence.

"Then, God help me and you. Yes, ther, I'll stand by. I'll swear no pers were served."

"God bless you, Sid." Brander shing again wiped the sweat from face. "You will never be sorry."

"Do not speak of it again, father." Sidney came over by the table. In few minutes he had been in the om his face had aged terribly. His ther shrank back, and in his turn vealed to his son the marks of the ain he had been under.

"Poor old pater!" said Sidney, using affectionate gesture and phrase mmon with him. "We will stand or l together. We never anticipated ything of this sort, did we?"

"No. But it will come out all right. me strange events have occurred to- y."

"Tell me."

Brander Cushing rapidly went over e occurrences of the day, omitting walk out to the burial-place. He de light of the scene in the loft and t it down to the act of a weak- aded visionary. The paper Angus d given him at dinner was lying on e library table.

Sidney took it up and read it.

"Why should any one want to warn u to keep away from the draught- z-room?"

"Why should fool letters be written any one? Sid, didn't you know I t on an average a dozen letters a ek threatening or begging or warn- g? I have got so used to the crank ter-writer that I don't pay atten- m. You know what Dockville is, e dumping-ground of Europe for ieves, anarchists, and jolt-headed re- rmers."

"But this might be a genuine warn- g from some friendly enemy."

"Friendly enemy is good, Sid. No. ark! What is that?"

Father and son were silent. A dull ar of sound outside. They both nt to the windows. At the first arm, Angus and the other servants d fled to the rear of the house.

A mob was assembling out in the reet in front of the house. Black asses gathered from both ends. Un- r the light of the street lamps at the rners more men were gathering. hrough the window father and son uld hear the name called out in a arse howl,

"Cushing! Cushing!"

Sidney put out his hand and laid it his father's shoulder.

"I'll stand by, father."

Brander Cushing responded with an fectionate gesture.

"No need to telephone the police. here they are all right."

In among the mob charged a dozen ounted policemen. The noise swelled ow to a roar that beat through the ouse like a wave flung on a coast of ves.

In the uncertain light two figures ere seen fighting their way up the eps. Then the next instant a hower of stones and bricks poured rough the windows of the library.

As if with the same thought in ind, father and son rushed to the ont door and threw it open. Two gures were there on the top step. tones, bricks, missiles of all kinds ortled around them.

Brander Cushing dragged the two nto the house, then turned and ammed the door shut and bolted it.

Hermosa and Athanasia confronted em. Down Athanasia's cheek a rickle of blood was running.

"You girls again!"

Continued from page 1295

"Yes, Mr. Cushing. We tried to get here earlier, but—"

A great volley of stones crashed through the windows into all the front rooms. Blows were hammering on the door.

"I couldn't hurry with Athanasia, and she would come," said Hermosa simply. She spoke as calmly as if she were making a formal call, and as if there was nothing out of the common in the hurricane of sound and riot that now came distinct through the broken windows. Sidney looked at her earnestly.

"Athanasia is hurt," said Brander Cushing. He went into the dining-room and brought out a finger bowl with water and a napkin.

"It is only a little thing. I do not think they intended to hurt us. But they did not see or know—"

Athanasia spoke timidly, looking at Sidney while his father and Hermosa wiped the blood from her face. Sidney got over near the door, which was now splintered with the blows outside.

And all four of this strange group stood there without any plan or any anticipation of what was to follow. It had always been another "fool notion" (so his friends said) of Brander Cushing never to permit a firearm of any sort in the house, and he never carried any kind of weapon on his person. If a man could not defend himself with his fists, Brander Cushing maintained, he ought to suffer for it. For the first time in his life he almost wished he now had a gun or a maxim or something to stop these howling brutes so near. Yet—yet these were the men, some of them, whom he had seen that very day weeping great tears, shaken with heart-breaking sobs as they clasped their arms about wife or babe, and who, clinging thus, half-fainting, swaying together, stared down into that ghastly trench containing, somewhere in its appalling length, their dead. And now they were simply come to demand payment of some sort for that hour of anguish, from the man who they believed was, if not legally, at least morally, to blame for that commercial murder.

And the man, knowing even that moment that he was legally and fully to blame for not doing at least all he could to protect precious life, had no righteous indignation to summon to his aid at this moment as the storm of missiles crashed through his rooms, and his personal property was being destroyed by these howling vandals.

"Father!" Sidney called out; "tell the girls to get out of danger. Run, girls, back into the kitchen, up stairs! Run, run, Hermosa! Run, Athanasia!"

He spoke their names as naturally as one would in such a moment of common human peril. A beam of wood crashed through the door. A sledge-hammer followed. And Brander Cushing, yielding to a moment of panic, seized the two girls by the arms and drew them into the dining-room.

At that moment, when as in certain crises there is a secondary pause of fury as in a storm, rattling shots were heard. The police had been reinforced. They were shooting with deliberate purpose. The blows on the door suddenly ceased. There was a yell of fear. Groans, cries, shouts, oaths, the sound of rushing bodies. And then—a roar that exceeded all the tumult in the street, a roar that seemed to gather force as it mounted and came on and poured through the street like a solid thing and culminated with a deafening concussion that jarred the ground and swayed the buildings and spent itself in a grinding jolt that seemed like the melting of titanic forces in earth, air, and water together.

The little group in the house stood pale, awe-smitten, heart-still. Then Sidney turned, tore open the splintered door, and stepped out.

He stumbled over a groaning body. Then a police officer came up.

"What was that?"

"An explosion of some sort, sir, down by the shipyard quarters, sounded like."

A dull red glow in that quarter. It grew. Brander Cushing and the girls rushed out and stood by Sidney. The red glow spread and deepened like blood soaking up through a white cloth from a great wound.

"Oh, they have fired the shipyard!" cried Hermosa.

"They said they would," said Athanasia, simply. And then both she and Hermosa busied themselves with the wounded man on the steps.

The shipyard! The draughting-room! His precious plans! His models and devices, result of long and painful years of testing and proving, being swept away! Brander Cushing gave no thought to anything else. He rushed down the steps like a madman. Sidney spoke to Hermosa.

"Take the man into the house if necessary. Not badly hurt, you say? Here, Angus!" to the servant, who had just appeared from his hiding-place, "give Miss Howard anything she needs for this man. I must help see after my father."

With the words he was gone, running after his father, fearful for his safety, wondering in his heart what the outcome of all that night's work would be.

But the mob had scattered with almost miraculous rapidity. After the first shock of the explosion it had fled out of the street toward the scene of the fire, which now lighted up the whole city, leaving the police and the wounded and possibly dying in front of Brander Cushing's house.

As for Brander Cushing, rage and hate filled his heart as he ran on, making it almost impossible for the panting Sidney to keep up with him. The assault on his house was nothing by the side of this attack on his shipyard. Why had he not heeded the girl's warning? He had been thrice a fool to neglect such a plain case. But how had they got in? And what infernal machine had done the work? There flashed over him the figure of the man Brodig. Fool! And again fool! When he had the creature in his hand, tamely to let him go! This scum of the dregs of Europe, these bomb-making, insane, frenzied class haters, why did the government tamely allow them freedom and even more? His heart was black with rage which swelled up over the facts of the anguish of the last three days, and when he reached the water front he was beside himself with scorn of himself and animosity towards the mob which had come by the thousand to gloat over the scene of destruction.

It was a fearful sight. The explosion of a dynamite mill could hardly have made greater havoc. There was not a semblance of shape to a single building belonging to the yard. A roaring volcano of flame shot up from the very centre of the draughting-loft, and the walls of the offices beneath and on the side had toppled over into the street at the explosion. The glass roof over the building yard itself, supported by its immense steel arches, was completely blown away, not an inch of it left. So tremendous had been the explosion that pieces of sheet steel weighing several tons had been blown out into the draymen's yard. Brander Cushing, looking down, was aware that he was standing on a fragment which he knew belonged to the turret-swivel pieces of the new vessel.

A great yell went up as the last of the massive roof timbers of the loft went crashing down into the crater below.

"Fools!" said Brander Cushing savagely. "Cutting their own throats. Four thousand men out of work indefinitely."

To be continued

Give a Lifetime Present—

The Master Timepiece

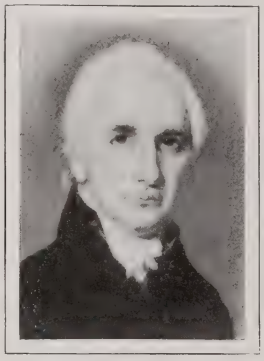
YOU can get the Master Timepiece—a South Bend Watch—in a solid gold case for $75, or in less expensive cases at prices within everyone's reach. A South Bend Watch is a real gift, no matter what it costs, for it is the utmost in a watch at every price.

It takes six months just to make one of these great watches. Then, from a month to six months more is spent in adjustments and regulations. It is inspected 411 times, must run perfectly in a 700-hour test, and finally, pass the Master Inspector. All it needs then is regulation to the buyer's personality.

The "South Bend" Watch

That personal adjustment is absolutely necessary because good watches run differently for different people. If you walk much, ride a great deal in motor cars, move quickly, etc., your watch is affected and should be regulated to offset the general condition under which you carry a watch.

Only a good jeweler can do this, and it can be done only with a good watch, for common watches are not sensitive enough for such delicate regulation—hence, seldom keep time for anyone.



Write us for the free book, "How Good Watches Are Made." It tells all about watches. It will help you get an admirable timepiece. It will convince you that a South Bend Watch is the finest present of all for man, woman or child—the most personal, the longest lived, the most serviceable and the most enjoyed.

THE SOUTH BEND WATCH CO.
Dept. 253
South Bend, Ind.

An Historic Note-Book

SOME years ago a searcher in the old house which was built before the Revolution by Adoniram Judson, Sr., at Plymouth, Mass., discovered an ivory miniature of the first owner of the house and a note book in which he had recorded the totals of some of the family's general expenses. The painting, which is dated 1818, and signed by Anna C. Peale, was made when this famous father of a famous son was sixty years old. Some of the items from the little account book are both interesting and amusing.

Adoniram Judson, Sr.

"Expence of my two sons' Education, Gifts, &c. Adoniram $950,,-00,,0. Elnathan $1,00,,00,0. In the account above I did not charge Adoniram for a horse which I gave him, which horse he sold for fifty Dollars which added make $1000,,,0. These two sums are taken from accounts of bills paid & given to my two sons for their Education & other expenses; beside their board at Home & clothing. As Nabey (Abigail) B, my Daughter, has not been at much expense abroad for her Education & has lived at home to assist & aeconomise in the family, I now give her Eight hundred Dollars in state Bank for her own use & improvement. And she has two hundred Dollars in sd. bank with her mother's, which make .1,000,,00,,0. For the future, while she is at home, I will give her board & half a Dollar per week. Jan. 1814."

The pastorate at Plymouth began with a long candidature, as appears from the following entry in the old account book: "Plym. Dr. From April 1, 1801 to May 12, 1802, 34 Sabbaths preaching, Six Dollars per Sab. $204,,-00,,0. Sallery from May 12, 1802 to May12,1803,$400.,-00,,0." The only wedding fee in the book is recorded thus: "Feb. 20. 1804, $1,50 Marriage money." The following entry shows that the practice of economy was desirable: "Feb. 22, 1805. This day we reckoned & settled all accounts relative to my Sallery for the year 1803, & found paid of said Sallery four hundred & fourty Dollars, and that Sixty Dollars remains due of the Sallery to be paid to me. Adoniram Judson. NATHAN BEED."

His medical expenses, however, were not heavy, as is shown by this memorandum: "April 18, 1803, I proposed to settle with Dr. Cotton for his attendance on my family as a physician in times of sickness, since my residence in the Town, and he told us that my name was not on his book, nor never would be; that he should not receive any thing for his advise & assistance & told us to call on him as we had done & welcome for the future."

Among the Workers

—IDA REED, the invalid poet of Philippi, W. Va., desires to thank the many friends who have helped her in her time of trial.

—THE NATIONAL FEDERATION of Rescue Missions has decided to hold a convention of mission workers in Boston early in 1912.

—EVANGELISTS HART AND MAGANN, of Fairbury, Ill., are now conducting a series of revival meetings in the First Methodist Church of Bluffton, Ind.

—EVANGELIST REV. JAMES SCOVILL of Bridgeport, Conn., recently held a series of meetings in St. Johnsbury, Vt. His efforts were greatly blessed.

—THE FIRST TABERNACLE meeting ever held in the State of Wyoming recently closed in Sheridan. Evangelist Shannon conducted services for five weeks in a specially erected building, which seated upward of 2,000 persons. Splendid crowds attended the meetings, and hundreds of professions of faith were made.

—NEWS HAS BEEN received of the murder at Sianfu in Shensi province, China, of several foreigners, including Mrs. Beckman, a mission school teacher, and five foreign children. Two Swedish missionaries, Messrs. Sandberg and Erickson, brought the sad intelligence to Peking. Many Chinese children in the mission school of Miss Beckingsdale were killed by the Chinese revolutionists, being mistaken, it is supposed, for Manchus. Consuls are everywhere urging missionaries and their families to leave their inland stations and proceed to the coast, where they can be protected.

—EVANGELIST WILLIAM SUNDAY recently closed a series of services in Springfield, O., which he has announced as the most remarkable he has ever conducted. Seven thousand persons professed conversion, the number reaching eleven hundred on the last day of the services. Never before in his evangelistic career has Mr. Sunday accomplished such results in a single day or at a single meeting. The morning after the campaign closed one of the Springfield papers said: "But perhaps the most notable event in the series of remarkable meetings that closed the campaign yesterday occurred in the afternoon, when Colonel Sellers, leaning on the arm of E. S. Kelly, grasped the hand of the evangelist. 'I have been an avowed agnostic for a number of years, but I can hold out no longer,' he told 'Billy' Sunday; 'therefore I make a full and complete surrender to the Lord Jesus Christ.'" The sum of $13,500 was raised for Mr. Sunday's benefit.

Answered Prayers

Miss G. P., Beach, Va. "I wish to acknowledge direct answer to prayer."

Mrs. A. F. E., Litchfield, Minn. "I give God the praise for my answered prayers."

Reader, Woodstock, Va. "I acknowledge answer to special prayer which God answered."

W. T. K., Birmingham, Ala. "I was in great trouble about business affairs. I am glad to acknowledge that He has answered my prayer."

A. M. B., Amhurst, Canada. "I wish to acknowledge God's great goodness in hearing and answering prayer for a dear one in great distress."

A Subscriber, Sistersville, W. Va. "I was in great trouble, and God delivered me in a wonderful way. I want to acknowledge his goodness to me."

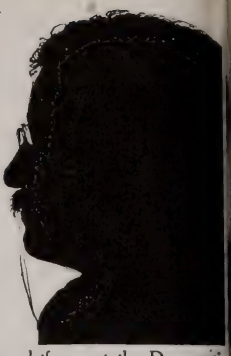
"A subscriber who always looks for the 'Answered Prayer' of your excellent paper the first thing, can testify that God has answered many prayers for me." Illinois.

Called Higher

On August 22 last, Mrs. Mary E. Rumsey, of San Diego, Calif., passed away very suddenly and very peacefully.

Mrs. J. E. Wylie, of Greenwich, N. Y., passed away recently at her home there. She was for twenty-five years a subscriber to this magazine.

Mrs. Emily F. Miller, of Hanover, Ill., has been called to her reward of a life of service. She was for over twenty years a subscriber to this magazine.



Mrs. A. M. Hines (75) passed away at Hasbrouck Heights, N. J., April 22, after a brief illness. She was a subscriber to this magazine for many years.

Mrs. D. E. Terry (82), of Rochester, Ind., passed away March 31, 1911. She had been a subscriber of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for more than twenty-five years.

Frances Beidleman McCarter (82), of Topeka, Kan., has been called home. She was a devout Christian from early childhood and a subscriber to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for over twenty years.

KEEP IN TOUCH WITH

ROOSEVELT

Will President Taft be nominated for a Second Term?

Has La Follette a good fighting chance for the Republican nomination?

Can Woodrow Wilson, with his Progressive platform, get the Democratic nomination?

Or—will it be Judson Harmon and the Conservative wing of the party?

Is 1912 to be a Democratic year? What will the platforms be? What are the issues at stake?

The two parties will confront one another in line of battle with a more nearly equal prospect of victory than in any campaign for sixteen years.

Until Election Day, in forming your opinions and making your forecasts, you will find The Outlook authoritative and informing—an indispensable periodical.

The President, the prominent candidates, the National leaders, will speak for themselves—for the things they stand for—through The Outlook.

The President's Own View

President Taft's own judgment of what his administration has accomplished thus far, and the chief measures remaining on his "calendar of unfinished business," appears in the Outlook of December 2.

Mr. Bryan's View

Three times Democratic candidate for the Presidency, Mr. Bryan speaks with the authority that comes from having voiced the opinions of millions of his countrymen. His own ideas on politics and the coming campaign are to be fully set forth in one of the early issues of the Outlook.

Senator La Follette's View

Picturesque and daring, the most striking figure in the Republican Progressive movement, its foremost Presidential candidate, the Senator from Wisconsin is an extraordinary political factor. He is going to tell fully and explicitly where he stands, in an early issue of the Outlook.

Governor Harmon's View

Conservative leader in the Democratic party, candidate for the Presidential nomination, twice re-elected Governor of Ohio, the man who handled the first case under the Sherman Law as Cleveland's Attorney General, Judson Harmon's opinions have great national interest. He will soon state them fully, through the pages of the Outlook.

Mr. Roosevelt's View

Theodore Roosevelt, ex-President of the United States, is a world authority on problems of National Government.

From his position on the Outlook's editorial staff, Mr. Roosevelt will continue to present — exclusively through the Outlook — his written views on political as well as all other public questions.

The Editor-in-Chief of the Outlook, Lyman Abbott, will present the vital issues of the campaign as they develop, and discuss them in the spirit of broad statesmanship which has marked his work in many campaigns.

Many of the Outlook's strongest features cannot be announced in advance, for the Outlook is first of all a Weekly Newspaper, handling great topics on the instant. Therein lies its distinction. Its authority is its strength.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, 52 Issues
THE OUTLOOK, 52 Issues (Including Twelve Magazine Numbers)
$3
BOTH MAGAZINES FOR THE PRICE OF ONE

Group One. $1.75

Any one magazine in this group with the Christian Herald one year $1.75
Any two with the Christian Herald . . . 2.10
Any three with the Christian Herald . . . 2.40

McCALL'S
HOUSEWIFE
PEOPLE'S HOME JOURNAL
LADIES' WORLD
FARM JOURNAL (2 yrs.)

CHRISTIAN HERALD, $1.50
CURRENT LITERATURE, $3
with any two other magazines in Group One, or with any one other magazine in Group Two.
Our Price $3.00

Group Two. $2.00

Any one magazine in this group with the Christian Herald one year $2.00
Any two with the Christian Herald . . . 2.60
Any three with the Christian Herald . . . 3.20

AMERICAN BOY
MODERN PRISCILLA
PICTORIAL REVIEW
LITTLE FOLKS
METROPOLITAN
SUCCESS
WORLD EVANGEL

CHRISTIAN HERALD, $1.50
REVIEW OF REVIEWS, $3
with any two other magazines in Group One, or with any one other magazine in Group Two.
Our Price $3.25

The Christian Herald's Own Club Rate

This coming year THE CHRISTIAN HERALD may be had for the first time at a club rate, as follows: —Your Own RENEWAL and ONE New Subscription for ONE Year for $2.25. or Your Own RENEWAL and TWO New Subscriptions for One Year for $3.00

WE WILL REFUND THE MONEY paid for any Magazine, including The Christian Herald, if you find such Magazine undesirable in your home

Address: The Christian Herald, Bible House, New York

Life Here and Hereafter*

ONE of the notable books of the year is a little volume by the celebrated entist William Hanna Thomson, D., LL.D., entitled *Life, Death and mortality. Dr. Thomson has already become well known through his tings on science in its relation to gion. He is the consulting physi- n to the Roosevelt Hospital; to the w York State Manhattan Hospitals the Insane; to the New York Red ss Hospital, and ex-president of the w York Academy of Medicine.

n this latest volume, Dr. Thomson ls with facts and theories concern- life on the earth. He regards rwinism as definitely discredited by dern science and says some scientific estigators now treat it with ridicule. en Darwin's own son, Sir George rwin, in a published address has lared that "the problem of physical is as inscrutable as ever."

n a most instructive chapter on the rrection of the body he writes:

The doctrine of the resurrection of body was by the Pharisees and by Lord himself held to be the same h what we term human immortality. e body, therefore, is as deathless as soul (Matt. 22: 31, 32; Mark 12: 27; Luke 20: 35-38).

But the very important statement lows that flesh and blood cannot in- it the kingdom of God nor doth ruption inherit incorruption! (I. . 15: 50). The risen body, there- e, cannot be like the body which we w, for that is composed of flesh blood, and with no other kind of ly have we yet any acquaintance. t he goes on to explain in the words, is sown a natural (or physical) ly, it is raised a spiritual body,' ile he further adds that the physi- body is sown in weakness to be sed as a spiritual body in power.

. . .

But Paul could not then have im- ned how modern science would engthen his comparison. He looked n the seed of a common grain as ultimate living reality, whereas now know that the living germ hin the seed is incalculably smaller. e unicellular germ of a towering is as much smaller than the acorn ich contains it, as the acorn itself smaller than the oak. But so it is every form of life, whether plant animal. Every elephant and every ale begins its individual existence h a material dot, barely visible by a h-power miscroscope. Yet in that nishing speck of matter its future ly all exists, for the whale cannot ally grow into a fish, because whales mammals, and therefore separated an impassable biological gulf from fishes.

These are facts which only science ld make credible. The argument, erefore, is this: The human body already passed through as great d marvelous, yet always connected, anges here as that final change at Resurrection. The Almighty who decreed those changes in the body this life can equally order that final ange in the body of the life to come.

. . .

"The glorious truth is that in aven our living bodies will be more al and our own selves more personal d recognizable than ever in this sent clouded and imperfect being. l Christians, therefore, should com- rt themselves about their dead with words written in Paul's earliest istle: 'For if we believe that Jesus d and rose again, even so them also ich are fallen asleep in Jesus will d bring with him' (I. Thess. 4: 14)."

The concluding chapter is on Heaven." Dr. Hanna says:

"Though a belief in the continuance life after death is universal in the human race, the Christian religion differs from all others in its teachings of the conditions of the future state.

"Men naturally have tried to picture to themselves what those conditions are by the help of the imagination. Now the imagination is purely an earthly faculty which can draw its pictures only with materials furnished by earthly experience. Scenes of which no earthly vision can catch a glimpse are quite beyond our picturing. Men, therefore, in all ages and everywhere have represented the future world as more or less a reproduction of this world. . . .

"All the many writers of the New Testament refrain from describing any place or places in heaven till we come to its last book, that of Revelation. But in it we immediately find that everything is hidden under an impenetrable veil of metaphor. It begins with the appearance of seven great lights on their golden stands. But these are seven Christian churches lighting up the thick darkness of the world around them. The book then ends with a glorious city whose walls are built with precious stones and with gates of pearl. But we soon read that it cannot be a literal city, but instead is a great society of perfected persons, and also is the Bride of the Lamb.

"Thus in great contrast with other religions the Bible, whether in the Old or New Testament, says next to nothing about where we shall be in the coming world. In all other religions place is everything, and all their descriptions are those of place.

"But instead of place and its circumstances, nothing can be more full than the Bible in telling us with whom we there shall be. We shall indeed meet there with minds and persons, and above all we shall be in the immediate presence of God himself! . . .

"What a world it is which they [the New Testament writers] speak of! What is its glory which so often is their theme? Here in this world the word 'glory' suggests something spectacular, which ministers to pride, and for such earthly glory this world has often been drenched with blood. But in the Bible the glory of God is never apart from his goodness. 'Let your light so shine before men that they may see your good works and glorify,' not you, but 'your Father who is in heaven.' As if all men's good works are due to his prompting. So will it be forever, when men shall stand before their Father in heaven, evermore shining through their good works.

"We now see that man is worth saving. Some may think that man is insignificant enough as he dwells on this little earth, which is as but a grain of sand among the great stars in the sky above him. But every world of matter shrinks to insignificance before one immortal mind, and when that deathless mind is a human mind, endowed with all the capacities which he took with him from this world, imagination fails to picture such a being occupied with things of eternity.

"God cannot, as he willingly would, bestow all his good things on man here in this world, because such prosperity would ruin him. What good therefore man can gain here, he must appreciate first by its cost in labor. But labor from the beginning is a curse. When in heaven a man shall be so changed that being rich toward God will never injure him, he will then freely inherit those true riches which never can be lost because they are so inherent and personal.

"Why, then, need we be told what sort of a place heaven is? Here on this poor earth a place is a garden or a desert according to those who live there. In the blessed world beyond there will be opportunities without end for the development of human excellence in the service of our heavenly Father."

*Published by Funk & Wagnalls Co., New York.

Have You a Child of Your Own?

Are you one of the people who have no direct interest in any child, none of your own, no little nieces or nephews, no little children to pet, even though they belong to a neighbor? If you are, this may not interest you, or it may be the means of giving you a child interest.

Look out of your window into the growing shadows of an early winter's day. Do you see the well-fed, well-clad children coming home from school with their books under their arms? Do you see the stores putting out the Christmas signs of the time of holly and mistletoe? Do you realize that the hearts of the children about you are dancing with the anticipation of their great day—Christmas? You and others will see that they are not disappointed.

Turn to a sadder picture. In hundreds of square miles of the mountainous region of the South there are tens of thousands of children whose homes are squalid cabins, whose ancestors for generations, though honest, industrious and God-fearing, are ignorant and poor beyond belief, who have no schoolbooks, let alone toys; no school, let alone Christmas parties; no wise and loving care; no hope for anything better in life unless we who have been born to better opportunities give them a chance.

In Cumberland Gap, Tenn., in the heart of the mountains, there is a school, LINCOLN MEMORIAL UNIVERSITY, founded by the late General O. O. Howard, as a living memorial to Abraham Lincoln, who was born of these people and whose monument will be in the lives and deeds of those given a start in his name. The school is planned in such a way that boys and girls willing to work can earn part or all of their way, and nearly seven hundred have been doing it. The magnificent results have shown that the school can uplift the whole region. The trouble is hundreds more are waiting today to get in and yet more hundreds seek the chance. We must have money to make more room.

Do Your Share Today

We put direct, plain and straight to you today, when your mind is full of Christmas thoughts, the fact that these children are WHITE AMERICANS of the finest pioneer stock, and are most deserving. Take a little of the Christmas money that you would use of those about you, tell the children of it and show them why, and put it in an envelope and send it. Do it today, and as you do realize that it is an act of humanity, goodness and sweetness.

These children care little for Christmas or toys; they are old beyond their years, and serious, and an education is their eager hope. You and your own are cared for and have a chance. Give a little to those who have nothing. Little or much, send it today to the Treasurer, Theodore P. Gilman, 1170 Broadway, New York, for the situation is urgent and pathetic.

PATENTS SECURED OR FEE RETURNED.
Free report as to Patentability. Illustrated Guide Book, and List of Inventions Wanted, sent free.
VICTOR J. EVANS & CO., Washington, D. C.

A LITTLE GOES A LONG WAY
Used as a flavoring like lemon and vanilla
MAPLEINE
(The Flavor de Luxe)
GOES A LONG WAY

In Cake Filling one-half a teaspoonful is enough for every cup of sugar.
For Cake Frosting a teaspoonful is enough for every cup of sugar.
For Jelly, a teaspoonful is enough for half a box of gelatine.
For Ice Cream, a teaspoonful is enough for every quart of cream.
For Mapleine Syrup, half a teaspoonful is enough to flavor one quart of white sugar syrup.
Grocers sell Mapleine, 35c for Two Ounce Bottle. (In Canada, 50c.)
There are substitutes for Mapleine—Try them.
If your Grocer does not sell Mapleine, write Dept F.
Crescent Mfg. Co.
Seattle, Washington
Send for Cook Book, free.

ALL FOR 20¢
Three beautiful 12-inch LINEN Centerpieces, Holly, Eyelet and Daisy designs, 4 Doilies and our catalog showing over 600 designs of art embroidery goods and 70 different EMBROIDERY STITCHES. All delivered for 20 cts.
P. W. KELLER CO., Waterloo, Iowa

Vapo Cresolene
(ESTABLISHED 1879)
for Whooping Cough, Croup, Asthma, Sore Throat, Coughs, Bronchitis, Colds, Diphtheria, Catarrh.
"Used while you sleep."
A simple, safe and effective treatment avoiding drugs. Vaporized Cresolene stops the paroxysms of Whooping Cough and relieves Croup at once.
It is a boon to sufferers from Asthma.
The air rendered strongly antiseptic, inspired with every breath, makes breathing easy, soothes the sore throat and stops the cough, assuring restful nights.
Cresolene relieves the bronchial complications of Scarlet Fever and Measles and is a valuable aid in the treatment of Diphtheria.
Cresolene's best recommendation is its 30 years of successful use. Send us postal for Descriptive Booklet.
For Sale by All Druggists
Try Cresolene Antiseptic Throat Tablets for the irritated throat, composed of slippery elm bark, licorice, sugar and Cresolene. They can't harm you. Of your druggists or from us, in stamps.
The Vapo-Cresolene Co., 62 Cortlandt St., New York
or Leeming-Miles Building, Montreal, Canada

The Florsheim SHOE

LOOK FOR NAME IN STRAP

No breaking in—Florsheim shoes made over "Natural Shape" lasts insure ease, comfort and perfect fit from the first day.

Ask your dealer or send amount to cover cost and express charges and we will have our nearest dealer fill your order.

Most styles $5.00 and $6.00

Write for our free booklet "The Florsheim Way of Foot-Fitting," showing styles that are different.

The Florsheim Shoe Company
Chicago U. S. A.

The Hippo
The extreme of high toes

You Ought to Have the New 5% Book

¶ Every man or woman who is interested in the conservative investment of money ought to have it.

¶ It is free for the asking—there is a copy for you.

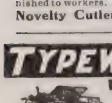
¶ This Company has been in business 17 years. It pays 5 per cent interest on money entrusted to its care and has never been a day late in the mailing of semi-annual interest checks.

¶ It allows the withdrawal of money at any time without notice and without loss of interest.

¶ Every dollar invested with it is amply secured by first mortgages on improved real estate deposited in trust with one of the strongest trust companies in Baltimore.

¶ Nothing could be sounder—more conservative—more desirable as an investment for savings or idle funds.

Write today for the Book
Calvert Mortgage & Deposit Co.
1046 Calvert Bldg., Baltimore, Md.



AGENTS---"$80 IN 8 DAYS

Working in the Noon-Hour Only."

That's the report of Mr. C. E. Warren, one of our hustling representatives. There is big money in selling Novelty Knives, Razors, etc. Transparent handles with society emblems, photos, address, etc. Quick sellers. Experience unnecessary. We teach you how. Exclusive territory. Fine samples furnished to workers. Send no money. Write quick Today
Novelty Cutlery Co., 262 Bar St., Canton, Ohio

TYPEWRITERS ALL MAKES VISIBLE WRITERS
or otherwise

L. C. SMITHS, OLIVERS, UNDERWOODS, Etc.
¼ to ½ M'F'RS PRICES
Shipped ANYWHERE for Free Trial, or RENTED allowing Rent to APPLY
PRICES $15.00 UP
First-class Machines Fresh from the Mf'rs. Write for Illustrated Catalog 71
Typewriter Emporium, (EST. 1892) 34-36 LAKE ST., CHICAGO

BUYING REAL ESTATE

FARMING land is real estate quite as much as is the building lot, but where it is to continue in use as farming land, its profits being wholly dependent on the quality of the soil and the skill and energy of its worker, its speculative value is seldom enhanced after the neighboring lands have been settled, and so such lands rarely enlist the interest of the real estate trader, whose business it is to buy acres and sell lots.

We estimate farming land by the actual or possible value of its crops. The building lot is bought as the site of a building, or because of an expected rise, or as a source of revenue from rents. While there are other forms of investment with greater elements of security, and greater chances for reasonable returns, such as first-class bonds, yet the speculative spirit, active or dormant in the most conservative, finds allurement in real estate deals and land booms.

What Is Real Estate?

We all know what real estate, regarded as land, is; but not so many of us are ready to distinguish between land and buildings, nor without thought can we see that they are the opposite of each other in their basic characteristics. Land may or may not increase in value, but buildings begin to depreciate from the day of their completion till the time when they are pulled down, or fall into ruins through the inevitable decay that attaches to all human work.

All values, whether real or personal, are created by the demand for the thing, and this demand is the main factor in regulating the price. Man is distinctly a land animal. Even the sailor and the deep-sea fisher are dependent on the land for ship, seine and food. It follows that as populations increase land values rise. Land procured without cost, with possession continued without payment of taxes, would make an ideal asset, provided it were in a neighborhood in which the population was increasing; for, unlike personal property, it is not subject to deterioration through decay. But there is always the interest on the original purchase price, and taxes are as inevitable as death, so that, to meet these charges, there must be an appreciation in land values, or a commensurate return from rentals, if the investment is to be remunerative.

It may be set down as an axiom that lands usually increase in value, and that improvements, that is, buildings, always decrease. In buying real estate, as a productive investment, certain elementary rules must be observed if the venture is to be successful. (1) Where there is convincing evidence that the rise in value will more than offset the fixed charges of interest on capital invested, taxes and assessments, there should be no improvements, that is, buildings, from which it follows that there will be no rents. (2) Where improvements are advisable, as sources of revenue to meet fixed charges, the buildings should bear to the cost of the land the smallest proportion consistent with the purpose in mind. (3) Where income is not the chief consideration, the improvements should be of a character that will suffer no great deterioration in value, through cost of maintenance or changes in the neighborhood. (4) Where property is purchased with the ultimate buildings constructed, the purchaser, with revenue in mind, should be reasonably certain that the rentals will be sufficient to provide this income, plus the fixed charges, and a sinking fund to offset the cost of the building before its usefulness is ended.

A Form of Monopoly

We err when we associate the term "monopoly" exclusively with trusts or with corners in stocks or the necessities of life. There is always present an element of monopoly in any article needed for human use. As this monopolistic feature is increased, we find a corresponding rise in values. Nothing that we buy or sell possesses this quality of monopoly in a like degree with real estate, because each lot or block has properties peculiar to itself. All corner lots may be alike in size and contour, but there is some one lot that is more desirable than the others and whose advantages cannot be duplicated. If we increase the measure of monopoly we add to the value of the lot as an investment. From such property the highest rentals may be obtained, while the increase in value is sure to keep on so long as that particular place retains its advantages and continues to be sought after.

While real estate appreciates in value with the increase of population, it does not follow that all the real estate in a large city, say like New York, will advance in an equal ratio with each thousand added to its census, for desirability is an important factor, and this desirability is largely influenced by increased facilities for transportation, by changes in the character of the residents, or by the introduction of certain kinds of manufacture that tend to make the location no longer desirable as a place of residence or for a retail business. We have in mind properties that have fallen off two-thirds in value through the building of bridges across the East River, and others that have depreciated because of the subways and other forms of rapid transit. In all our cities, and the same may be noticed in our smaller towns, lots on one side of a business or residential street command a higher price than on the other, though to the stranger each might seem to be equally desirable. No doubt there is a satisfactory reason for such preference, but the fact that it exists is sufficient to influence the choice of the real estate investor.

Many Requisites Necessary

If in a large city land values fall off in one section, the loss is sure to be more than met by the rise in other sections, and it may be accepted as a fact that accrued values, or the increment, is always twice as great in the desirable business streets as in the residential districts.

Indeed, there are many requisites for the man who contemplates the purchase of lots for investment or as a place of residence. A suburb, call it "Park," "Manor," "Villa," or whatever you like, may be accessible, pleasant to the eye, and have air of the best quality sweeping over it, but if it have not good sanitation and is not free from disagreeable odors, it can never succeed as a residence district. We have in mind a section of a great city filled with fine residences and once the abode of a cultured and wealthy class, that is now given over to lately arrived Poles, because sewage in a partly closed canal and odors from new gas works have made the place undesirable.

Men controlling much land and having the available capital may erect buildings by the wholesale, and from the rentals derive an income adequate to the investment, but the man with limited means, desirous of increasing his wealth through real estate ventures, should, as a rule, avoid building, unless, indeed, he is anxious to own his own home, and in such a case building is to be encouraged, but for moral rather than business reasons. It should be borne in mind that no building adds to the value of the land on which it stands, but the land does add value to the building. No matter how costly the structure it can never increase in value; the increment must come through the appreciation of land value. Value is often enhanced by the fact that the lot is vacant, and so saves the cost of removing an undesirable building to make room for one better suited to the wants of the purchaser.

Short Term Investments

Investment bonds and notes issued to mature in from one to five years are favored by many investors as yielding a somewhat better income than long time obligations. In addition, such securities, particularly of the larger issues, usually command a ready market and are less subject to wide fluctuations in price.

We have prepared a booklet giving brief descriptions of the principal issues of such securities, which we will be pleased to furnish on request.

Ask for Booklet S-642

Guaranty Trust Company of New York
28 Nassau Street

Capital and Surplus - $23,000,000
Deposits - - - 161,000,000

Highest Interest Best Security

Amounts of any size ($25, $50, $100 $200 or multiples) can be invested, temporarily or permanently. Your money available when wanted. Endorsed by highest financial authorities everywhere.

6% NET INTEREST

Principal and interest secured by select Mortgages on Preferred Real Estate

If your savings or any other money is drawing less than 6% net, or is not as secure as Old Mother Earth herself can make it—send postcard for our Booklet. Read it.

A. C. LESLIE CO.
Suite 117, Bakewell Law Bldg., Pittsburg, Pa.

GUARANTEED MORTGAGES

For Large and Small Investors

Don't think, because your capital is small, that it can earn only 3½ per cent. or 4 per cent. It used to be so—the small investor for hundreds of years had no chance beside the capitalist. Our

First Mortgage Trust Bonds
On New York and Suburban Real Estate

put you exactly on a par with the wealthiest investor. You have the same security and the same certain returns—5 per cent. or 5½ per cent. You have the same opportunity to withdraw your capital if you should need it.

Under Supervision of New York Banking Department
Write for our Booklet

NEW YORK MORTGAGE CO.
Dept. D, 1470 Broadway, New York City

PATENTS How to GET Every D... Your Invention is W...
Send 8 cents stamps for new 128 page book of ... Interest to Inventors.
R. S. & A. B. LACEY, Dept. 36 Washington, ...

Have You $1000?

Why not invest it in a First Mortgage on a g... farm?

Think of the good farms owned by good farm... in your own neighborhood—then think of ... Northwestern farms whose lands are the m... highly productive in the world—would a loan ... $10 an acre or less, to yield 6%, look attract... to you?

We can supply you with such Mortgages ... 6% interest and have supplied others with th... for over 33 years. Our mortgages range ... amount from $200 to $5000.

Write to-day for Booklet A, it is full of information for investors, and will be sent free upon request.

WELLS & DICKEY COMPANY
Established 1878 Security Bank Build...
Capital and Surplus $700,000 Minneapolis, Minn...

The Song of the Dawn

Continued from page 1291

wn the window panes, and the baby llowed the drops with his tiny fore- ger.

It was after two days of rain, that ok every hope of a present ice crop way, that Anton went to the side or of a house in a distant street, and ked for work. Perhaps he knew at there would be no work with erything soaked and dripping in the rden world, but the woman at the or saw hunger in his eyes, and ked him if he would like some break- st. His "yes" held the pent-up nging of days, for he had been going thout food to leave more for Esther d the baby, leaving his wife to sup- se he got something to eat outside. Seated before a plate of fresh bis- it and butter, a bowl of hot coffee, d a couple of apples, he ate like the arved, holding it back to make it last e longer. The apples he put in his cket.

"Did you work at the cement ant?" asked the woman.

"Yes, till it shut down," he an- vered.

"I wish we had work for you, but thing can be done in the garden w."

"I wait for ice, but it come not," said with an accent of despair.

"It will come," she returned confi- ntly, with knowledge born of expe- nce, "and I hope you will find work on."

"I must get work," he answered rcely.

Then he went away, and Mrs. anklin wished she had asked him s name, and told him to come again. erhaps she did better, for it was ter this morning meal that they held meeting in the First Church, and cided to solicit contributions of food an opportunity to sell at wholesale those who were without work.

From the superintendent of the ment plant they got the list of mes on the pay roll of the previous ar. To all of these there were sent rds in English and Hungarian, stat- g that there would be a sale at holesale prices at the First Church, ch Saturday until further notice. this way the savings of many held t a little longer, and the entirely stitute were discovered and relieved. Anton and Esther read their card, d saw with thankfulness a few more eals in the scant coins left in the acked pitcher, meals for Esther and e baby, for Anton no longer ate at me. Sometimes he earned a meal, casionally he was driven to ask for e, but many a meal was simply nitted, for even the snow fell only in attered flakes, a thing of beauty, but fering no work for shovelers.

Sometimes the river would stiffen nd freeze solid, inch by inch adding elf from the shore, and hope ran gh, only to be dashed by days of eakening and honeycombing beneath e glaring surface. Watching the ver came to be an occupation of the nemployed, a sorry vigil in its hope- sness. The days passed as in a bad ream, only Tony still crowed and ughed, and began to say parts of ntences in these dark days.

Picking up the words he heard most ften, he met his father on his return e night with the question, "Zeero me?" and chuckled with delight the xt day at the window, calling out in weet baby tones, "See, see, Zeero," inting to the street below. He evi- ently thought that the word he heard often referred to a welcome guest.

But zero did not come till the last ickel had gone from the cracked itcher, and the little family faced rtire dependence or starvation.

It was five days before Christmas hen the whistles blew from one ice ouse to another, calling the waiting en to work. The watchers on the ver bank scattered as if by magic. s far as eye could reach for miles up nd down the river lay a blanket of ure white snow on top of the heavy ice. Groups of men set to work scraping the surface in the fields marked out by rows of evergreen trees.

Within these green enclosures the gangs of men looked like swarms of moving black specks. Anton had bought a breakfast of rolls and coffee at the bakeshop, on the credit of his coming ice ticket, and also with something once more in his dinner-pail before he started his cold work on the river.

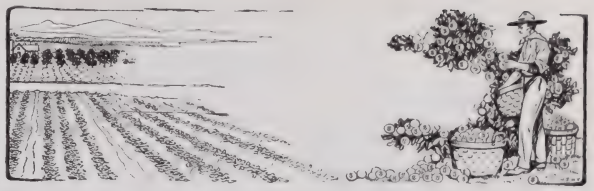
Just all that his dinner-pail swinging in his hand, and work ahead, meant to the little family as he started for the river trail, could not be put into words, but it sung a song in Anton's heart under the blue sky and reached Esther's lips as she moved about her work, or tossed Tony high in the air with a snatch of a home song.

At noon Anton sat down with a fellow workman in the shelter of a snow-plow, protected from the cutting wind blowing from the north, while they ate their dinners, the sun shedding its warm and comforting rays even over this icy world. Tony got a second toss when his father came home at night, and the little family were happy in the prospect of a renewed prosperity.

After the ice was scraped, it was sawed in great fields by saws large enough for giants' use, then marked in many cakes. Up and down the horses walked, dragging the long saws. Anton walked beside his horse, first with the warm sun on his back, then facing its warmth, treading his beat many times in a day.

Some of the little marking trees had loosened as they cut near them, and Anton walked across the river on Christmas eve in the sunset, with a cedar tree on his shoulder. Tony screamed with delight when he saw it, clutching the branches. Anton and Esther set it up in one corner of the room with the cradle in front of it to hold it upright.

After supper they wrapped Tony up warm, and started out in the glitter and glamour of the Christmas streets. It was not much that the ice ticket could stand for, beside food and rent, but at the Five and Ten Cent Store they mingled with a crowd of purchasers, buying a couple of strings of tinsel, a glorious red Christmas bell, and hesitated long over some elaborately fancy pieces of angels, for decoration, deciding at last on a little manger, with the Christ-child inside, and the Mother Mary beside him.



They went away at last with the bright trimming for the Christmas tree, a tiny pair of red mittens with blue edges for Tony, a big pair of warm ones for Anton, and a worsted scarf for Esther, these latter bought by Esther and Anton as a surprise for the other, while each in turn held the baby.

Home again, Anton donned his warmest clothing and started out in the night, while Esther rocked the cradle under the Christmas tree, till the sandman closed Tony's starry eyes. One rosy cheek nestled against a little round fist, while the other held tight within its chubby grasp a green twig from the tree over his head. The young mother hung over the baby for a few minutes with tears of happiness in her eyes, then tucked the bedclothes close about him, and devoted herself to the pleasant task of trimming the Christmas tree.

The tinsel was festooned with care, the bell hung to the topmost bough, then with deep interest she gave herself to the disposal of the mittens. Anton must see his at once when he came home in the morning, Tony his as he opened his baby eyes upon this glory over his head.

At last they were placed to her satisfaction, including the unopened package for herself. Once she put out her hand to untie the string which held her Christmas surprise, then

Continued on page 1306

WANT A FARM?

Where Crops Grow the Year 'Round— Where Crops Pay Biggest Results—

Are you tired of renting? Are you tired of getting only a little more than a living?

Do you hate the handicap of cold weather? Would you like to farm where you can make those lost four months count?

Would you like to farm where you can get a net return of $50 an acre or more after the first year?

You will find the answer to all these questions in the wonderful San Joaquin Valley of California.

Here in the heart of the Golden State—a perpetual "land of flowers"—irrigation is making farmers rich. Land that a few years ago was in immense stock ranges or wheat fields, now—under irrigation—is being broken up into small farms. These farms of 10, 20 or 40 acres are yielding their owners a much larger net profit than farms of 100 or 200 acres did "back East."

The wonderful soil and climate grow such crops as oranges, lemons, figs, wine, raisin and table grapes, prunes, peaches, apricots, olives, berries and melons. A developed grove vineyard or fruit farm pays so well that men of experience often gladly pay $1,000 or more an acre if by chance these farms come on the market.

Land with water rights or with water developed can be bought around $100 an acre and on liberal terms. A few hundred dollars cash secures possession and interest on the deferred payments is charged at not over six per cent.

A start is made with alfalfa, a few cows, pigs, chickens and bees. Such a combination brings a cash income from the start, as there is a creamery in nearly every hamlet. That cream check, chickens, eggs or honey pays the grocery bills, meets the monthly or semi-annual payments and gradually puts in fruit trees.

On account of the mild all year 'round growing climate, little shelter is required, stock thrives out of doors, and there is no time that you cannot do out of door work comfortably and profitably. While June, July and August are warm, it is a dry heat that offers no hindrance to out door work.

These small farms offer all the advantages of community life. You have near neighbors, good schools, good roads, telephones and rural free delivery. The neighborliness and "get together" spirit of the people here is typified in their co-operative creameries and market associations that solve the problem of getting the utmost for what the farmer has to sell.

I would like to send you a new booklet just issued by the Santa Fe about the San Joaquin Valley. It details the experiences of people who have taken up different lines of farming in the San Joaquin Valley, and tells of the results they have secured. It tells of the openings there for home seekers. It tells how hundreds of earnest, ambitious people with little money are making these farms pay for themselves. It will be an inspiration for the renting farmer laboring under unfavorable conditions in older communities.

You ought to read about this country and then go see it. See the San Joaquin Valley this winter while work is slack with you. It will cost but little compared with the immense advantage it means to you. The Santa Fe runs comfortable tourist sleeping cars in which the trip can be made in less than three days and at least expense. I will gladly give you full information about trains and fares.

Write me a post card to-day, or mail this coupon. I want you to be sure to read this new San Joaquin Valley booklet.

C. L. SEAGRAVES
General Colonization Agent, A., T. & S. F. Ry.
2250 Railway Exchange
CHICAGO, ILL.

Please send me your new San Joaquin Valley booklet.

Name .....

Address .....

REVERSIBLE "Linene" COLLARS CUFFS AND BOSOMS

Two in One

Linene collars have two wearing sides for the price of one collar. They can be reversed instantly, and a clean surface presented.

SEND FOR SAMPLE

10 collars at the stores for 25 cents, or by mail 30 cents in U. S. stamps. Sample by mail 6 cents.

State Size and Style.

Reversible Collar Co.
Dept. T. Boston, Mass.

Kalamazoo Stove Book FREE

Write for the stove book with the astounding inside facts about stove making and stove selling—how you can save $5.00 to $40.00 by buying stoves direct from the factory. Built by experts—prices $6.50 and up, east of the Mississippi. Stove Book yours for the asking with description of 400 sizes and styles of stoves—richly illustrated.

Stove or Range
Shipped Freight Prepaid
30 Days' Trial

You don't decide finally until you've used the stove or range 30 days and then if it comes back to us—at our expense—if you're not satisfied. 170,000 people have tried Kalamazoos and bought. 360 Days' Approval Test. Cash or credit terms, shipment within 24 hours. Repairs at cost or less if ever needed. Your interest demands that you get our proposition first. Now send for the Stove Book and Catalog No. 103 at once.

Kalamazoo Stove Company Mfrs.
Kalamazoo, Michigan

"A Kalamazoo Direct To You" And Gas Stoves Too

Foy's Big Book MONEY IN POULTRY and SQUABS
Tells how to start small and grow big. Describes world's largest pure-bred poultry farm and gives a great mass of useful poultry information. Low prices on fowls, eggs, incubators and brooders. Mailed 4c. F. FOY, Box 70, Des Moines, Iowa

BLYMYER CHURCH BELLS.
UNLIKE OTHER BELLS SWEETER, MORE DURABLE, LOWER PRICE. OUR FREE CATALOGUE TELLS WHY.
Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati, O.

Mothers!

The grandmothers of today did not have in their time the helpful suggestions as to the proper care of the baby that The BABY BOOK offers to all young mothers of this day. You cannot realize the power of this little book to sweeten the joys and disperse all the cares and worries of motherhood. Its advice, when followed, leaves no room for misgivings about the infant's welfare. Your baby will always be sweet, clean, dainty and safe against ills if you will avail yourself of the help of The BABY BOOK. Write for a copy.

The Kumfy Robe for Little Tots.

Sizes, 6 months to 2 years.

Nothing adds to baby's comfort quite so much as a pretty downy robe to slip on these cold mornings.

49c

No. 29W5742

The attractive little model shown on the above figure is made of a domet flannel in an assortment of pretty designs representing nursery rhymes and fairy tales, so delightful to the little folks. Color, blue. Made in three sizes, for babies 6 months, 1 and 2 years of age. Be sure to state size desired. Postage extra for mailing, 13c.

Address all correspondence to

Elgin Emerson Koff

Department 29

Sears, Roebuck and Co.,

Chicago, Illinois

THE SAVIOUR'S BIBLE*

Review of Old Testament Lessons by Dr. and Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts

OUR best thought for a quarterly and annual review at the conclusion of our Old Testament lessons is to consider the whole Old Testament as the Saviour's Bible, and to ask ourselves what he said of it, as giving us the most solid basis for our opinions in regard to it.

Some years ago, when bitter attacks were being made on the Old Testament, the writer took his New Testament and sat down to note everything that Jesus said about the Old Testament, and these words of Jesus were found to prove seven different propositions, which became the writer's firm creed in regard to the Old Testament; for surely the purest among the mighty and the mightiest among the pure, as Jesus has been fitly called, was too good to deceive and too great to be deceived, and too spiritual to miss at any point the meaning of his Father's words.

Divine Confirmation

First: Jesus showed his familiarity with the whole of the Old Testament by quotations from nearly all of its books. If we had all the words of Jesus, doubtless we should have quotations from every one. Let those who have THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Red Letter Edition of the Bible carefully examine it in connection with this lesson. They will find printed in red the passages which Jesus quoted from the Old Testament.

Those who speak disparagingly of the Old Testament while exalting the New, and especially the Sermon on the Mount, are apparently too unfamiliar with the Old Testament to have discovered that much that is most praised in the Sermon on the Mount is quoted from the Old Testament. Every one of the Beatitudes is a quotation of the letter or of the spirit of some Old Testament passage. There they were separate bells, and Jesus brought them together in a chime, as Henry Ward Beecher once said. The command to love our neighbor as ourselves is quoted from Leviticus 19: 18. As to the Golden Rule, Jesus himself said it was a summary of the law and the prophets (Matt. 7: 12). The command to love our enemies is also a quotation from the Old Testament (Ex. 23: 4, 5; Prov. 20: 22).

Second: Christ quoted the Old Testament law as binding in its principles on all countries and on all ages. Five times he put his seal upon the Decalogue as the law not of the Jews only, but of the world. Attacked by the devil, he used a leaf of Deuteronomy as an impenetrable shield. (Matt. 4: 1-11.) He quoted the imperative precepts of the Old Testament as binding, and treated the entire Old Testament as a volume of decisions from a Supreme Court.

Third: Christ quoted numerous Old Testament prophecies as fulfilled in himself, thus attesting that the prophets spoke not of themselves, but by the inspiration of God; as Peter puts it, "swept along like ships before the wind by the Holy Spirit." Jesus said of Moses, "He wrote of me," and of the entire Old Testament Scriptures, "They testify of me." He declared that the prophecy of Malachi in regard to the forerunner of the Messiah was fulfilled in John the Baptist. Look for the red stars in the Red Letter Bible. Each verse so marked embodies a prophetic reference to Christ.

He quoted Isaiah's account of the Messiah's miracles as a description of his own. Three times he said that his rejection by the Jews had been foretold in Old Testament prophecies. He spoke twice of his betrayal in the same way, and also of his anticipated crucifixion.

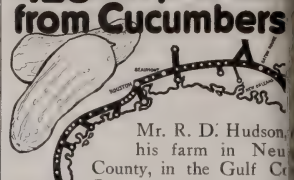
Fourth: Christ interpreted some of the imprecatory Psalms as having symbolic reference to the enemies of the Messiah. It should be remembered that the very same books that we think of bound together as the Old Testament were considered a complete group of manuscripts, though they were then in separate rolls, and they were known as the Law, the Prophets, and the Writings. This last term applied to the Psalms, Proverbs and other books lying between the historical and prophetic portions of the Old Testament. These books had not only been collected by Ezra four centuries before Jesus was born, but they had been translated into the Greek Septuagint nearly three centuries before his birth.

Fifth: Christ reaffirmed the Old Testament righteous warnings against wrongdoing. It is sometimes said that the Old Testament reveals God as a stern Monarch, the New as a loving Father; but as a matter of fact, while there is more about God's tenderness in the New than in the Old, he is oftener called "our Father" in the Old than in the New, and only in the Old Testament is he compared to a mother, while Matthew, the Gospel of Reckoning, written by a converted tax-collector, is the severest book in all the Bible.

Sixth: Christ declared that immortality was revealed and known in Old Testament times. He quoted the passage, "I am the God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob," from the Old Testament, saying by way of comment, "God is not the God of the dead, but of the living," seeing in that passage a declaration of the immortality of these old patriarchs; and it is passing strange that there should be any doubt of it when in the synagogues of to-day immortality is taught as one of the three fundamental principles of Judaism.

The Old Testament Miracles

Seventh: Christ indorsed the truthfulness of the great historic events and miracles recorded in the Old Testament, especially all those most sneered at to-day. It has been well said that he connected his six greatest doctrines with six of the Bible stories that he saw would be most ridiculed.



(1) Salvation by the Cross he illustrated by the serpent uplifted in the wilderness to save the bitten Israelites. (2) Fidelity in the Christian pathway he linked with the warning story of Lot's wife, who looked back as she fled from burning Sodom. (3) Growth in grace he linked with the miracle of the manna which God sent from heaven to feed the Israelites in their journey through the wilderness. (4) Final judgment he grouped with the miracle of Sodom's destruction by fire from heaven. (5) His second coming he linked to the story of Noah and the Flood. (6) His resurrection he thrust into the bundle of life with the story of Jonah.

As to the apostles on the Mount of Transfiguration, when Moses and Elijah appeared so that the leading members of the Old Testament and the New were grouped around the Saviour, the voice from heaven cried, "This is my beloved Son, hear ye him," so, when confusing voices come to us about the Old Testament, it is well for us to climb above the world and open our New Testaments to see what Jesus said, and it is reasonable for us to rest upon that without a doubt. Faith is the highest reasoning, because it accepts the conclusions of the perfect Reasoner. The difference between a reasonable Christian and one who seeks to monopolize the name of "rationalist" is that a Christian makes one great use of reasoning in examining the claims

Continued on page 1306

* The International Quarterly Review for December 31, 1911. GOLDEN TEXT: "If we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness." I. John 1:9.

$125 net per Acre from Cucumbers

Mr. R. D. Hudson, his farm in Neu County, in the Gulf C County of Texas and Lo iana, averages $125 an a net profit on his cucumb He planted them in February marketed them in March.

Think of it—enough profit in two months more than pay for the land, and 10 months in which to grow two other crops.

Two and three crops a year is not unusua the Gulf Coast Country of Texas and Louisi for they have twelve months of growing weat Making money down there is not difficult. man with ordinary intelligence can make g in the Gulf Coast Country of Texas and Louisi Thousands of men have left the stores, offi and factories of the north to go down there lead an independent, out-of-door life. They joy being their own boss, and piling up t own bank account feels good to them.

Better look into this.

Investigate! Go down there this fall or win See and talk to these growers. Then you realize the big opportunities open to you. trip, by the Frisco, will alone be worth the l cost of going. Excursion fares, via the Fri the first and third Tuesdays of each month, m the trip inexpensive.

The Frisco Lines operate splendid elec lighted, all steel trains, daily, from Chica St. Louis, Kansas City, Birmingham and N Orleans. These trains carry through cars, da and on excursion days, through tourist sleep to the Gulf Coast Company.

3 Splendid Books FREE

One on the Mid-Coast country of Texas, one the lower irrigated sections of the Rio Gra Valley and one on Lo iana, all beautifully il trated, showing scenes actual colors. They scribe the country crops from one end to other, giving examples successes and personal statements by men v have gone there and made good. Write for y free copies to-day, while you think of it.

FRISCO LINES

A. HILTON, General Passenger Agen

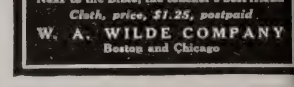
1426 Frisco Building, St. Louis, M

PELOUBET'S SELECT NOTES

The World's Greatest Commentary on the International Sunday School Lessons for 1912

By REV. F. N. PELOUBET, D.D. and PROF. AMOS R. WELLS, A.M.

38th ANNUAL VOLUME



Next to the Bible, the teacher's best friend

Cloth, price, $1.25, postpaid

W. A. WILDE COMPANY

Boston and Chicago

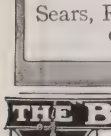
AGENTS! BIG PROFI

The Only Stropper that Strops any Razor Diagonally

Guaranteed for Life

Brandt's Patented Automatic Razor Stropper. Automatically puts a perfect edge on any razor, old style or sa Big seller. Every man wants one. quick for terms, prices and territory. C. Brandt Cutlery Co., 84 W. B'dw'y,

WANTED MEN



Prepare as Firemen, Brakemen, Elec tric Motormen, Train Porters (colored Hundreds put to work—$65 to $150 month. No experience necessary. 50 More Wanted. Enclose stamp for Appl cation Blank and Book. State positio

International Railway Corr. Institute, Dept. 16 Indianapolis, Indian

FREE OIL

Generous sample "3-in-One" for your sewing machine; perfectly; won't gum, collect dust, turn rancid; lasts lo free from acid. Write 3-in-One Oil Co., 42 C. H. Bdwy.,

THE BEST LIGHT

BEST BY TEST

makes and burns its own gas. Costs 2c. a week to operate. No dirt, grease nor odor. A pure white light, more brilliant than electricity or acetylene. None other so cheap or effective. Agents wanted. Write for catalogue and prices.

THE BEST LIGHT CO. 3-70 E. 5th Street, Canton, O.

YOU CAN WRITE A SHORT STORY

Beginners learn thoroughly under our perfect method many sell their stories before completing the course. We help those who want to sell their stories. Write for particulars. School of Short-Story Writing, Dept. 44, Page Bldg. Chicago are they who turn away from the example of the foolish spenders of money for that which "satisfieth not." The wise man desires "Knowledge rather than choice gold." "Knowledge is pleasant unto his soul." He seeketh it as silver, and searcheth for it "as for hid treasures."

The Wise Men at Christmas Time

"The Man Who Knows" Shall Enter the Door of Success With a Sure Foot and With No Delay

He wants his sons and his daughters to do the same, and he provides them, gladly, as the most practical and valuable Christmas Gift, this Treasure-Store of Knowledge:

THE WORLD-WIDE ENCYCLOPEDIA

The wisest expenditure of Christmas money will be the placing of this Rich Library of Knowledge in the home.

"Through wisdom is an house builded; and by understanding it is established; and by Knowledge shall the chambers be filled with all precious and pleasant riches."

The most permanent and beneficial Christmas Gift is this splendid stepping stone to a lifelong success in the business world.

Only One Dollar of Your Christmas Money Required to Bring You At Once this Great Twelve-Volume Encyclopedia

Rich in Biographies

Hundreds of the Biographies contained in The World-Wide Encyclopedia are strong character studies which no young man can read without being deeply impressed with their valuable lessons. These lives of great men splendidly illustrate how and why they achieved greatness—often in the face of bitter reverses—by virtue of sheer force of character. In the careers of these statesmen, poets, painters, philanthropists, scientists, and reformers of all countries, a veritable history of the world stands out in living characters, full of dramatic human interest. It is a library for home reading.

Twelve Large Volumes

The World-Wide Encyclopedia is in Twelve Large Octavo Volumes, containing 9,807 pages and 96 maps. It is durably bound in heavy silk-finished cloth, with gold stamps. The set stands 9 inches high and fills 26 inches of shelf space.

A Wonderful Bargain for Christian Herald Readers

The fact that Only One Dollar need be paid before the entire set is shipped, and then Only One Dollar a Month, makes it possible for families that really need a complete, reliable Encyclopedia, but cannot spend a fortune for one, to get possession at once of this splendid World-Wide Encyclopedia.

Send this coupon at once with the first One Dollar, and The World-Wide Encyclopedia will be boxed and shipped to you promptly, freight charges payable at your end.

A Storehouse of Information

In all the important branches of Commerce, Manufacturing, Agriculture, Mining, Transportation and Business, the vital facts and figures are fully given. In Mechanics and Modern Applied Sciences the latest and best information is given in detail. Literature, Religion, Education, Art—all are treated fully and authentically. Banking, Coinage, Finances of the World are ably discussed. Woman's work and progress are fully set forth. All live subjects of political parties, labor and capital, national policies and problems, are intelligently handled.

The Key to the study of The World-Wide Encyclopedia, which accompanies every set FREE, will help you to pursue, easily, any particular course of reading you may desire.

SEND THIS COUPON QUICKLY AND GET THIS RICH PRIZE AT ONCE FOR ONLY.. $1.00 DOWN

We fully guarantee every set. If it is not entirely satisfactory, return it within 10 days, and get your money back. We pay return express-age.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD BOOK DEPT. 481 Bible House, New York

Gentlement: — Please send me at once one of the sets of The World-Wide Encyclopedia, offered to your subscribers at the Special Price of $12.00,* payable $1.00 down and $1.00 a month for eleven months. I enclose the first $1.00 and I agree to pay the balance at the rate of $1.00 a month. You guarantee satisfaction.

12-20-'11

Signed .....

P. O. .....

Freight or Express Office .....

Date ..... State .....

*If you send remittance in full with order, you may deduct 10 per cent. from the price.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Book Department, BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK

The Song of the Dawn

Continued from page 1303

refrained with a smile, thinking of Anton and the morning. Last of all the wonderful Christmas piece of manger and Christ-child was tied reverently high over her own child's head, and the little tree was complete.

Only a tiny oil lamp lighted the room, but Esther lifted it and held it near, and a warm Christmas joy flooded her face in its flickering light, as she gazed at the tree trimmed in honor of the Babe born in the manger at Bethlehem long ago, and for the pleasure of the child asleep beneath its branches. She set the lamp down at last with a sigh of content, and her thought flew far from the place where she stood, over the icy river to Anton, holding vigil under the starry sky this Christmas eve.

When Anton went out bundled to his ears, he had taken his course over the well-trodden path of the river, to the open canal on the other side, for he had been chosen to trouble the waters in the open space during the night, that the long canal might not freeze over and delay the work next day. All night long he walked up and down, moving his pike through the water, sometimes walking quickly to keep a glow of warmth in his body, at other times slackening his pace to gaze at the lights along shore, and the myriads of stars over his head.

Once he saw a Christmas tree in a brilliantly lighted window, and children looking out into the night, and his thought traveled fast across the river to Esther and Tony, and the little Christmas tree behind the cradle, as Esther's thought had reached out to him.

One by one the lights went out along shore, and the hours grew large, then small, as the lone watchman trod his beat, and the stars blazed brighter, and yet brighter, against the dark sky. It was on a night like this that the shepherds watching their sheep on the Judean plain heard the song of the angels, and the wise men saw the star that led to the manger. Anton knew the story well, and brought with him from Hungary a half belief in the tradition that one might still hear the song of the angels on Christmas Eve.

All night long he watched and listened as he trod his icy beat, and when the cold was keenest just before the dawn, and the faithful watch was drawing to its close, there floated over the ice the far-off notes of joy that he had waited for. They seemed to hover over the village, then flow in waves out over the ice, and die away in sweetest notes. Sometimes the music swelled till one could almost hear words, strange words, but full of joy: "Venite, adoremus Dominum," they seemed to say; then down the river between the banks under the stars the music lost itself.

Anton had heard the angel's song. The tradition was true. He had known a great joy, and the awe of it filled his soul.

Back in the little home he told the wonderful story, and a hint of the glory shone in Esther's eyes. But Tony was dancing about the room with uneven steps, pulling a cart a neighbor had given him, and talking baby talk about the tree, tugging at his father's hand to see its beauty; and Esther was dishing up a hot breakfast for her weary husband, so they forgot for the time the angel's song, in the comfort of the home the love of the Christ-child had made complete.

It came back again with all its sweetness when father, mother, and child trod the river path together in the glow of the late December afternoon, Anton carrying Tony on his shoulder. The work had gone on all day, for the ice crop had looked very doubtful, and no chances could be taken.

Esther and Tony were to have a treat, a ride in a chariot not made by man's hands, a boat that never saw a shipyard or a sail. Esther was just a little fearful at first, till Anton showed her the glistening ice cakes ten inches thick; then she stepped bravely across a half-inch crack onto a moving ice field. It was as solid as mother earth beneath her feet, as it slid steadily through the water of the canal, Anton drawing it along with his pick. Tony laughed, and put his toes in the markings of the smaller blocks, and Esther's cheeks grew red with excitement and pleasure, before they reached their journey's end.

There were merry parties skating on the glare new ice, formed over the fields where the thick cakes had been removed. Fathers and mothers drew their children on hand sleds over the frozen surface, or held tiny novices on skates by the hand. Ferry sleighs came and went over the beaten road, but no one of them all enjoyed the Christmas outing more than Esther and Tony, in their crystal chariot, as it sailed smoothly along.

"Look!" said one of the ice boys to Esther. "See, I've got an ice ticket. First one I ever had. Tony'll have one some day," and Tony lifted up his tiny hand to take possession.

"Yes, Tony work too. Big boy," said Esther with a smile. One by one the merry-makers had left the glistening river as the Christmas sun dipped toward the horizon. Waves of crimson and green and gold flooded the western sky, and were reflected in the open spaces of the water, and in the shining cakes of ice being carried up the runs.

Anton and Esther and Tony had started homeward with the rest, but their path lay across the river, not to the near shore, so for half an hour they traveled onward in the glory of the setting sun.

As they neared the further shore, they stopped and looked back over the way they had come, and Anton, pointing toward a church steeple against the sky in the little village behind them, said, "Dere I heard de Angel's Song dis morn. De words was strange, but I know de music. It say "Peace, Peace on earth. Good things for men."

Sunday School Lesson

Continued from page 1304

of Christ to be the Son of God, and, having been persuaded by his matchless life, matchless words, and matchless influence upon the world as a threefold present miracle that he is more than man, counts it the highest reasoning to accept his word on whatever he speaks, using imperfect human reasoning only on those matters on which the perfect Reasoner has not spoken; while the so-called rationalists, on the other hand, depend on their own personal reasoning alone for discerning between good and evil, even on those subjects on which Christ, confessedly greater expert in religion than themselves, has definitely spoken.

The Golden Text

"If we confess our sins, he is just and faithful to forgive us our sins." The writer of this lesson marks in his Bible with a cross every verse which he knows to have led to the conversion of a soul. Some of these crosses are to be found in most unexpected places, particularly in the Old Testament. The promise of salvation began in Eden (Gen. 3: 15).

How like the Scribes and Pharisees, who counted the letters of the Old Testament but failed to find Christ in them, are those who to-day devote their study chiefly to the letter of the Old Testament and miss its transforming Spirit! If all the conversions in Christian history were thus noted, crosses would appear in every book of the Old Testament, which proves itself inspired by inspiring noble lives in the hearts of men.

Sarah Louise (Ensign) Cady

Died November 8, 1911

IN THE death of Mrs. Cady, the Broadway Tabernacle has suffered a grievous loss. She had for the twelve years of her residence in New York City labored faithfully in the societies connected with this noble church. As a member or officer of other organizations, she had also been most active and efficient. She was vice-president of the New York Branch of the W. B. M.; a life member of the Home Missionary Society; a manager of the Harlem Y. W. C. A.; treasurer of the Stony Wold Sanatorium Association; member of the Woman's National Sabbath Alliance; and a faithful member of several secular societies, such as the D. A. R. and certain literary clubs of high standing.

Mrs. Cady was born in Northampton, Mass., September 13, 1829, the daughter of Salmon and Melinda (Coff) Ensign. At the age of three years, her parents then residing in Hartford, she was placed in one of the Pestalozzian Infant Schools, at that time very popular. Her education was completed at the famous old Westfield (Mass.) Academy, and the Normal School of the same town. For several years she adorned the profession of teaching, until she married in 1850 Mr. Henry Stearns Cady of Springfield, Mass. Upon his death, in 1865, Mrs. Cady returned to educational work. For five years she was associate principal of the then well known Maplewood Institute of Pittsfield, Mass. In 1870 she removed to New Haven and founded the West End Institute for Young Ladies, with which her name and fame are most intimately associated. When she had reached the age of seventy, she felt that it was time for her to retire. That year the largest class in the history of the Institute was graduated, and it was felt to be a serious loss to New Haven when Mrs. Cady gave up her work and removed to New York. Here, surrounded by her two devoted daughters and her grandchildren, she has spent her last years in the beneficent activities of church and society. She was for many years a reader of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and a subscriber to its charities. A noble and faithful servant has entered into the joy of her Lord.

FULL OF VALUABLE INFORMATION

I have just received The Christian Herald Almanac for 1912, and I thank you very much for it. It has much valuable information in it, and I am sure it will be appreciated by every one. Respectfully, Greensboro, Ga. MISS M. R.

WE WANT AGENTS

to make big money selling the marvellous Contraco Lamp — sells on sight. Send NOW for special terms

CONTRACO LAMP

(Kerosene Incandescent Mantle)

Gives nearly 100 candle power light.

Made on centre-draft principle; blue flame—no odor. Round wick — no uneven edges. Regular 12-inch chimney. Consumes only one quart oil in 20 hours. Made of Brass, nickel-plated. No soldered parts to melt. Perfect in design, construction and operation. Guaranteed. Better light — less cost. Write for FREE Book, "The Light," and special terms.

Connecticut Trading Co.
Box D
Clinton, Conn.

PEARLS
XMAS

Frederic's famous scientific pearls in Graduated Strings, including Artificial Pearl and Diamond Cluster Clasp. Regularly sold at $5.00 SPECIAL $3.00
Illustrated Catalog Sent for 10c Postage

Three New York Stores FREDERICS Unusual Jewelry Manufacturers
Address Mail Order Office
53 West 37th St., New York

The Pinless Safety-Pi
Secure, Neat, Comfortable

INSURES uniform tension of cloth, whi conforms to all parts of the body. Ca slip off. No pin to injure child or loosen. Eas adjusted. Lasts a lifetime. Price, postage p paid, triple plate silver 25c; heavy gold pla 50c. Initials or birth date engraved FREE. gold pin if desired. Order from this ad. Se coin or stamps. Money back if not satisfi

THE PINLESS SAFETY-PIN CO.
14 Main and Canal Sts. Cincinnati.

Nulite Gasoline Table Lamp

A complete Light Plant weighing 7 lbs. Portable, absolutely safe, 300 c. p. brilliant light ½ cent per hour. Saves 90% of your light bill.

AGENTS—Write for Special Offer on complete line of gasoline lights and systems. Over 200 different styles. Highest Quality. Lowest Prices. Exclusive territory for capable town, county and traveling salesmen. 72 page illustrated catalog free. Write today.

NATIONAL STAMPING & ELECTRIC WORKS
413 So. Clinton St., Chicago, U. S. A.

The best boy during the next few weeks receives a Shetland Pony

Boy Wanted

We want a bright, intelligent boy (over seven and under fourteen years of age) to do a little work for us after school every Wednesday. You can do it easily in your own home neighborhood.

Parents

Your boy is making his life now. The CHRISTIAN HERALD training for him in selling and keeping his small accounts will stand him in good stead in later years. Stand behind him if he wants to earn regular pocket money and many prizes.

The Work

BOYS: The CHRISTIAN HERALD work is manly work. It is also easy. We will tell you how and where to sell copies and secure weekly customers for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Our Free two-color booklet will please you.

No money necessary to start, as we send the first fifty cents' worth Free. In this way we give you the money necessary for buying your next week's supply.

When applying give your full name and address and age

Sales Department, The Christian Herald, New York

Young People's Societies

A Glorious Future*

THE poets are called "the only truth-tellers left to God," and they are nearly unanimous in their belief in immortality that we may quite disregard the sad wail of those who, like Tennyson, see "beyond this place of wrath and tears" only "the horror of the shade." Let us turn to a far greater poet, who considers the question, "Does the soul survive the body?" equivalent to "Is there God's self, or not?" In other words, he cannot conceive of a God who does not provide everlasting life for his creatures. He reasons that "every actor somewhere in this earthly scene fails," and therefore it is reasonable to expect

> . . somewhere new existence, led by men and women new > Possibly attains perfection.

He endorses, he says, "the phrase of solemn Tuscan fashioned," "I believe and I declare, from this life I pass into a better." He notes the universal "want" of the race for immortality. Why should this want exist? "Because, without it, life, now human, would be brutish," and that hope makes the actual life worth leading." He weighs against each other all the arguments which men have advanced on both sides, and makes "Reason" say:

> Up this life's success or failure! Soon shall all things be unperplexed,
> And the right and wrong, now tangled, lie unraveled in the next.

"Truly, there needs another life to me," and, thank God, we have his blessed promise of that life.

But first there is a life to live here below, and on that, and on the way we live it, depends the eternal future. Fortunately it comes to us little by little.

Therefore let us enter upon this new year with faith and joy. The months will wheel around in the same beautiful procession as of old. Seedtime and harvest shall not fail. The violets may open earlier or later than usual, but by mid-June all the splendor of nature will be shining. July and August will hold, in spite of all their heats, many gracious and quickening moments. Then the harvest will crown the year, and its large, slow moons will light up the stacked corn and the laden boughs. Then the grain and the fruit will be gathered into the barns and the frosts will crackle the leaves, and Thanksgiving Day and Christmas and New Year's will come around again.

And each little day will hold its quota of sorrows and of joys, of trials and of comforts; but nothing can disturb us so long as we hold the hand of our blessed Leader and hear his voice saying, "I will not leave you nor forsake you."

*Topic of the Epworth League for Sunday, December 31. TEXTS: I. John 3: 2; I. Cor. 13: 9, 10, 12.

Better Next Year*

SOME one has said that we have to learn by hard schooling that the best joys in life are those of the mind and the soul. Far too many of us are always longing inordinately for earthly luxuries. Who among your friends is pining for righteousness and for God, as the hart panteth after the water brooks? It is safe to say that compared with the number that so long, the number is infinitely greater of those who are hotly struggling after some earthly toy, like an automobile, a motor-boat, or similar mundane pleasures and amusements. The mortal within us fights with the immortal and too often downs it.

But many a man who really wants the best things, and struggles valiantly to rise, fails because he does not know just how to proceed. Commander Peary relates that on one of his trips he left the ship on a certain day, and with dogs and sledges started to traverse a great icefield. Day after day they traveled. Everything seemed propitious and he hoped to attain a higher latitude than ever before. After some days he took an observation, and found to his dismay that his party was farther south than when they had left the ship. The unfailing and steadfast stars he knew had told him the truth, and he left the icefield as soon as possible, for it was plain to see that it had been drifting southward as fast as he had been trying to travel northward.

Let us be sure that we are really making progress. God has given us moral guide-posts as sure as the stars are to the mariner. Let us watch them. If Peary had turned sooner to the stars, he would have earlier learned his mistake.

Dr. Banks tells us a story of the great Paris merchant, Julian Legrand. He reached at one time a crisis in his business when $100,000 was absolutely necessary to avoid failure. He went forth and sought a loan among his friends, but times were hard and nobody had money to spare. Utterly discouraged, he returned to his office. As he sat there, gloomy and despairing, a tap sounded on his door. A man was admitted who, without any preface, said briskly, "I hear, Mr. Legrand, that you desire to borrow $100,000." "Yes." "Draw me your note for a year, without interest, for that amount, and I will give you my check for it," said the stranger.

"What does this mean?" stammered the astonished merchant. "Who are you, and why are you doing me this favor?"

"When I was a small boy," replied this unexpected friend, "you came as a commissioner of education on examination day, to the public school which I attended. I was poor and shabbily dressed. I thought you would pay attention to the richer men's children, but I expected none for myself. I recited poorly, but after the exercises you put your hand on my head, spoke some kind words, told me to persevere, and assured me that the way to honor was open to every child and that all I had to do was to be resolute and push on. That, sir, was the turning-point in my life. I began to aspire, and that I am now a wealthy man is due to the kind and wise words which you spoke to me that day. This loan is but a poor return for what you did for me."

That advice is as true to-day as ever. Follow it and you will succeed in worldly affairs; but far more important are resolution and aspiration in the realm of soul, where the treasures are unfading and the joys endure forever.

*Christian Endeavor Topic for Sunday, December 31. TEXT: Phil. 3: 12-14.

SUITABLE PRESENT

From Anyone to Anyone

It Lasts! It's Beautiful! It's Fragrant! It's Anti-moth!

$17.75

$21.75

Window Seat and Chest combined

United States Red Cedar Works, Nashville, Tennessee

CORNS

No matter how long you had them or how troublesome. A Cozn Salve will cure them. Quick, safe, sure. 15 cents at druggists or by mail.

Cozn Chemical Co., Philadelphia

Beware of "Gasoline Doping"

It is a favorite trick of the professional "gyps" who infest the great horse markets—also the "ginger trick" and the "artificial tail" frame-up. These smooth dodges and all the other rascalities of these brazen scamps are laid bare in by Dr. A. S. Alexander, famous veterinarian. The only complete book of horse-trading swindles ever published as far as we know. Farm Journal has distributed seven editions of this book—75,000 copies—in the past two years. We want every farmer to have one for his protection against roguery and for the valuable information this book also contains about the feeding and conditioning of stock and the cure of diseases and bad habits.

"Horse Secrets"

The warning advice contained in this book and in the pages of Farm Journal have probably saved "Our Folks" $100,000 in the past year. Subscribers constantly write to tell us of the cash value—dollars and cents—they have received from

FARM JOURNAL

This wise little paper will be of real money-saving and money-making value to you. No other farm paper is so broad in its scope—so intensely practical—so interesting in its presentation of facts—so helpful and entertaining in its columns devoted to the home—so strict in its demands that all its advertisers shall be absolutely reliable.

You need it for yourself and your family—and you can have Farm Journal every month for four years and Horse Secrets at once, postpaid, for only $1.00.

Send for them at once, and if, on receipt of the book, you don't believe that in it alone you have more than your money's worth, say so and we'll stop the paper at once.

If you order promptly, we will send, absolutely free, "Poor Richard Revived"—our splendid new Almanac for 1912.

FARM JOURNAL, 184 N. Clifton St., Philadelphia

THE BRAIN

is the force that keeps the nerves well poised and controls firm, strong muscles.

Men and women who do the world's work can avoid Brain-fag and guard their health by feeding brain and body with

Scott's Emulsion

ALL DRUGGISTS

11-60

STUDY By Mail FARMING

Why not learn the improved methods of intensive scientific agriculture at home? No room here to tell of our fine proposition. Faculty of experts, many courses—General Farming, Poultry, Truck, Fruit, Dairying, Live Stock, etc., and how we teach you to farm your farm. Just send postal to-day telling what line of farming interests you and receive the interesting particulars, and our

VALUABLE BOOKLET FREE

"How to Make the Farm Pay More"

More profit for the farmer. A safe way out for the city man. Also Agricultural Course for Rural Ministers. Your opportunity to get ahead. Easy terms. Write to-day

AMERICAN FARMERS SCHOOL, 112 Laird Bldg., Minneapolis, Minn.

If YOU Would Be Successful Stop Forgetting

MEMORY the BASIS of all KNOWLEDGE

THE KEY TO SUCCESS

Send today for my FREE BOOK "HOW TO REMEMBER"—Faces, Names, Studies—Develops Will, Concentration, Self-Confidence, Conversation, Public Speaking. Increases income. Address

DICKSON MEMORY SCHOOL, 701 Auditorium Bldg., CHICAGO

I TRUST YOU TEN DAYS. SEND NO MONEY.

$2 Hair Switch Sent on Approval. Choice of Natural wavy or straight hair. Send a lock of your hair, and we will mail a 22 inch short stem fine human hair switch to match. If you find it a big bargain remit $2.98 in ten days, or sell 3 and GET YOUR SWITCH FREE. Extra shades a little more. Inclose 5c postage.

Free beauty shows our latest style of hair dressing—also high grade switches, pompadours, wigs, puffs, etc. Women wanted to sell our hair goods. ANNA AYERS,

Dept. B83 22 Quincy Street, Chicago

THIS NEW HAIR BRUSH COMBS AND BRUSHES THE HAIR AND MASSAGES THE SCALP.

The greatest modern invention for keeping the hair beautiful and fluffy and the scalp clean, healthful and free from dandruff or dirt. Keep the scalp clean and properly massaged and nature will grow the hair. Write for free circular.

AGENTS WANTED.

DR. GEORGE LYMAN, 217 Hill St., Peoria, Ill.

LITTLE BEAUTY NIGHT LAMP

65c

Once filled with kerosene it will burn 40 hours. Absolutely odorless. Handsomely constructed of brass, nickel-plated. Provided with wick to last several years. Can be used in cities, halls, stairs, closets, nursery and sick-room. At your dealer or by mail (postpaid) 65c.

SILVER & COMPANY 320 Hewes Street, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Beginners' credentials sent.

ACENTS WANTED

Print Your Own

Cards, circulars, books, newspaper. Press $5. Larger $18. Rotary $60. Save money. Big profit printing for others. All easy, rules sent. Write factory for press catalog, type cards, paper, &c.

THE PRESS CO., - Meriden, - Connecticut

OXALBITOL

AN ANTISEPTIC DRESSING

that is better than any other preparation for healing cuts, ulcers or wounds of any sort. Write name on druggist's or a bottle will be sent to you [illegible] 25 cents

OXALBITOL CO. Honesdale, Pa.

PATENTS That Protect and Pay

Advice and Books FREE. Rates Reasonable. Highest References. Best Services. WATSON E. COLEMAN, Patent Lawyer, WASHINGTON, D. C.

★SUMMER VACATIONS IN EUROPE—A few tours to organizers of small parties. Cash commissions also paid. Write today for our booklets and offers. RIA-LOMBARD-TANSAN, Box A084, Wilmington, Del.

Victor

Victor-Victrola XVI
Mahogany or quartered oak, $200

Where there's a Victor-Victrola on Christmas morning, there will be joy and happiness all year around.

This wonderful instrument fills a great gap in the daily lives of people everywhere—brings the world's best music right into the home for every one to enjoy.

And no home need be without a Victor-Victrola now.

$15, $25, $40, $50, $75, $100, $150, $200, $250.

Victors $10 to $100

Your dealer will gladly arrange terms to suit your convenience.

Victor Talking Machine Co., Camden, N. J. U. S. A.

Berlin Gramophone Co., Montreal, Canadian Distributors.

Always use Victor Records played with Victor Needles—there is no other way to get the unequaled Victor tone.

Victor Needles 6 cents per 100, 60 cents per 1000

Victor-Victrola VI

Victor-Victrola X
Mahogany or oak, $75

Christian Herald

SUBSCRIPTION, $1.50 PER ANNUM
PUBLISHED 52 TIMES A YEAR

COPYRIGHT, 1911, BY THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

New York, December 27, 1911

VOL. 34—NO. 52. PRICE 5 CENTS
OFFICES: BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK

"AGE OF INNOCENCE"—From the painting by Sir Joshua Reynolds

OUR · MAIL · BAG

Questions and Answers

PROFESSOR HUGH EVANDER WILLIS of the Law College, University of Minnesota, sends this beautiful and inspiring New Year's greeting to the members of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Family Circle:

"A HAPPY NEW YEAR!

"You, who have tried to gain happiness outside of the Kingdom of Heaven, who have refused to take out its naturalization papers because you have thought it is what churches sing about or theologians quarrel about, read the Sermon on the Mount (that is the constitution of the Kingdom of Heaven!); and if you decide for yourself that you would like life under such a constitution—as I know you will—enter the rich land of service, live one year according to the principles of love, and then tell me whether or not one should be a citizen of the Kingdom of Heaven!"

Mrs. A. B. O., Boones Path, Va. Is Brooks' comet a wandering comet, or has its orbit been computed? If so, when will it reappear? Give size of comet, and length of tail.

This question was submitted to Professor S. P. Leland, of Sea Breeze, Fla., who answers as follows: "The comet now visible in the early morning, in the eastern sky, was discovered by Mr. Brooks on the morning of October 17, 1893. It had a short tail issuing from the northern side of the head, in addition to the main tail. Three days after this the comet was photographed by Dr. Barnard at the Lick Observatory. Its tail was then shortened and doubled over itself. Its period of revolution has not been definitely ascertained."

C. J. K., Cleveland, O. 1. Please explain Luke 16: 8, 9. 2. Can a Christian support either political party? 3. Can a Christian work every Sunday, or every Sunday forenoon, or every other Sunday all day, and thus neglect the hearing of the word of God and the church services?

1. This is an oft-discussed passage, its apparent obscurity arising from imperfect rendering in the translation. Jesus did not commend the purpose or object of the unjust steward, which was palpably dishonest, but he pointed out his keen foresight, sagacity, skill and prudence. It was as though he had said: "Observe the thoroughness and efficiency this man displays in his wickedness. If that same talent were applied with equal determination in a righteous cause, it would accomplish much. If the children of light employed similar skill and ability for noble and high purposes, they would do well. Why should the children of this world be wiser than the children of light? Verse 9 means that we should learn how to turn to the highest spiritual advantage those material opportunities which worldly men grasp only to abuse; so that when we fail (i. e., when this life and its problems come to an end) we may have those we have helped to rise up as witnesses for us. 2. His politics, like everything else in his life, should be a matter of conscience. We see no reason why he should not support the good men of either party. 3. One who devotes the Lord's day to business and who does not value the privilege of worship sufficiently to exercise it, is a very indifferent sort of Christian. We would not judge others, however, especially if not knowing all the facts in the case.

W. B. S., Lindsay, Can. What is your view as to the correct interpretation of the story of the young man who came to Christ, inquiring what he must do to inherit eternal life? I have always heard the interpretation that the young man was a perfectly moral man, but not a saved man. Some time ago, I heard a prominent minister give it an entirely different interpretation. He stated that, in answer to his inquiry, Christ practically replied that, to be saved (just ordinarily saved), he should keep the commandments. Upon the young man having admitted that he had done this from his youth, the minister virtually put Christ in the position of having said to the young man, "Well, then you are a saved man. You don't need to be saved; what you want is to be perfect, that is, to accomplish the higher purposes of life." The question is, was the young man a saved man when he came to Christ, or not?

The sincerity of the young man was obvious; yet he himself felt that although he had lived a clean moral life, keeping the letter of the law in absolute strictness, there was yet something wanting. He was not satisfied with his own blameless life. It was to find out what this hidden need was that he came to the Master, and asked, "What lack I yet?" Jesus, reading his heart, knew that his wealth stood as a barrier between him and the spiritual life he craved; that the influence and social position it gave were so dear to him that he could not bear to part with them, even to attain his ideal of a perfect life. His riches were his idol, and this the Master knew. So when Jesus in his wisdom put the test, forcing the young man to choose between riches and heaven—that he must himself cast aside the stumbling-block in his spiritual path—he failed at the crisis, turned his back upon the Master, and went away sorrowful. Jesus demanded an absolute surrender of the heart and the whole life, the placing of all in the scale as a heart offering. Good works could not save, but sacrifice of our works and our wealth brings us into a new and divine relationship as true heirs to the kingdom. See Matt. 19: 29, in which the spiritual compensation for such sacrifice is promised. The rich young ruler came very near to the kingdom, but without entering in. His own estimate of his obedience was not justified, for if he had indeed kept the first commandment he would have placed God first, above even his much-prized earthly treasures, and he would never have gone away from Christ.

J. H. S., Harrison, Mich. 1. Please explain John 13: 14. 2. Also Matt. 6: 9.

1. This passage is not to be interpreted in the narrow, literal sense, as has often been done by popes and emperors. It means that we must be willing and glad to do the humblest service for each other. In a climate where people wore sandals and where the pervading limestone dust mingled with the dry soil and made foot-washing a daily necessity, it was obviously one of the first services for comfort. In climates where such conditions do not exist, the same object illustration cannot apply, though the spiritual application remains. 2. Jesus had been speaking of heathen and hypocritical prayers, and now, in sharp contrast, he taught his followers how to approach God in simple, reverent petition, giving them this perfect prayer as a perpetual model. It has been the universal prayer of the Christian Church and is as applicable to-day to many spiritual and natural needs as when it was first spoken by Jesus on the Mount.

Mrs. F. Q. T., DeFuniak Springs, Fla., and A. L. W., Warsaw, N. C. Did the woman with a "familiar spirit" really "bring up" Samuel from the other world?

Not a few books have been written on the question asked in this letter—whether there was a real apparition or an imposture. Some of the early writers of the Church took the former view, believing, however, that it was Satan's work. Origen held it as an imposture, pure and simple. Saul apparently saw nothing, but listened to her description of the figure of an aged man. The wretched king, forsaken of God, had thought to wrest from the powers of darkness some forecast of the future. The Hebrew words which describe the woman call her a mistress (or priestess) of Ob. The oboth dealt with familiar spirits and were called ventriloquists, because the god or spirit supposed to be in them spoke through them, without perceptible motion of the lips.

N. J. D., Mooreshill, Ind. What is the meaning of the last part of Deut. 8: 3? The verse is in red in my Red Letter Bible.

The meaning is that real life does not come and is not sustained by food, but by communion with God. God communicates with us through his Word, and in that Word we find life and nourishment, even though the physical body might perish from lack of food. The verse is in red because it was quoted by Jesus in Matt. 4: 4 and Luke 4: 4.

A Corner of 34th Street and Broadway, New York, that Sold for $1,000,000

NEGOTIATIONS have recently been closed in another deal for what is generally regarded as the most remarkable and the most talked-about bit of real estate in New York City—the northwest corner of Broadway and Thirty-fourth Street. The last owner announced that he had sold it for one million dollars cash. The little corner has a Broadway frontage of 31.10 feet, but its area is only half a full city lot, so that this price is probably the highest ever paid for realty in New York, with the possible exception of the deal for part of the Bankers' Trust Company site, at Wall and Nassau Streets. The Broadway and Thirty-fourth Street parcel has a remarkable history. It is just about ten years ago that the property sold at $375,000. In 1907 it again changed hands, bringing $525,000. At the present time it is yielding a rental of $60,000 per annum.

NOTICE OF EXPIRATION

Once each month we attach, just under this notice, a subscription blank and notice of expiration for our subscribers whose subscriptions expire at any time during the month. If your copy has this subscription blank attached please use it to renew at once. If you send renewal within the last two or three weeks, pay no attention to the blank.

When renewing, indicate on the blank with your remittance whether you are subscribing for any of our new premium books, Women of the Bible, $2; Samantha at Coney Island, $2; or The Pilgrim Ship, $1.85, with your subscription, or a straight year's subscription at $1.50.

Do not forget you can have YOUR OWN RENEWAL AND ONE NEW SUBSCRIPTION FOR $2.25, or, YOUR OWN RENEWAL AND TWO NEW SUBSCRIPTIONS FOR $3.

Send money by postal or express money orders.

P. H. S., Cumming, Ga. Please explain (1) I. Cor. 3: 15. (2) I. John 3: 9. (3) Does a person receive the Holy Ghost at or after regeneration?

(1) The best interpretation is that if a man really has spiritual life, yet does poor and faulty and foolish work, he himself will be saved, but his work will perish. But his own salvation will be by a narrower margin than that of the man who did better and wiser and more careful work. (2) The real meaning of this text is best brought out by noticing the striking use of the Greek tense. The aorist tense in the Greek language is used of a specific, single action; the present implies continuous or continual action. It is the present tense which is used here, so that the meaning is: "Whosoever is born of God does not go on committing sin"; sin is not in his programme; he does not, as a continuous habit, transgress God's law. While he is a child of God he cannot remain in the conscious habit of disobeying God. Of course, there is no need for falling into single, sudden, unpremeditated and not habitual forms of sin, but that is another question. (3) All Christian creeds hold that a person receives the Holy Ghost at regeneration, but within the last twenty years many influential leaders of Christian thought and many organized movements have taken the position that there is a second experience called the Baptism with the Holy Ghost. This was the position taken by Dr. Torrey, accepted by Mr. Moody, and now clearly taught by such men as Dr. Chapman, Robert E. Speer, John R. Mott and others. It is accepted as a part of the platform of the "Northfield" movement in America, and the "Keswick" movement in England. The Methodist Church, the Salvation Army, the Pentecostal Church of the Nazarene, the organized "Holiness Movement" have always held this view. Most of their teachers hold that the baptism with the Holy Ghost brings with it the destruction of inbred sin. Some of them have, however, probably separated the experience of the baptism with the Holy Ghost from that of being cleansed from all sin.

Miscellaneous

E. R., Fayetteville, N. C. See answer to another correspondent on same subject.

Rev. I. W. W., Williamsburg, W. Va., and others. The sinlessness of Jesus has already been discussed in THE MAIL-BAG. He had the power to sin, yet was without sin.

Rev. H. P. U., Oakesdale, Wash. Whether the pole has been reached or not is a problem for scientists and geographers exclusively, and one which seems impossible of settlement at present.

R. R. S., Trinity Valley, B. C. Thanks for your letter on reciprocity, which is enlightening. There are doubtless two sides to the question, one of which has not yet been taken sufficiently into account.

Reader, Fargo, N. D. No, there is no Bible warrant for such a statement. It is probably based on the record in Scripture that at the crucifixion many of the graves were opened (see Matt. 27: 52, 53).

R. F. K., Reading, Pa. Esdras is one of the books in the Apocrypha, and is not a part of the canon of Scripture, nor is it usually bound up with the Bible. It is a very unusual thing for a preacher to go to the Apocrypha for his text.

R. L. B., St. Louis, Mo. We have no right to judge in such matters. God alone knoweth the heart and is the judge of all, and it is presumptuous for any one to assert that the Divine mercy, which extended to the dying thief, may not reach a sinner even at the eleventh hour.

NEW YORK, DECEMBER 27, 1911

THE · CHRISTIAN · HERALD

A WEEKLY ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER FOR THE HOME

A YANKEE YOUTH AT ODDS WITH RUSSIA

HERE is a story that goes beyond the most romantic fiction. The old, old nation of Persia, whose history begins back in the mists of fable, whose long list of rulers includes such names as Cyrus, Darius, Xerxes, Alexander, is now dominated by a young American, answering to the name of W. Morgan Shuster. And the guidance and rule of this young American are so satisfactory that it has almost seemed at times that Persia would rather lose her independence than dismiss him. He has told the Persians not to consider his interests in the present crisis with Russia, but they have thus far resolutely refused to release him from the post he holds as treasurer-general of the kingdom.

Russia is massing armies toward Teheran with the aim, it is thought, to accomplish the downfall of this youthful Yankee. Conflicting reports and prophecies come fast from the centres of action and interest abroad. It has been, of course, impossible to know positively the plans and purposes of the great Powers involved. Many have thought that Russia was determined not only to remove Mr. Shuster, but to swallow Persia whole. Conjectures as to whether or not England would interfere or has interfered, have ranged over the whole gamut of possibilities and impossibilities. Sir Edward Grey, in his recent calm address to Parliament and the British nation, endeavored to set at rest the disturbed and the disturbers by calling attention to the treaty between Russia and Great Britain, which binds both these nations to respect the independence of Persia and binds each of them to respect the equal commercial rights of the other.

England's apparent unwillingness to interfere in the present disturbances have been taken, in St. Petersburg, to mean that she will not attempt to block the occupation of Persia by the Russians.

A recent dispatch from St. Petersburg declares that Russian expansionists were confident that England would remain passive, and that the complete overthrow of Persia's independence by the Czar is near at hand. Other writers express the conviction that Great Britain must have taken advantage of the treaty rights of giving friendly advice to Russia in matters of mutual concern, and that counsel had thus been given to desist from further aggression in Persia. In the midst of all this contention and wonderment, with regiments marching toward Teheran and official and imperial mandates and documents filling the air, Mr. W. Morgan Shuster holds his ground and cables Washington that he is in no danger, and asks the State Department to pass on the word to his father and mother, who are, he has reason to believe, somewhat anxious over the safety of their son.

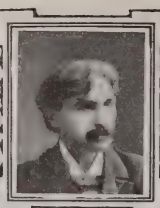
Mr. W. MORGAN SHUSTER
Treasurer General of Persia

The only thing that spoils the story is that Shuster is a great big giant of a man. To make it really correct, according to the laws of good story-making, he should be a spare, slight fellow, one who would have all the odds against him in a fight with a lion, or a bear, or both. But W. Morgan Shuster is said to weight 225 pounds, though his pictures would not suggest it, and to be a towering sort of a chap, who might easily choke a bear with one hand while with the other he carelessly twists a lion's tail. At any rate, there he is, thirty-four years old and a thoroughgoing Yankee, controlling the affairs of Persia, rousing the interest of England, and fascinating the world.

That his influence over Persian affairs has not been exaggerated is indicated by the statement made by the Novoye Vremya, the most influential Russian newspaper, that this "American adventurer Shuster" is "more powerful than the whole Persian Government."

But Mr. Shuster is not an adventurer. He is a man who has already had a remarkable career as an untangler of national finances. When little more than twenty-one years of age he was at work clearing up the finances of Cuba. He was first the assistant to the auditor of the island, and was later made collector of customs at Havana. In this position he made good headway in breaking up the graft method of former times, and his activities in this direction made him as unpopular in some circles in Cuba as his firmness and energy in Persia have made him unpopular with the Russian court. In 1901 Mr. Shuster was sent to the Philippines by Elihu Root, then Secretary of War, to straighten out the finances of our new possessions. The Hon. William H. Taft was at that time governor-general of the Philippines, and Mr. Shuster is said to have been his chief adviser. Before he left the islands, he was made Secretary of Public Instruction, and was also given a position of authority in the regulation of public worship. In all these difficult and diverse tasks he "made good." It was not at all strange, then, that when Persia asked President Taft and Secretary Knox to select a man to readjust and re-establish its finances, Mr. Shuster was named. He was appointed to his present post in February of this year. His engagement gives him "direct and effective control of all the financial and fiscal operations of the Persian Government, including the collection of all receipts of every description and control of all government expenditures. Russia and England both possess hitherto recognized "spheres of influence" in Persia and the activities of the new treasurer-general threatened to disturb these arrangements. Russia's objection to Mr. Shuster's activities is understood to be simply an objection to having life put into a nation which she would prefer to behold as a corpse. The London Times insists that it is unfair and untrue to say that England has sympathy with any such desire for Persia's downfall. Speaking for England, the Times announces: "Nothing would suit us better than that she should pull herself together, restore order in her provinces and take her place as an independent country capable of avoiding causes of complaint and intervention. We welcomed Mr. Shuster's appointment and hoped to rejoice in his success." The following sentence, however, suggests a query: "It is a matter of deep regret that he has chosen to jeopardize that success by ignoring the interests and authority which we and Russia possess in Persia."

CONTINUED ON PAGE 1315



A View of Persia's Royal Palace at Teheran

Mirza Ali Kuli Khan, Persia's U.S. Ambassador and Wife

A New Year's Sermon

Rev. Chas. A. Eaton. D.D.*

The Life Triumphant

TEXT: Phil. 4:13—"I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me."

WE STAND once more at the threshold of a new year. Bearing in our spirit the scars of battle, sobered and shadowed by the sins and griefs of yesterday, many will face the future with uncertainty and fear. We launch our ship upon an unknown sea. Silence holds in her mysterious deeps whatever of good or ill awaits us. But one thing is certain: we must go forward. If we are possessed of sufficient spiritual resource we shall come to our desired haven in peace. If we are without that necessary equipment we shall go down before the inevitable storm.

Against these facts we place the words of our text: "I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me."

This is the language of a man who, in Homeric phrase, had "drunk life to the lees." Others had seen life. Paul had lived it. Fighting desperately every day, his mind and heart were in perfect peace. Flung by the tides of circumstance into poverty and friendlessness, he knew how to be content. When bitterness and cynicism sought admission to his soul he thought on other and diviner realities until the angels of despair were silenced. Looking forward with calm certainty born of long experience he exults in the consciousness of his invincibility. He knows that he can do all things, and, knowing this, fear becomes a stranger to his mind.

The apostle is speaking to men and women whom he knows and loves. He understands their circumstances and rejoices in their noble struggle to overcome. They are the children of his spirit and he thinks of them as the very joy and crown of his rich and fruitful life. From his heart to their hearts he pours the mystic secret of overcoming. He has struggled and suffered, sacrificed and sorrowed even as they, but his voice rings with the exultant note of certain triumph. He knows where to find resource and sustenance more than sufficient to meet the year's vicissitudes.

The New and the Old in the New Year

The New Year will be like all years for the most of us. Temptation, burden and joy may assume new forms, but we shall meet them with the same spirit, bring to their solution the same mind, and fail, if we fail at all, because of the same weakness. One thing we all must do: we must live our own life; we cannot escape from ourselves. Friends may come and go, but each soul remains shut in behind the impassable walls of its own personality. Our new task is therefore the same as the old task. We must live each with himself; in the language of Emerson, taking himself for better or for worse. If we can find rootage for our souls beside the rivers of God; if we can organize and control our inner forces so as to bring to bear upon each task and each temptation the entire resources of our being, we shall have a happy new year. If we cannot do this we shall have a sad new year. We must conquer or be conquered by the world. There is no such thing as quarter to be asked or given. The ship can sail the seas so long as she keeps the sea outside herself. And men can overcome the world only by shutting the world outside. The one problem of chief import for us is to learn how to possess our own souls. The battle of life is always fought within the man's own spirit. Sin in the world is as harmless to the Christian as the shadow of a cloud. It is sin enshrined in the temple of the spirit that bringeth forth death.

We must live our life where we are. Few, if any, can take the wings of the morning and dwell in the uttermost part of the sea. And even if one can run away from one's burden one cannot run away from one's self. It is the self that makes the burden burdensome. Weak men are broken by work that forms but a pleasant pastime for the strong. Temptations that pierce the unprotected soul glance harmlessly from the armored life. God has given us our work to do; and with the work he gives daily strength to the worker.

We have a right to expect more from life than a bare existence. It is the overplus that constitutes our riches; and it is possible for every man to come off more than conqueror through him who loves us. Indeed, unless we have an abundant entrance into life we have not entered into life at all. Man was created to have dominion over the world. He has lost that dominion because he has lost dominion over himself. Jesus declares that he "has overcome the world," not by a mere margin but gloriously, abundantly, with infinite reserves uncalled for in the effort. Therefore his followers are not to fear. He has called us brethren. We are heirs and joint heirs with Christ of the infinite resources of God. We are not to cringe and creep before the armies of the enemy; crushed by the sickening consciousness of our essential weakness, our inability to sustain a siege. But rather, we are to send our voices thundering defiance upon the winds. We are to march out in full battle array and put to flight the armies of aliens. We cannot be conquered. It is not size, nor numbers, nor learning, nor any external things. It is the infinitude of spiritual resource that pours down through the ever-widening channels of God's grace upon the believing soul, that enables one to chase a thousand, and two to put ten thousand to flight.

Life's Threefold Triumph

These, then, are the things which every man must do every year, both old and new, if he is to play a true man's part in the world. He must possess himself completely; he must face his own circumstances without flinching or fear; and he must possess an overplus of power, a reserve of strength, more than sufficient for any day.

It is possible for every man to have this threefold experience of the triumphant life. The place he occupies, the environment in which he moves makes little real difference. In the realm of spirit all rules of craft and prudence fail. Rich men become poor and poor rich. The strong are brought low and the weak are exalted. To find one's life is to lose it, and whosoever loseth his life shall find it. The first shall be last and the last first. The race is not to the swift nor the battle to the strong. God hath chosen the weak things to confound the mighty and the things which are not to bring to nought things which are.

The triumphant life is an internal experience. It is the flowering of a spiritual process. Paul sums up the whole matter in three words: "In the Lord." Nothing can ever happen to the man who is "in Christ." He can never die, because in Christ he has already died, and like his Lord, is now alive forever more. "I live, yet not I: it is Christ that liveth in me," is the confession of the apostle.

A Christian is a man in whom Christ is incarnate. Apart from this fundamental experience, creeds and forms and rituals and orthodoxies are of no avail. Just as the prophet put his body down upon the body of the dead lad, eye to eye, face to face, heart to heart; so Christ places his living Personality against every part of the Christian's being, and the dead, in contact with Life, becomes itself alive. To be in Christ is to have one's rootage in eternity. While we are tossed upon the tides of this world our anchor holds far and deep within the veil that for the present hides from our vision that other and diviner world to which we really belong.

What It Is to Be in Christ

It is almost impossible to realize the full meaning of this experience. To be "in Christ" is to be transplanted from all the limitations of human existence into a life limitless in power and possibility. You seem still to be in this world, but you are not. You have overcome this world and passed beyond it. You can lose nothing, because all things are but loss compared with the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus your Lord. Nothing that you do or say or feel or hope "in Christ" can ever be lost or fail of its final fruition, because you speak his words and his words can never pass away. You do his work and are therefore a worker together with God. You feel the thrill of deathless energy even as you become conscious of your earth-born weakness and you discover that these are but foretokens of immortality. He that liveth and believeth can never die. When the day is darkest, the pain most bitter, you hope for that day whose dawn already trembles upon the hilltops, when you shall see him face to face and know even as you are known. To be "in Christ" is to be born again from above; to be caught up out of this life series, which ends in the grave, and planted forever in that new life series which is eternity. As in Adam all die, so in Christ shall all be made alive.

From such an experience as this we look out upon a new year with eyes that see and with a heart that understands. Each new year becomes better than the last because it brings us more of life and love and power. We are one year nearer home. The world becomes more beautiful because we catch the glow and glory of that other world reflected everywhere. Life is rich and sweet and precious because it holds this higher meaning. We have a blessed secret which we can share only with God.

There are doubtless many who shrink from facing the new year because of what the old year has brought of pain and burden. Life has been too much for you. You feel like a child lost in the dark. The majesty of the storm, whose thunders disturb the silence of the night around you, awaken only fear. You are tired and lost and your heart hungers for escape from the ruthless energies that threaten to break you as the sea breaks a bit of wreckage against the rocks.

To these I would speak in love and sympathy. There is no darkness except the gloom of a darkened soul. The command, "Let there be light" has never been recalled. Your sense of defeat is a matter of your own spirit. When once more the "inner light" is kindled the outer night will disappear. "The spirit of man is the candle of the Lord." It is not His will that the light in you should be darkness.

When Paul felt that without escape from certain inner ills which constituted for him a "thorn in the flesh," he could not live, his oft repeated prayer for release received the answer, "My grace is sufficient for thee."

Resting in God

This was no idle incantation to be pronounced in the hope of exorcising a plague. It was a glorious announcement of life and victory. God's grace is the new climate of redemption into which our lives are transplanted out of sin and self. However dwarfed and weakened the plant may be, once the tropical heat of this new zone falls upon it, vitality and vigor and fruitfulness must ensue. The mind holds high commerce with the mind of God. If we are centred only in self all roads run to a blank wall. We have no sky. But once we open the avenues of our nature to God the mind flies forth and away along the vast highways of God's thought and purpose. To think God's thought after him is to be like God. And God is sufficient. To think with God is to surrender all to him. We cease our striving and trust. The world no longer rests its heavy bulk upon our souls. Rather we rest in God and the deep rivers of his purpose carry us upon their flood.

Men are weak or think that they are weak because their powers are without an organizing principle. Their stellar system has no central sun. The enemy has conquered them one point at a time. When their heart hopes their mind doubts. When their mind is certain, fear throws its deadly shadow over their hearts. There is lacking a central force which will penetrate the unused continents of the soul and summon to united effort the man's total powers.

"In Christ" this state of chaos ceases. He is the captain of our salvation. Ascending the throne of our willing natures he reduces to his mild dominion every rebellion and gathers about his standard those reluctant powers which under the reign of self refused to serve. This is why "I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me."

The longer I live the more profoundly I am convinced that men's lot in life is practically the same. All flesh is one. Prince and pauper are constructed on the same plan. The accidents of their social environment are all the opportunity either will ever have. It may often be harder for the rich man to nourish his spirit with dainties than for the poor to grow strong upon a crust. John the Baptist was nurtured in the desert. The apostle Paul gathered the forces of his nature from the city and its

Continued on next page

* Pastor Madison Avenue Baptist Church. New York City.

THE OLD AND THE NEW

"GOOD-BY to the old," we sighed,
As the tired year breathed his last.
And faded away at the end of the day,
Into the bourne of the past.

"Good-by to the old," we said,
For the year was a friend we knew,
With his winsome hours, and his lusty powers,
His skies that were blithe and blue.

But since all the years must go,
"Good-morrow!" we cried with glee,
To the little year that in bright good cheer
Came here, in our midst to be.

Good-morrow, you happy king,
That hath dared Time's door to ope;
With your smiling face, and your royal grace,
And your beautiful dower of hope.

You have neither fear nor grief,
As you bow where the stars roll by.
You are born of the light, and day and night
Shall serve you straight from the sky.

You may bring us death or life,
You may bring us pain or cheer;
Your times may be rife with tumult and strife,
Yet we hail you, glad New Year.

A prayer, a song, a cry
To the God of the passing years!
Who can give us strength for the journey's length,
And rainbow all our tears.

MARGARET E. SANGSTER.

The Life Triumphant

Continued from preceding page

schools. Lord Shaftsbury transmuted the conditions of wealth and position into inspiration for human service. Abraham Lincoln grew to manhood in obscurity and want. Wendell Phillips was an aristocrat by birth. Booker Washington was born a slave. One had to overcome freedom, the other slavery, in order to achieve greatness.

If we pray that God will change us we need not pray that he will change our circumstances. The branch that is really in the Vine will grow. We are, "in Christ," masters of our destiny. We adopt a new point of view, a new standard of values. Our distracted energies are centred in God and take nurture from him. We lay the weight of our whole being upon each task. Without there may be confusion, but within there is peace. And thus, asking only the chance to serve, we come at last to the evening hour when, having finished our course with joy, we enter into life eternal.

Is thy cruse of comfort wasting? Rise and share it with another,
And through all the years of famine it shall serve thee and thy brother.

Is thy burden hard and heavy? Do thy steps drag wearily?
Help to bear thy brother's burden; God will bear both it and thee.

Is thy heart a living power? Self-entwined, its strength sinks low;
It can only live in loving, and by serving love will grow.

ANVIL STROKES

..THE pessimist foresees a storm in every weather sign.

..IDEALS must not be so high as to be entirely out of view.

..WHEN meekness becomes self-conscious, it vanishes.

..WHO hungers for praise never gets his stomach filled.

..THE contribution box never sags with the gifts of the lazy.

..MISERY loves company, but the sentiment is not reciprocated.

..WHO spends his sympathy upon himself deserves great pity.

..YOU come to a knowledge of God, not by investigating, but by loving him.

..NO LABOR is lost which results in strengthening the character of the toiler.

..IF PLANS made one rich, then loafers could ride in their own automobiles.

..THE devil is content as long as he can engage you in an argument with himself.

..NO MATTER how much one may be able to get in this world, he can never obtain a monopoly of happiness.

Switching on the Light

By EUGENE THWING

IN THESE short winter days, darkness comes early in the business offices of a great city. By four o'clock, or even earlier, it is too dark to work except close to a window. Then, everywhere, the electric lights are switched on, and the great office buildings become towering castles of brilliancy. Seen from the river or the bay, the city becomes a wonderful vision of beauty and mystery. Up and down the busy streets the lights blaze out over the hurrying throng, while the work of the city goes ceaselessly on.

A few days ago a man moved his business from one building to another. As the first afternoon waned, the light waned also. Work had to stop before the day was over. The electrician had not made the necessary connection, and the light could not be switched on. The current was there, right within reach, only a few feet away from the silent typewriters, and desks, and the books. Nothing was needed but a little connection, so that the current could flow into the filaments of the bulbs and fuse them into a glow of brilliant light. But the connection was not made, the bulbs remained cold, and the offices were in darkness, while all round the power of light was ready, waiting to flash and illumine the darkest corner the instant it could find something in which, and upon which, to manifest itself.

If we could leave our bodies behind and fly out into space directly toward the sun, we should find a most astonishing state of ever-increasing darkness all about us. Perhaps it would be high noon, and the earth would be basking in dazzling light, yet as we approached closer to the brilliant, blazing source of light, the darkness would become absolute. All around us the rays of light would be speeding on their way, carrying cheer and gladness to the earth far below, yet we should find ourselves, all unconscious of them, in total, awful blackness and gloom. The passing light rays must be caught by some substance which can stop and absorb or reflect them before they can appear as light. If a world should suddenly be created in the space around us, it would be flooded with sunshine and warmth.

. . .

FRESH air enthusiasts are familiar enough to most of us, but we hear less of enthusiasm for light. Darkened parlors, darkened bedrooms, darkened sick-rooms, are too common. Sir B. W. Richardson, the eminent London scientist and physician, declared that when the professors of healing enter a sick-room their first words in most cases ought to be Goethe's dying exclamation, "More light! More light!" The light of the sun is God's own microbe-killer, germicide, disinfectant, prophylactic, sickness-healer. There is no physician, no chemical antidote, no compounded prescription to be compared with sunlight. Without it, nature could not perform her functions. Man, beast, bird, insect would fall victims to the deadly gases that would prevail. The horrid mists and deadly gases are dispersed and decomposed by the action of light. Let it in, everywhere! Let the light in more and more abundantly. Faded carpets are not as pitiful as faded cheeks. Spoiled cushions are trivial compared with spoiled health. Darkened rooms are too suggestive of darkened lives.

We are like the business man who moved into new offices. The first thing he needed was light. We are just moving into a new year, and the first thing we need is light. We hope to make this new year busy, prosperous, full of usefulness and joy. We cannot work in the dark, and, thanks be, we need not. The light is streaming in a prodigality of supply all around us, hastening from the great Source to flood with its brightness all who are ready to absorb and reflect it.

You have seen persons who seemed to prefer living in a state of gloom. They seem to withdraw from the light. They are like the imaginary spirit out in space, surrounded by light rays, yet lost in darkness. They move into the new year from one that was dark, and they expect their new place of business to be just as dark, or darker. Pity them; steal in upon them if you can, and switch on the light in their lives as you have done in your own.

A French minister tells of an incident during a voyage to India: "One dark evening, I sat in my cabin feeling thoroughly unwell, as the sea was rising fast and I was but a poor sailor. Suddenly the cry of 'Man overboard!' made me spring to my feet. I heard a trampling overhead, but resolved not to go on deck lest I should interfere with the crew in their efforts to save the poor man. 'What can I do?' I asked myself, and, instantly unhooking my lamp, I held it near the top of my cabin and close to my bull's eye window, that its light might shine on the sea, and as near the ship as possible. In a half minute's time I heard the joyful cry, 'It's all right; he's safe,' upon which I put my lamp in its place. The next day, however, I was told that my little lamp was the sole means of saving the man's life. It was only by the timely light which shone upon him that the knotted rope could be thrown so as to reach him."

. . .

BUT in the wild sea of the world's busy life we are going to find many brothers and sisters struggling in the darkness during this coming new year. Business has gone wrong with them. Sorrow has flooded them like an angry wave, and has torn them from their strongholds. Disgrace, far worse than death, has blighted the home. Discouragement, weakness, gloom fill the dreary, hopeless days. Oh, but what is our light good for if not to penetrate the dark corners of these shadowed lives? We need no license for the practice of the light cure during 1912. We can find our way into the sick-room of any darkened soul and bring light, more light. We can carry with us everywhere the moral microbe-killer of spiritual sunshine, the sickness-healer of sympathy and love.

The Source of our light is boundless. If our connections are kept perfect there will be such a flood of brightness and beauty radiating from us that the coming year will be illumined for all who come within our influence.

THE LITTLE PILGRIM

THERE is a path that leads to God—
All others go astray;
Narrow, but pleasant is the road,
And Christians love the way.

It leads straight through this world of sin,
And dangers must be passed;
But they who boldly enter in
Will get to heaven at last.

How shall an infant pilgrim dare
This dangerous path to tread?
For on the way is many a snare
For youthful travelers spread.

While the broad road, where thousands go,
Lies near and opens fair;
And many turn aside, I know,
To walk with sinners there.

But, lest my feeble feet should slide,
Or wander from thy way,
Lord, condescend to be my guide,
And I shall never stray.

Then I may go without alarm,
And trust his word of old:
"The lambs he'll gather with his arm,
And lead them to the fold."

Thus I may safely venture through,
Beneath my Shepherd's care;
And keep the gate of heaven in view,
Till I shall enter there.

EARLE WILLIAM GAGE.

Our Cover and Its Painter

THE painting, of which our cover this week is a delightful reproduction, hangs in the Main hall of the National Gallery in London and easily ranks as a world masterpiece. The artist, Sir Joshua Reynolds, was, according to Bishop Percy, "one of the best loved men in London." He was the founder of the famous East End Literary Club, which numbered among its members Dr. Johnson, Oliver Goldsmith, Bishop Percy, Boswell, Garrick, Gainsborough, Burke, Pope, Sir Horace Walpole, Benjamin West. He was elected first president of the Royal Academy and with the distinction of the king's patronage he was knighted.

Sir Joshua Reynolds' closest friend was Dr. Johnson, and of this famous friendship Oliver Goldsmith is often quoted as saying, "Reynolds' art and Johnson's philosophy was the ideal combination for a great congeniality." Sir Joshua was ever a tireless worker. Seeking out the secrets of the old masters, he is known to have bought works of Titian and Rubens and scraped them in order to learn their methods, insisting that these artists had some secret of luminosity underlying their work. So anxious was he to get brilliant effects of color, that he mixed his paints with asphaltum, egg, varnish, wax and the like until one artist said, "The wonder is that his pictures do not crack beneath the brush." Many of his great paintings did go to pieces because of the chances he took in mixing things which did not belong together, in order to achieve his brilliant and wonderful results. Upon one occasion Sir George Beaumont recommended to a friend that he go to Reynolds to have his portrait painted, and the friend demurred, "Because," said he, "his colors fade and his pictures die." "Never mind that," Sir George declared, "a faded portrait by Reynolds is better than a fresh one by any one else."

Sir Joshua was, all of his life, surrounded by loving friends, and his devotion to them was a dominant characteristic of his nature. The graceful anecdotes told of him are almost without number. He is known to have rescued Dr. Johnson from debt at one time, thereby saving him from prison. He negotiated the sale of the manuscript of She Stoops to Conquer, in order that Goldsmith might not be dispossessed of the pitiful attic room in which he was living.

Other well-known paintings by the famous artist are: "The Duchess of Devonshire and Her Daughter," generally considered his finest picture; "The Countess of Spencer," "Angels' Heads," "Penelope Boothby," "Simplicity," "A Little Girl in a Mob Cap and Pinafore," who seems to be listening to the fairies, and "Innocence," the lovely subject of our cover this week.

A TOUR IN THE SAHARA

By ALFRED R. SHOREY

An Arab Caravan Halted for Rest in the Desert

THE Sahara, that vast expanse of country lying to the south of Algeria, is commonly called "The Desert" by Europeans. The name Sahara in no wise, however, means "desert"; it is simply the Arab appellation of this extensive tract, mainly composed of great plains, which are even well populated in certain districts. It is quite a mistake to imagine that all is barren and sterile, for there are to be found large date-palm plantations, as well as numerous flocks of sheep and great numbers of camels which man must tend and care for.

The Sahara contains two distinct populations—the one sedentary, the other nomad. The former live in the towns and villages, cultivating the soil and tending the date-palms; the latter are shepherds, roving from place to place in search of pasture for their cattle. How few are there in the home-land who have any idea of the Sahara or of the Arab tribes who live there! Travelers to these regions are comparatively rare, but all are amply repaid for a visit. Life among the moving tents of the nomads is deeply interesting in its primitive simplicity. The country itself has a grandeur and beauty which is quite unique; its rolling dunes, painted with orange and crimson and gold against violet and purple shadows at sunrise and sunset, its green oases, its wild sand-storms, its lovely mirages, once seen are never to be forgotten. While the solemn silence strikes the soul with awe, one almost realizes why the Arabs call all this "The Garden of Allah."

The writer of this article made a two months' tour in the Sahara with a French missionary who had traveled frequently there, and had thus a long experience and intimate knowledge of the natives. After eighteen hours' journey by train from Algiers, Biskra, which has so aptly been alled "The Gate of the Desert," was reached. Here the railway ends. Biskra itself is a French-Arab town with comfortable modern hotels. It is well patronized in winter by British and American tourists. At a little distance from the town there are some natural hot springs to which a regular service of trams runs. A visit to the oases and the Arab village of "Vieux Biskra" is but a pleasant walk and it is interesting indeed to see so many Arabs from the south, coming in with hundreds of camels, loaded with dates for exportation. While in the town we strolled into the native market, which is highly picturesque. The Moslem fête of Aid Kebir (great fête) was very near, and the sheikh had closed his school and evidently sent his scholars into the market, for we saw a group of ten or fifteen boys dressed in vivid, gorgeous-colored garments. One or two of the lads carried old Arab swords beautifully carved and ornamented. This group went from stall to stall, the leader, probably the sheikh's son, gabbling some well-known Arab phrases, while the rest of the company chimed in with "Amin, amin, amin" (amen). The stall-keepers all gave something—money, fruit, vegetables, bread, etc., evidently expecting in return a blessing on their trade or on the coming fête.

From Biskra onward the chief method of traveling is by camel, although a small mailcoach goes regularly to and fro from certain places. We had made arrangements with an Arab to meet us there with three camels, so, after completing our purchases, we loaded these "ships of the desert" and started off on our two months' tour, intending to visit a number of villages. The first day we traveled alone with our Arab guide and pursued our way along the government road through a barren land on which no rain had fallen for several months—a country of clay and stone baked by the scorching sun of the past summer. We passed, here and there, a few nomads living in their tents. At night we encamped at a little distance from the caravan route, but close to some Arabs who had preceded us and who were known to our Mohammed. They were all equipped with guns, for this part of the country is considered dangerous for travelers. The sun had already set when we pitched our tent, and Mohammed was careful not to select a spot near any Arabs whom he did not know. We soon gathered a few sticks, lit a fire, and left the camels to graze near by. The night was cold, although the day had been hot.

Arab Nomads Making Carpet

The next morning we were up betimes. Coffee was made, tent and baggage packed up, and we were en route by seven o'clock. Along the road, wells are to be found, which the government keeps in repair, while at stated distances one comes to a house which the Arabs call a "bordj." These houses are used by government officials when journeying, but are also, on occasions, at the disposal of other travelers. The authorities have also erected obelisks, looking in the distance like lonely lighthouses, to guide caravans on their journeys.

The second day our road lay through a country dotted over with a prickly looking shrub which provides food for the camels. On the way we encountered a Frenchman, hunting gazelles, which are found in this district. He warned us to keep a careful lookout for robbers, because much poverty and distress existed owing to the lack of rain. About eleven o'clock we came up to a good-sized caravan going in our direction and we were glad indeed to join company. At two o'clock we arrived at our first well, where the camels were watered and we filled, for our own consumption, a goatskin such as the Arabs use, with a fresh supply of water. On tasting it, however, we found it somewhat salt.

Our new friends had brought three sheep with them, and on camping these were killed, and no little amusement was caused by the meat and wool being sold at auction. We now numbered about thirty men and fifty camels. On encamping for the evening a spot is usually selected around which there is sufficient herbage for the camels. Half of the men light the fires and prepare the evening meal while the other half guard the camels, which graze until an hour or two after sunset. The animals are then driven to the encampment and after being made to lie down beside their respective owners' tents, a slip-knot is passed over one of their forelegs, thus securing them from roaming about during the night. The men then have supper, which is usually a very frugal meal, consisting of a few dates and a piece of bread. This evening, however, as our company had killed three sheep, all fared more sumptuously. After the repast Mohammed took out his pipe, lit it and after a few whiffs passed it on amiably to his companions. Towards midnight I was awakened by an Arab singing at the top of his voice, in a minor key, one of the native songs. He had a fine voice and was giving free scope to his lungs. Strange and weird indeed it sounded in the intense stillness of the night.

Next morning we were off again at daybreak. This third day brought us to the real desert sand, and once there the Arabs of our caravan had little fear of robbery. On the fourth day we saw a splendid mirage—a long stretch of country with all the appearance of a beautiful lake, which, as we approached, proved to be but barren land covered with saltpetre, the color of dirty snow. There are many such spots in the Sahara where absolutely nothing grows. The Arabs call these places "shotts." The earth is like baked mud and should any rain fall it becomes exceedingly difficult for camels to pass along. Quite at home in the soft shifting sand, they slip painfully and risk breaking their legs in the mud. On the fifth day we were caught by a heavy downpour of rain, which gave us a thorough drenching. In consequence of this our

Continued on page 1338

A Nomad Family and Its Desert Home

Date Palms Among the Sand Dunes

PEACE MEETING ENDS IN UPROAR

Hon. Richard Bartholdt

Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler

Mr. Andrew Carnegie

Hon. Nathan Straus

Hon. Joseph Choate

Colonel Henry Watterson

A MASS MEETING in support of the ratification of the general arbitration treaties with Great Britain and France was held in Carnegie Hall, December 12. Upwards of five thousand people, representing the brain, the culture, the refinement and, alas! as it ultimately proved, the hoodlum element, were in attendance. The meeting was presided over by Mr. Joseph Choate. Colonel Henry Watterson, Samuel J. Elder, counsel for the United States in the North Atlantic Coast Fisheries Arbitration Treaties, 1910, Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler, president of Columbia College, Mr. Andrew Carnegie, Hon. Richard Bartholdt and Dr. Stephen S. Wise were the scheduled speakers.

Mr. Choate, at the opening of the ceremonies, explained that the Citizens' National Committee, an organization consisting of prominent citizens from all States in the Union and represented by the committee and their guests, were gathered together for the single purpose of advocating the ratification of the arbitration treaties now before the Senate, and that the committee had arranged for similar gatherings in all the principal cities in the United States. Cheers greeted this announcement and the meeting from the outset promised to be a great public demonstration in favor of Peace.

Colonel Henry Watterson, in an eloquent speech which was a direct appeal to the American people to support the National Committee in its undertaking, reached climax after climax in storms of approval and applause. He said in brief that England and France, at the invitation of the United States, had called many mass meetings, and had, to a man, sustained the arbitration treaties. Already at our hands the ratification of these treaties has been delayed too long by the Senate. Public men in every party, leaders in political life, captains of industry and commerce, men of letters, ministers of the Gospel, representatives of national associations, boards of trade, commercial organizations throughout the length and breadth of our country have incessantly expressed hearty approval of the ratification of the treaties before the Senate. "It is the people who are delaying," the Colonel insisted, and directly appealed to the audience, by their co-operation and active interest, to make it impossible that our government should be left impotent or unwilling to move or that America's honor should be made synonymous with Punic faith. If the arbitration treaties are lost by senatorial quibbling, a great and bewildering obstruction will be thrown upon world-progress; and if the American people neglect to act, they invite the defeat of the most benign, humane, progressive and inspired movement of modern times.

This final appeal drew forth a storm of applause from all parts of the vast hall, with tier after tier of stalls and boxes crowded with peace advocates and enthusiasts, and beautifully decorated with white and gold. The great semi-circle of the auditorium itself was emblazoned with parti-colored shields of nations and the stirring motto, "O Lord, Let Thy Kingdom Come," blazed in gigantic letters over the stage.

At the end of Colonel Watterson's speech—which was practically the only one of the evening—Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler, president of Columbia College, rose and made a motion that the enthusiasm be crystallized then and there into a definite resolution that should be carried by unanimous vote. Suddenly Alphonse B. Koelble, who claimed to represent the German-American Citizens' League, jumped upon a chair and denied the right to pass resolutions urging the Senate to ratify the arbitration treaties with Great Britain and France. He claimed that the proposed treaties were breeders of war, not of peace. "We know England's plans," he declared. "She wants to go after Germany and lick her; but before she does it, she wants to tie the United States up, so that she cannot interfere. We won't stand for it! We won't!"

The words were evidently a prearranged signal, for instantly a terrific uproar started in the top gallery—an uproar that continued in defiance of all measures taken to quell it.

The disturbance was evidently planned with utmost care. The disturbers doubtless knew that, immediately following Colonel Watterson's address, Dr. Butler was to present the resolution. For ten minutes the crowd in the galleries yelled, whistled, jeered, and stamped their feet. Bedlam had broken loose. One heard, above the din, the leader Koelble denounced as the instigator of the noisy demonstration. Various members of the committee vainly attempted to restore order. Most notable among these attempts was that of Rabbi Wise, who by appealing first to the Irish, then to the Roman Catholic, and lastly to the Jewish element, attempted to force reason upon the obstreperous hoodlums. Dr. Wise spoke straight to the gallery, ignoring the great body of the house, which was with him; but his was a hopeless task.

Mr. Choate again took the meeting in hand and after declaring to the rioters, in a voice that was a noble attempt to overreach the din, that their attempt to break up the meeting had done more for the cause of Peace and for the furtherance of the ratification of the treaties than they could ever have done by staying at home or remaining quiet, the meeting was adjourned.

No one even then could tell just what the riot had been all about. The great crowd of people made their way out into the streets in a kind of daze, vaguely realizing that, with an audacity which no one in the peace movement had been able to foresee, one man, by packing the audience with less than three hundred leather-lunged rioters armed with megaphones, had dared to ask the meeting to do exactly the opposite of what it had been assembled to do, and, by means of noise alone, had momentarily defeated the advocates of Peace in their purpose. The great mass meeting in favor of Peace among nations had been reduced to confusion. Mr. Carnegie, during the riotous outbreak, was speechless with amazement. He simply held up his hands with an expression of utter dismay when he saw how the meeting had been transformed into a bedlam.

Mr. Koelble, after the disturbance, denied any intention of starting the hostile demonstration. He claimed to have been as much surprised as anybody at the result of his interruption. He said in substance: "The purpose of our party is to thwart entangling alliances by this country with Great Britain and to frustrate anything that might ruin the friendship of this country with Germany. I regard as very significant the recent remark of Earl Grey, that the proposed treaty would insure England a food supply in case of continental war. It is strange that England should come to America looking for an arbitration treaty, when she knows there is no danger of war with America. Why does she not seek such a treaty with Germany, with which country a war is imminent?" Mr. Koelble was born in this country but his sympathies are all with the Fatherland.

A YANKEE YOUTH AT ODDS WITH RUSSIA

Continued from page 1311

Dr. Hannah Y. Jacobs, a CHRISTIAN HERALD missionary correspondent at Tabriz, Persia, has sent the HERALD some fresh and interesting information about the social life of the Persian people. The universal interest in that ancient people makes her contribution timely and valuable. The seiges and battles to which she refers took place in connection with the recent unsuccessful attempt of the ex-Shah to overthrow the present ruler and reinstate himself. This rebellion is believed to have been sanctioned, if not indeed promoted, by Russia. And its failure put that nation into bad humor for accepting graciously Mr. Shuster's reforms. Dr. Jacobs's letter follows:

"Since last Monday, September 3, the city has been besieged by Semat Khan, the Royalist, and this is the second time during the past three years that this Royalist has come with his troops to take the city of Tabriz. All the roads and avenues of the city are now obstructed by the enemy, and there is no provision of any kind coming into the city. Thousands of people have not a morsel of bread to eat, but solely subsist upon fruits and vegetables that grow in the city itself, and these are nearly exhausted. No wheat flour or any kind of grain is allowed to enter the city. The suffering is very great indeed, and it increases every day. The poor people and the children are the great sufferers. Almost every night we hear some one in the street close to our door crying most bitterly for a piece of bread. We are in the month of Ramazan, or fasting, and as the days are still long and warm, the suffering from thirst is great. The rich spend their nights in feasting and visiting and going to mosques to hear their mullahs preaching and narrating sad stories of their imams or martyrs. The people here often send for a doctor at night without ever thinking that we Christians have to sleep at night. Last night at twelve o'clock an old patient of mine sent for me. After exchanging salaams, she said, 'Hekim Khanim [lady physician], this is the way you treat your friends; if you are not sent for professionally you will never visit your friends.' 'No,' I said, 'I do, indeed, love all my friends and would like to see and talk with them often, but you know the city is so large and it takes me so long to go about to visit my friends and to be with my children.' 'Oh, let me send my servant,' she said, 'to bring your children here, and stay with us to-night.' 'Thank you very much,' I said, 'the children have gone to bed a long time ago and they are all fast asleep. By the way, you do not look sick at all; why have you sent for me?" Then she went on to tell me of her troubles, which could just as well have waited till morning. To-day the fast is over and cannons are thundering in the air to tell the people that they can again eat in the day and sleep at night.

"We are still surrounded by the enemy, and there has been some very hard fighting. Semat Khan is trying to starve the people until the city surrenders itself to him.

"Last Sunday (October 8) there was close fighting outside the suburbs of the city, and the result was that many on each side were wounded and killed. But no one can tell when this useless fighting will come to an end. The country is practically going to ruin from day to day."

OUR EDITORIAL FORUM

OTTO KOENIG, President | GEO. H. SANDISON, Managing Editor | THEODORE WATERS, Secretary

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly by "The Christian Herald," at the Bible House, Fourth Avenue, 8th and 9th Sts., New York City. The officers are: Otto Koenig, President and Treasurer, Bible House, N.Y.City; Geo. H. Sandison, Vice-President, Bible House, N.Y.City; Theodore Waters, Secretary, Bible House, N.Y.City.

Subscription Price, $1.50 a year, in advance.
Remittances should always be made in the safest manner available to the remitter. Register cash remittances.
Foreign Postage.—For each copy to be mailed outside the United States, Canada, and Mexico, add one dollar a year.

Change of Date.—It takes at least two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.
Expiration of Subscription.—The date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription ends.
Change of Address.—It requires three weeks' time to make the change. Give both old and new address.

Subscriptions may commence with any issue.
Letters should be addressed, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

Entered at Post Office, New York, as Second-class Matter
Entered as Second-class Matter at the Post Office Department, Ottawa

The Year in Retrospect

WITH a few more rounds of the clock, Nineteen-Eleven will have passed off the stage and dropped into the limbo of the years that have sped. Few of his predecessors have traveled a more eventful road. If with one hand he has scattered gifts to men, with the other he has dealt them buffets in good measure. That he was no respecter of persons, but gave cuffs and favors with equal impartiality, he showed by the dexterity with which he tumbled the weakling king of Portugal off his throne, and flung the "strong man of Mexico" out of his chair of arrogant dictatorship, an office which he performed a little later for the child emperor of China, putting another "strong man" at the head of affairs. Nineteen-Eleven, though a rough fellow in the main, has proved on the whole a friend to republican institutions, although he has demonstrated this through the stirring up of civil wars and the sacrifice of countless lives. He has been a mighty factor, too, in kindling the fires of industrial strife in two continents, and he has sent up the cost of living to a point seldom equaled. In our own land, the old year has been productive of startling industrial troubles; but he has served the cause of justice well in hunting to earth the dynamite conspirators who brought destruction and murder into the labor campaign. Nineteen-Eleven will be remembered, too, for the war on the corporations, the inauguration of postal savings banks, the great record-breaking presidential "tour on wheels," the mining disasters, the costly Mexican border patrol and the complete upset of Mr. Taft's reciprocity plans by Canada. Perhaps the nearest approach to any really great achievement during the year was the signing of the Peace Treaties, which would have been a notable and worthy addition to American prestige, had not the Senate balked at the ratification on the ground of an invasion of its ancient, dignified privilege.

And this brings us to remark that Nineteen-Eleven gave the Peace Dove a hard time of it. Like Noah's bird, she has found no resting-place for the sole of her foot. Affrighted by the constant sounding of the tocsin in Germany and England; dismayed by Italy's sudden raid on Tripoli; shuddering at the tramp of armed hosts in China, and alarmed by Russia's covetous glances toward Persia, the Dove has found it difficult to get a safe and quiet temporary roosting-place anywhere. Even the upper air is no longer safe for the Dove, for the development of the aeroplane now makes its early use in war a practical certainty.

To the credit of Nineteen-Eleven we must set down several really good things. It has brought us a higher sense of official responsibility, a better appreciation of civic righteousness. It has helped in the hard fight for hygienic and sanitary laws; it has aided in cleansing the Augean stables of corrupt politics in many American municipalities. It has witnessed the inauguration of the greatest organized Forward Movement in practical religion our nation has ever known. It has moved the hearts of good people everywhere with Christlike sympathy for human suffering. The year's redeeming character has been its kindness and benevolence. And, last but not least, it has added thousands of new readers every month to the Great CHRISTIAN HERALD Family Circle. With all its faults and failings, therefore, let us recognize its virtues, and let us hope that the New Year, now at the gate, will do still better. May Nineteen-Twelve be as peaceful as its predecessor has been warlike. And may it help along this old world of ours to better things than those that have disturbed it during the months that have gone.

Our Treaty with Russia

NOT often have the American people been so aroused as they are at present over the question of abrogating our treaty with Russia. The advice of Representative Mann on the floor of the House, counseling moderation in language, may well be heeded throughout the intense and widespread discussion. But the sentiment seems all but universal that prompt action should be taken by our government. The House of Representatives, on December 13, passed a resolution by a vote of 300 to 1, calling for the abrogation of the present treaty, which has been in force since 1832.

Objection to the treaty is made because under it Russia has constantly refused to honor passports held by certain American citizens. The treaty itself grants passport rights to all American citizens, but Russian officials have persistently disregarded these provisions. Although the hardships caused by the present régime fall chiefly upon the Jews there has been a much wider protest than that based purely upon religious grounds. Prominent men of different faiths have aided in the movement to secure equal rights abroad for all our citizens.

President Taft, in a special message to Congress read on December 8, expressed his belief that the government of Russia is seriously undertaking to have the present practice changed and the hope that a satisfactory agreement could be reached without disturbing the present treaty. Popular sentiment, however, reflected by the drastic action of the House of Representatives, is demanding the abrogation of the Treaty of 1832 and the making of a new instrument. There is little doubt that by the time this paper reaches its readers the Senate will have followed the action of the House. Sudden action was taken because the present treaty provides for its own continuance for twelve months after the first of January following notice of abrogation.

Zeal Without Knowledge

ENTHUSIASM is a magnificent thing. There is no finer or more effective part of Christian endowment; but it is only valuable where it is under proper restraint. "Zeal without knowledge" becomes one of the deadliest foes to real achievement and may be the means of misleading many. It was this danger that Paul had in view when, in writing his epistle to the Romans, he said that there were some disciples who had a "zeal for God, but not according to knowledge." This characterization applies with special force to the case of Frank W. Sandford, the founder and leader of "The Holy Ghost and Us" movement, who has been tried and convicted in a United States District Court in Maine of causing the deaths of six of his followers on the ill-fated yacht Coronet. He now faces a heavy fine, or ten years' imprisonment, or both. Sandford was sincere in his belief, but was carried away by unbridled "zeal without knowledge," until he became a dangerous fanatic. Like Dowie, he was the Elijah of his following — strong, self-willed, dominating — a man who, under different circumstances, might have accomplished much. There was abundant evidence of his fanaticism adduced at the trial. In his address to the jury, he justified all his acts and even his mistakes on the ground of divine guidance. The most charitable conclusion would seem to be that his mind had been impaired by the failure of his schemes and his subsequent sufferings, together with the misfortunes of those around him. His case is a warning to those who come into contact with men who, however great their energy and ability in religious work, are distinguished chiefly by their zeal without knowledge.

The Right of Free Speech

EVERY lover of peace and every endorser of the arbitration treaties now before the United States Senate will be shocked at the effort made in New York City on December 12 to break up the great meeting called to raitfy those noble treaties. Five thousand people were gathered together in Carnegie Hall, most of them representing the highest intellectual and social element in the metropolis. On the platform sat the aged builder of this stately and beautiful auditorium, and the donor of one of the greatest benefactions of the age—$10,000,000 to promote peace between the nations. Grouped around him were leading scholars, ministers, financiers and orators. The most eloquent peace advocates in the land had been selected to address this distinguished assembly; but before the programme was half finished, and as soon as a resolution embodying the purpose of the meeting had been read by Dr. Butler, a packed mob broke forth into a roar which prevented further discussion. As President Butler concluded, a man sprang up behind him and moved to amend the resolution by adding to it the majority report of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, which, as is well known, is averse to the treaties. Then the tempest broke. Instead of allowing the amendment to be placed before the audience and voted upon, in parliamentary form, these hoodlums kept up an almost incessant hooting until the meeting had to be declared adjourned. Joseph H. Choate, the honored chairman of the meeting; Mr. Carnegie himself, Henry Watterson, and others, notably the eloquent Jewish rabbi, Stephen S. Wise, tried to stem the turbulent tide; but only a few broken words at a time were permitted by any one.

The interrupter explained his rude action by the absurd plea that the treaties between France, Great Britain and America were intended to injure Germany, and he, as a representative of a great German-American society, wished the treaties defeated. That this should have been attempted by a determined suppression of the immemorial right of free speech, in a great American mass-meeting, was most discreditable to its prime movers, and will be justly condemned by our best German citizens. It was a rowdy effort to transplant to American soil the sensational German-English war scare in which our people have hardly even a passing interest, since we are on the friendliest terms with both nations.

"The Lord's Money"

SHE was a middle-aged, pleasant-faced lady, and when she entered THE CHRISTIAN HERALD offices in the Bible House, one day last week, and said she was a regular subscriber and had a little business matter that needed to be settled, the clerks gave her the usual prompt attention.

"I have some of the Lord's money," she explained, "and now I've come to place it where it will do His work."

With this, she laid on the desk $103.50 and gave instructions as to its distribution. Her list of beneficiaries covered a wide range, showing that she was actively interested in many different phases of the Lord's work. This was the apportionment of her gift, as she directed it to be forwarded through THE CHRISTIAN HERALD:

China Orphans	$10.00
Williamsburg Mission to Jews	10.00
Rev. F. Jansen, Cebu, P. I.	10.00
Society of Soul Winners	10.00
Lincoln University	10.00
Christian Schmitt, Labrador	10.00
Mary Reed Leper Mission	8.50
International Sunshine Society	5.00
Five Points Mission	10.00
To be used for needy family	10.00
Bowery Mission	10.00
Total	$103.50

She declined to allow her name to be mentioned in connection with this timely gift to worthy causes. Like many other readers of this journal, she had learned the preciousness of the passage from the Sermon on the Mount, "When thou doest alms let not thy left hand know what thy right hand doeth: . . . and thy Father, which seeth in secret, shall recompense thee."

Within twenty-four hours after her visit, her gifts were in the mail and being carried to their various destinations.

Contents of this Number

Wednesday, December 27, 1911

	PAGE
"The Age of Innocence" . . . . . From a painting by Sir Joshua Reynolds	Cover
Our Mail-Bag	1310
A Yankee Youth at Odds with Russia (Illustrated)	1311
The Life Triumphant. Sermon . . . . . By Rev. Charles Aubrey Eaton, D.D.	1312, 1313
Switching on the Light. By Eugene Thwing . .	1313
A Tour in the Sahara (Illustrated) . . . . By Alfred R. Shorey	1314, 1338
Peace Meeting Ends in Uproar (Illustrated) . .	1315
OUR EDITORIAL FORUM	1316
THE BIBLE AND NEWSPAPER (Illustrated) . . .	1317
Died for Christ in China (Illustrated)	1318
The Missionary Martyrs of Shensi (Illustrated) . .	1319
Shepherds. By Marie Conway Oemler (Illustrated) .	1320
The Gospel of the Bread Line (Illustrated) . . . By Rev. J. G. Hallimond	1329
A Wonderful Boy Sculptor (Illus.) By Lillian E. Zeh	1330
Brander Cushing's Ambition (Illustrated) . . By Charles M. Sheldon	1331, 1334
By the Glowing Winter Fire. By Margaret E. Sangster	1332
Our Boys and Girls (Illustrated)	1333
Women of the Baptist Alliance	1335
Sunday School Lesson. By Dr. and Mrs. W. F. Crafts .	1336
Christian Herald Peace League	1338
Young People's Societies	1339

THE BIBLE AND NEWSPAPER

Conducted by FERDINAND C. IGLEHART, D.D.

Crowned Emperor of India

GEORGE V and Queen Mary were crowned Emperor and Empress of India at the Durbar at Delhi on December 12, amid a scene which for richness of color and magnificence of decorations has perhaps never been surpassed in modern times. The huge amphitheatre which had been erected in the camp was thronged. The bright dresses and sparkling gems of the many Indian princes and the brilliant uniforms of the soldiers contrasted strongly with the white dresses of the European ladies and the sober garb of the civilian officers. The viceregal procession came into view. Escorted by a brilliantly uniformed native bodyguard, the Viceroy and Lady Hardinge sat in their state carriage, drawn by blooded horses with outriders uniformed in scarlet and gold. Then the booming of an imperial salute announced the approach of the Emperor and Empress. The royal carriage, drawn by four magnificent horses, was almost hidden from view by the gaily caparisoned escort. The Emperor was in a robe of imperial purple, a surcoat of purple, white satin breeches, and silk stockings. He wore the collars of the orders of the Garter and the Star of India and the star of the latter order. The imperial crown consisted of a band of diamonds studded with large emeralds and sapphires with rubies in the centre, and a cap of purple velvet turned up with ermine. The Queen-Empress's dress was of white satin embroidered with a design of roses, thistles, and shamrocks, with a border of lotus flowers. The Star of India embroidered the front of her dress. Her Majesty's imperial robe was of purple velvet trimmed with ermine, with a border of gold braid. She wore the orders of the Garter and the Star of India. Her ornaments were a diamond and emerald necklace and brooches. Carriage after carriage with members of the suite followed the imperial pair. The guard presented arms and the bands burst into the royal anthem. The combined processions proceeded slowly to the great central tent, where their Majesties stood to receive the homage and congratulations of the governors, ruling princes, and other representatives of British India. When the gorgeously uniformed line had filed past, the imperial and viceregal parties appeared before the vast assemblage in the Durbar amphitheatre. When they took their seats on the crimson dais the strains of the national anthem were heard, and the people rose as one person and stood in profound silence. It was a pretty group around the four thrones of the Emperor, the Empress, the Viceroy and the Vicereine, at the back of which the imperial and viceregal staffs and the Imperial Cadet Corps, composed entirely of youthful princes and scions of princely families, formed in rank. The first formal act of the ceremony was performed by the Foreign Secretary, who advanced to the dais and asked permission of the Emperor to open the Durbar. At the proper time the imperial herald on a jet black charger rode up toward the thrones on which the royal personages were seated, and at the command of the Emperor he turned his horse about and read aloud that George V had been crowned King-Emperor. The Emperor arose from his throne and saluted the multitude and received the loud cheers of 100,000 subjects. At the conclusion of the ceremony Lord Hardinge announced that the King had resolved to give 50 lacs of rupees ($2,500,000) to popular education, and that further generous gifts for similar purposes would follow. It was also announced that the seat of government was to be transferred from Calcutta to Delhi. The political unrest in Bengal and disturbance in Calcutta were among the reasons for the transfer of the seat of government to Delhi, the ancient capital, counted as a sort of shrine by the natives of the Eastern Empire. What a striking contrast is presented, when we compare this amazing display of wealth and magnificence with the condition of the many millions in India who are in a chronic condition of poverty and starvation.

The rich man's wealth is his strong city: the destruction of the poor is their poverty. (Prov. 10: 15.)

A General View of the Great Durbar Camp, Which Covered Twenty-five Square Miles

Killed by a Tarantula

Leo Sharp, employed by a local transfer company in York, Pa., was unloading bananas the other day when a tarantula bit his hand, which immediately began to swell, and caused him intense pain. These ugly spiders are as big as a pigeon's egg and usually covered with brown or black bristly hair. They are the scourge of many Central American countries, and are considered a great danger in Mexico and some parts of our Southwestern country. He at once consulted a physician, but the treatment did not stay the effects of the poison, and he sank down into insensibility and death. There should be greater care at the points of shipment in the tropics to exclude the tarantula from the banana bunches which furnish such good hiding places for this dangerous insect. It is quite a common thing to discover them in the unloading and handling of the fruit, and numbers of persons in this country are stung each year as poor Sharp was, but fortunately a large number of persons bitten recover. Wherever there is anything of value in the material or moral world, there lurks the danger to destroy. The tarantula of sin is ever ready in unexpected moments to bite and poison the soul, but fortunately there is a cure which if applied will never fail. The blood of the Crucified One is an antidote for the poison bite of sin.

He was wounded for our transgression, he was bruised for our iniquities: the chastisement of our peace was upon him; and with his stripes we are healed. (Isa. 53:5.)

Nation's Greatest Cotton Crop

It has been known for some time that the cotton crop of the country for the present year would be an enormous one, but the most optimistic figures did not equal those given by the Department of Agriculture in its estimate of the year's yield. The department from present reports estimates the crop at 14,885,000 bales, the largest on record, exceeding that of 1904 by 1,447,000 bales. Every State in the cotton belt except Mississippi, Louisiana, Arkansas and Oklahoma established new records for this product. Corn is still king in this country, but cotton is a close rival. The cropkillers in the brokers' offices and the calamity howlers in and out of politics have wasted their breath, while a kind Providence has sent us an abundance of food and of raiment in the harvests of the year. What gratitude the nation owes, and what new obligations are thus laid on the people to maintain the highest standard of individual integrity and of public virtue! The prophet foretold the bountiful harvest:

And the floors shall be full of wheat, and the fats shall overflow with wine and oil. (Joel 2:24.)

The Power of Music

Four men in the murderers' row of the county jail in Chicago, who were to die three days before Christmas, cried in their cells when Jenny Dufau, the soprano star, sang to them a Christmas carol. The murderers remained in the rear of their iron cages, looking with tear-blinded eyes at the young woman whose voice has charmed great audiences in Europe and America. At the close of the song there was a hush, and then the weeping grew louder and one of the slayers cried out, "O God, God!" Another came to the front of the cell and said "Sing; please sing again." Miss Dufau was weeping by this time. Miss Dufau sang the church song "Noel" and the four condemned men knelt in awe and prayer. When the singer left they wiped the tears from their eyes with their sleeves and called out in unison to her, "Good-by." The best are not altogether too good, nor are the worst altogether bad. There was something divine left in the bad men that was awakened by the voice in song. The eye is nearest the intellect, the ear is nearest the heart. Melody melts the heart and opens the fountain of tears, or it soothes the troubled spirit into peace, or impels to deeds of daring or duty, or lifts the soul up till it shares the joys of absolute melody. What a witchery there is in woman's voice in song as she puts her babe to sleep, or expresses some sweet sympathy or divine sentiment!

In the arrangements of Divine Providence, music and song have been made an important part of all dispensations, in the gorgeous Mosaic ritual, and in the ancient and modern worship of the Christian church. The singing about the Christ Child that broke the heart of the murderers has been and is now a powerful agent in winning the soul from a wicked life and in saving it. Heaven is a realm of melody. The angel choir came out from paradise to sing at the birth of the Christ Child:

Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men. (Luke 2:14.)

Rats Gnawed His Money

John Simpson, of Aitkin, Minn., wrote a letter to President Taft the other day, indicating that he had hidden away $2,565 in bank bills and that the rats and mice had gnawed it into pulp, and requesting the government to make his loss good. The President referred the letter to the Treasury Department, which refused to grant the request on the ground that the pulp into which the roll of bills had been ground made the identification of the money impossible. The department recently redeemed for a Kansas farmer a roll of bills spoiled by a year's burial in the earth. The money fell from the farmer's pocket while he was plowing and was buried in the furrow, and turned up again the next season. Mr. Simpson said the savings of a lifetime, with which he intended to buy a farm, had been hidden away under the carpet of an upstairs room. He was afraid of the insecurities of banks, and of the various forms of investment, but forgot that thieves get on the trails of such treasures, and do not hesitate at murder to secure them, and that rats and mice find such paper good for nests. He might have invested his savings in wild speculation, or in some form of respectable gambling, or deposited them in an unsound banking institution, and lost them just as certainly as he did by the teeth of the rats. But he could have taken it to some sound savings bank, or some institution with ample security, and had from three to six per cent. interest on it, and kept the principal besides. He had no business to leave his money idle, and his loss is that which is liable to come to the pocket or soul of the man who will not put his talent to use. One of the most powerful lessons Christ taught was the sin and the penalty of spiritual idleness; of failing to employ the faculties, the opportunities given. And one of the fearful penalties of such failure to use these faculties the Saviour said was that the precious talents would be taken away from the possessor.

Take therefore the talent from him. (Matt. 25:28.)

Man Worked 100 Years

Cherokee Bill, an Indian negro, said to be one hundred and fourteen years old, and declared by the United States census to be the oldest man in America, has announced that he will retire from active work. "One hundred years of work is enough for any man," Bill said. "I wanted to retire with $100,000 to my credit, an average of $100 for every working year of my life, but I can't quite make it." He is reported to have laid up enough for a rainy day in the past fifteen years from gold mining in Leadville, Cripple Creek, and along the Grand River. Cherokee Bill, the name he is known by in Colorado, came of hardy stock and has taken good care of himself. But the average human clock runs down for good under forty years, and those are living on borrowed time who are threescore years and ten and fourscore years old. Longevity is an important subject in sociology and also in religion; but the most important thing is the right use of the life, long or short. Some lives of eighty are thin and barren, and some of thirty have eternities crowded into them. Cherokee Bill, if no mistake was made in his calendar, was within six years of the age of the great lawgiver, who worked up to the time of his death.

And Moses was an hundred and twenty years old when he died: his eye was not dim, nor his natural force abated. (Deut. 34:7.)

DIED FOR CHRIST IN CHINA

A Street Scene in Sianfu, the Capital, Where Eight Foreigners Were Killed

Rev. William Hagqvist

One of the Scandinavian Mission workers at Sianfu, whose associates were massacred by rioters

Mr. and Mrs. Hagqvist and Their Children at Home in Sianfu

Miss Christiana Andersen
(Probably killed)
and Native Helpers

Mr. and Mrs. Beckman, Mr. Vatne, and the Children of the Mission School, Five of Whom Were Killed, Including the Two Marked x

Mr. and Mrs. Ahlstrand (Missionaries) and Son

Mr. Newman, Postmaster (Who was Murdered), and His Native Staff in the Post Office Building

Scandinavian Missionaries and Children

Miss Andersen and the Women and Children of the Scandinavian Mission

MISSIONARY MARTYRS OF SHENSI

ONE of the saddest phases of the revolution in China is the case of the martyred missionaries who fell at their posts in the ancient province of Shensi. News of their death was received by cable briefly and announced in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, but the details of the event have just come to hand. Shensi has always been considered a loyal province, and during the Boxer troubles its capital, Sianfu, was the chosen refuge of the Court when it fled from Peking. But the revolutionary sentiment, which seems to have penetrated to the heart of China, transformed the usually docile population of the province into bitter enemies of the reigning government. Large bodies of armed revolutionists appeared at Sianfu and under skilful leaders an attack was made on the Manchus. There are reports that in the terrible slaughter that followed 8,000 Manchus, including many officials, perished. It is understood that a considerable portion of the imperial troops deserted to the rebel ranks. There was much looting and the slaughter of natives was indiscriminate. In one of the mission schools, a number of little Chinese children were slain, being mistaken for Manchus by reason of their feet not having been bound, as is customary with young girls in China.

At Sianfu, the capital, there were at the time of the outbreak some seventy-five foreigners, chiefly missionaries, seventeen of them being Americans. Some few fled to Kansu Province. In the course of the repeated attacks on the Manchus, several Christian missions were destroyed, and eight foreigners, some of them children, were killed. Almost all of these victims were connected with the Scandinavian Alliance Mission.

One of the best known missionaries in Shensi is Rev. William Hagqvist of the Scandinavian Mission. He is now in the United States in connection with the work of the mission. Mr. Hagqvist spoke with much feeling of the members of the mission who had been killed by the revolutionists during the recent massacres in Shensi. He said:

"The Scandinavian Mission began work in Shensi Province in 1891. It has done a great deal of work among the orphans who are supported by the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Our field has greatly grown, year by year. During the disturbances in 1900, through the providence of God and the help of the governor, we were saved from serious trouble. Nobody connected with our mission was killed.

"For a considerable time before the present outbreak, although we had no visible cause for anxiety or alarm, we felt that something was coming. Unrest had pervaded the country for several years. The Manchus were cordially disliked by the Chinese. The people longed to be rid of the Manchu rulers and this revolution had this sole object in view. It was hoped, at the outset, that there would be no cause for anxiety for the lives of foreigners; and it was with great surprise and sorrow that we learned that the missionaries of our Scandinavian Alliance Mission in Shensi had been threatened. In the capital, Sian, when the rebel general ordered the massacre of all Manchus there, he gave the order not to touch the missionaries and the non-combatant Chinese; but after the massacre started, the mob could not be controlled. It attacked the postoffice, where the postmaster, a German, was killed and the premises destroyed. Next a mission station in the south suburb, belonging to our Scandinavian Alliance Mission, was attacked. In this place we had a school for the missionary children, and the lady in charge, Mrs. Beckman, and the teacher, Vatne, were murdered, together with five of the missionary children. These missionaries have been faithful workers in our mission for many years. Mrs. Beckman devoted her life to the people of China, and it is sad to think of the painful close of her faithful service. Not only Mrs. Beckman was killed, but two of her children. Mr. Beckman was wounded, but managed to escape with the youngest child, an infant. Mr. Vatne, the young teacher who was killed, came to China quite recently. He left his home in Dakota and went out to serve God in China by educating the missionaries' children. It meant to him a great sacrifice, as he had the prospect of a good career in this country, not to speak of leaving a comfortable home in the West. But we believe that these precious lives that have been laid down at the post of duty will prove to be for the benefit of the people for whom they have died as martyrs.

"As to the poor little children who were murdered," continued Mr. Hagqvist, "one of them was the only child of our good missionary, Mr. Ahlstrand; two others belonged to the Bergstroms, another missionary family, and the other two were Mrs. Beckman's children, as I have already explained. We have thirty missionaries located in different places in Shensi Province, and, so far as we have learned, they have been assisted by the native Chinese Christians to escape to the coast. As we have had no news yet, we hope that the British expedition which left Peking with the idea of saving the missionaries living in the interior will be able to give them help and to assist them to safety. It is a great loss which our mission has sustained, not only in the lives of its faithful workers, but in the property destroyed. Some of our buildings were paid for by the subscriptions of our missionaries under support. We will have to rebuild in order to carry on our work, but it means a great expense and much planning to raise funds. Our Chinese Christians, and specially the orphans we have under our charge, will be in great need of help until the country becomes settled and peaceful. But we believe that the present trouble, like the Boxer uprising, will ultimately serve as a means of strength and blessing to the missionary work in China. The Manchus have always been anti-Christian and anti-reform. They never gave the people full religious liberty. If the new régime should follow a more liberal policy it will mean greater success for the missionary work in all parts of China than ever before."

In Kansu province, there are twenty-two American missionaries, including children. Most of them are workers of the Christian and Missionary Alliance. Missionary V. J. Plymire, one of the missionaries at Taochow, Kansu, wrote to Peking under date November 26, that lawlessness was increasing. The missionaries had tried to escape down the Hon River, but found it too perilous to attempt. Mails have been stopped and all the banks are either robbed or burned. The Mahometans of the province are even more bloodthirsty and threatening than ordinary Chinese.

The Interior of the Arsenal at Shanghai After It Had Been Captured by the Revolutionists

TOPICS OF INTEREST THROUGHOUT THE WORLD

—ON DECEMBER 12 a daughter was born to Queen Victoria and King Alfonso of Spain at Madrid. This is the royal couple's fifth child. Three others are living—Alfonso, Prince of the Asturias; Prince Jaime and Princess Beatrice.

—BOTH THE HUGE CANADIAN PACIFIC Railway elevators at Owen Sound, Ontario, were destroyed by fire on December 11. These elevators, which were among the largest in existence, contained over a million bushels of grain, all of which was, with the buildings, a total loss. The shipping in the harbor was for a time in great danger; but by the efforts of the crews and the fire department, and by being moved from the neighboring wharves, it was saved from serious damage.

—MRS. LUCY MILLER, of Charleston, S. C., who was specially appointed to visit John Island and ascertain the conditions of the sufferers from the late hurricane, has found five stations where there are some four hundred families in destitution. Many of them have lost everything. There are many other families on the different islands not yet investigated, who are believed to be in a similar condition.

—GOVERNOR BLEASE of South Carolina has attained an undesirable notoriety as the one executive, North or South, who has justified the lynching spirit. Addressing a public audience he is reported to have said that rather than use the power of his office to stop the lynching of a negro, he would have resigned and led the mob. It is worth noting that the press of the South, including that of his own State, is practically unanimous in condemnation of such a sentiment uttered by a governor who should be looked upon to uphold the law.

—THE SERIOUS ATTENTION OF the public has again been called to the depopulation question in France by the publication of official statistics throughout the country. These cover the first six months of 1911, and show an excess of deaths over births of 18,279. The figures are all the more discouraging from the fact that in the same period in 1910 the births exceeded the deaths by 21,189. The figures for 1911 from January to June, inclusive, are: Population, 39,252,245; marriages, 153,931; divorces, 6,374; births, 385,999; deaths, 404,278.

—EX-PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT, WHO has been generally regarded as a very strong presidential possibility, has stated publicly, in an interview at Oyster Bay, that he recently wrote a letter to a certain United States Senator expressing an earnest hope that the Senator would "not only refrain from any action looking to the nomination of Colonel Roosevelt, but also would prevent his friends from taking any such steps." This sphinxlike utterance is variously interpreted, many holding that its full significance will not be learned until the convention meets.

—FRA ANGELICO'S famous painting, the "Madonna della Stella," which was stolen from the monastery of San Marco, now used as a museum, was recovered a few days later by a force of Florentine carabinieri and police. The police had learned that the thieves were about to take the picture out of Florence, and took measures to prevent this being done. Lines of police were drawn around the locality where it was suspected that the picture had been hidden. At about midnight a man appeared with a package under his arm. The firing of revolvers was then heard about the spot. The police adopted this method of signaling the appearance of the thief to their comrades. The man with the package, convinced that he was in danger of capture, dropped his burden and ran, but was shortly afterward arrested. In the meantime the police officers secured the package, inside of which the "Madonna" was found, entirely undamaged.

—ON DECEMBER 13 King George's sister, the Duchess of Fife, with her two daughters, Princesses Alexandra and Maud, were rescued in a lifeboat from the stranded liner Delhi, which went ashore on the coast of Morocco during a storm. As soon as news of the accident reached Gibraltar two British and one French cruiser rushed to the scene, while tugs and life-saving apparatus were dispatched post haste. All the women from the ship were taken ashore first and there in a driving rain the Duchess and her daughters awaited the Duke, who was one of the last to leave the Delhi. While being taken ashore by the longboat of the British armored cruiser Duke of Edinburgh, they were thrown into the water by the capsizing of the boat, one of the daughters having a narrow escape from drowning. She was rescued by a sailor and carried to land with the others, all suffering severely from the bitter cold. Then they drove, still in a heavy downpour of rain, across the country to Tangier, six miles distant, where they boarded a warship and proceeded to Gibraltar.

—HISTORY IS AGAIN repeating itself in the attitude of the German courts in ignoring the Pope's anathema. Some time ago the question arose as to the jurisdiction of the civil courts of Saxony over the Catholic clergy. A Papal pastoral letter declared that every private person bringing a cleric before a civil court without the church's permission "shall be by his act excommunicated." The Saxon authorities have announced their intention to ignore this ordinance in the event of any conflict arising between the Roman Church and the laws of the State.

—IT IS WORTH making a note of the fact that Governor Oddie of Nevada and Governor Vessey of South Dakota, both of them now in Washington, express themselves as heartily sick of the notoriety their respective States have won as divorce centres. Governor Oddie says: "It is not a commodity of which Nevada is proud. . . . We are ashamed of the reputation of Reno." He blames the East for this undesirable state of things and especially New York as the chief provider. Both governors heartily favor a uniform divorce law, and Governor Vessey adds that a proper law would put a stop to the disgraceful rush to Sioux Falls and Reno, especially if under such a law they were prohibited from immediate remarriage to other parties.

MEN AND EVENTS OF THE DAY

Britain's New Political Leader

AFTER the resignation of the Right Hon. A. J. Balfour, M.P., from the leadership of the Unionist Party in the British House of Commons, the Unionist members met to elect a new leader. As had been predicted, the choice fell upon Mr. Andrew Bonar Law, the member for Bootle. The new leader only entered political life eleven years ago. He was born in New Brunswick in 1858, the son of a Presbyterian minister. When twelve years of age he went to Glasgow, to be educated in that city. In 1874 he joined there the firm of William Kidston & Sons, iron-merchants, of which his uncle was the head; and, later, he became partner in William Jacks & Co., iron-merchants. Gaining a noteworthy position in business, he became Chairman of the Glasgow Iron Trade Association. He retired in 1900, and in that year, as a Conservative, won the Blackfriars Division of Glasgow. From 1906 until the recent general election he was M.P. for Dulwich. Defeated at Northwest Manchester, he found a seat at Bootle. He is essentially a business man of the best type, not an orator, but an excellent debater and fighter.

Hon. Andrew Bonar Law, M. P.

Mr. Bonar Law succeeds to a position of great importance and responsibility. He must now prove himself able to fill the place that has been occupied by a statesman of long experience and splendid ability. In the course of the speech in which, on November 8, he announced his resignation of the leadership of the Unionist Party, Mr. Balfour, speaking of his Parliamentary career, said: "I was leader of the House for ten consecutive years—a longer period, I believe, of continuous leadership of the House than that of any minister since the death of William Pitt." Mr. Balfour has not resigned his seat in Parliament. He is not yet sixty-four, and he looks forward still to years of political activity.

Briceville's Mine Disaster

ONE of the most disastrous mine explosions of the year took place in the Cross Mountain Mine at Briceville, Tenn., on December 9. It was at first believed that upwards of two hundred men were in the mine at the time of the explosion. Later and more detailed investigation led to the conclusion that there were about eighty-seven men in the workings when the unexplained catastrophe took place. The cause of the explosion has not yet been definitely determined. Various theories have been advanced, such as the presence of inflammable gas, the explosion of a poorly tamped charge of dynamite, or the spontaneous combustion of coal-dust.

The Cross Mountain Mine is a veritable labyrinth of tunnels and passages. It is believed that these passages total over thirty miles in length, and it is known that they extend for several miles into the heart of the mountain. The explosion which wrecked the workings blocked many of the chief entrances and imprisoned the men in the inner tunnels and chambers. As soon as word of the disaster reached the Federal authorities, the experts and crews from the Bureau of Mines were rushed to the scene to take charge of the rescue work.

Up to the present time over sixty men have been accounted for. Five men were rescued alive while the bodies of the others were found in various parts of the mine, mostly where they had gone in attempts to find sufficient air to sustain life. In all, as far as can be estimated, while the work of searching the mine is still in progress, there have been about eighty lives lost.

The mine inspectors who visited the workings only a few days before the disaster, announced that they found the mine in excellent condition, and that in their opinion the superintendents and operators of the mine were in no way responsible through carelessness for the loss of life. The operating company has agreed to stand by and aid the families left without support.

A President for China

ON December 14 an important conference of the Chinese revolutionary leaders was held at Shanghai. At the close of the session the announcement was made that a republican government had been established and would be almost immediately proclaimed. Dr. Sun Yat Sen was chosen the first President of China and Nanking will be the capital. It was also decided that as no prospects of peace are forthcoming from the conferences between the opposing forces, and that as Yuan Shi Kai, the premier, is firm in his contention for a constitutional monarchy, the revolutionists will urgently continue their preparations for an attack on Peking. The newly appointed officials of the republican government proceeded immediately to Nanking to assume their duties.

Dr. Sun Yat Sen

On the day of his selection Dr. Sun Yat Sen, accompanied by General Homer Lea, an American, arrived at Penang on his way to Nanking. He has been regarded as the chief instigator of the present rebellion in China, its financial agent in the Western world, and, as likely to become the first president of the Chinese republic, is considerable of a mystery to Occident and Orient alike.

He was a leader in the revolt of 1905, which failed, and he barely escaped from Canton with his life. Founding the China Reform Association, he came to America, spread the movement here and is said to have borrowed hundreds of thousands of dollars in America and England to finance the rebellion, after long negotiations with financiers here and in Europe.

SHEPHERDS

By MARIE CONWAY OEMLER

A Two Part Story, of which this is Part One

"YOUR dress is finished, Cissy: I've only got to run the ribbons in the beading and sew lace in the neck: so that's off my mind, thank goodness! There's enough bread for supper, and you'll find a piece of cheese in the safe. Take a jar of the blackberry jam, and be sure to make father's tea fresh, if he comes in before I do. And do, dear, see that the boys' faces and hands are clean, and be sure that you make them say grace. I may be a little late, for I've got to call on Mrs. Fennis and see about Mary's dress after I get through with my confirmation class. And be good children, all of you, until I come back."

Allie's face was tired, her eyes were tired, her very voice was tired. At the door she turned to wave her hand to us, then closed it gently after her. Poor Allie! Things were just then at sixes and sevens, and of course she had to bear the brunt of them. Even father doesn't catch it so hard as Allie does at times.

For ours is the biggest and the poorest parish on earth, I verily believe. You can't think how poor some of us are! And the rectory is what Allie calls a 'clearing house for troubles.' Everybody comes to the rectory. The men come when they're out of work; and the women come when they're out of everything; and the children come just so. Of course father ought to have a curate to help him, but the place is so big and the work so hard and the pay so wretched that—well, he hasn't any curate.

Many times had the old bishop offered other parishes to father; and many times had father said he'd go—and didn't. For the men came and shook hands, and fumbled with their hats and hung their heads, and the women came and brought their children, and talked about other children, and cried. So father said he wouldn't.

And we live in a crowded little rectory just around the corner from our shabby old church, and we mostly wear rompers, and play a great deal in our back yard. Not that we mind it—at least we boys don't, but Cissy does at times. Cissy likes pretty clothes and pretty things and pretty people.

There are four of us youngsters—Jimmy and Cecelia and Florian, who is five years old, and the baby: and Jack, who is me. And then there's Allie: Allie is really our stepsister, and lots older. But she's been taking mother's place ever since mother went and left Florian a little crying baby.

Father says that when mother was going, she turned her beautiful head on her pillow, and whispered that she knew she could leave her little ones in her daughter's and their sister's hands. And Allie kissed her, and said she could. So, you see, we're really Allie's children now.

I've said ours is the biggest and poorest parish on earth, haven't I? Well, then, Allie runs it. Allie is housekeeper, and sews for us—and other people—and has classes, and looks after the sick, and visits all the women with babies, and the girls that have to work, and the men that can't find any. And she writes all father's letters and pays all his bills and does half his work, and looks after him, too.

Our old bishop was her best friend. He'd come and sit in our shabby old sitting-room, and get what he called a "line on the 13th Corinthians"—whatever he meant. But he said he'd rather wear out than rust out, so he wore out at last. And we hadn't laid eyes on the new bishop, who was very much younger, and smarter, and more up-to-date, and very different from our old friend, we were told.

And now the new bishop was coming to our town, and father and Allie had been getting the confirmation class in shape. We had more children to confirm than Mr. Rockwell's church had, but ours were poor, and his weren't, and there was the trouble. Most of ours hadn't anything fit to appear in on such an occasion, and Allie had to take that into consideration, and help them out, somehow or other. It was hard work, for there had been a great deal of sickness in our parish that whole winter and spring. It seemed to me that every few days the little white hearse would come stealing up to our church; and workingmen in rough clothes, and plain crying women and scared, silent children would follow little coffins down the aisle; and there'd be father with his patient, thin face that somehow or other puts you in mind of a fine gold ring worn down to the edges, saying something about One who gathers lambs to his bosom; and there'd be Allie standing by a weeping woman who clung to her arm. Poor people haven't anything else but their children, you understand, so they get to love them a great, great deal. And they lose so many that it keeps them in terror they'll lose all. And that's one reason, too, why poor people are so kind to each other: they know.

That season we didn't have any new clothes at all. Father's old coat was shiny as a mirror—Florian used to play "seeing himself" in it. Allie trimmed over her two-years-old hat, and darned and darned and darned Cissy's one white muslin. Then she said in despair that it wouldn't hold another stitch and that she knew it would fall right off Cissy some day—gone to pieces all at once like the one-hoss shay. I don't know how she managed, but she did manage, to get Cissy another. It was really a very pretty dress, and Cissy danced up and down the hall when Allie tried it on her. She was to wear it on confirmation Sunday, to do honor to the parish, father said.

And then Mrs. Delany, who does our washing and cooking, and has three children of her own, had to leave us, because all three of them fell sick—she couldn't leave the poor little things at home by themselves, of course. In the mornings they used to go to school, and in the afternoons they stayed in our yard and studied. Father arranged that. He said that all the poor woman had was her little children, and he wished to help her keep them with her—she couldn't bear the idea of sending them to the asylum. They were very nice little children, and Florian was great chums with her little Mary—a little child with the bluest eyes and the blackest hair and the quickest smile you ever saw.

Allie couldn't get a soul just then to take Mrs. Delany's place, so she had most of the work to do herself; and she was pretty tired when she left us and went over to the church to drill her big class.

Well, we were playing in the back yard after she had gone, and somebody rang the front door bell. We thought it was probably Reg Wright, our own particular chum, and Jimmy ran into the house to open the door.

It wasn't Reg. A tallish gentleman in gray followed Jimmy out on the back porch. He had a pleasant face, with twinkling gray eyes, and almost-gray hair, and little fine laugh-wrinkles about his clean-shaven lips. Just the sort of chap you'd make up to, you understand.

"I 'splained that father's out 'an Allie's out; and he says he'll wait a bit; and I asked him right in—and he come right on out," said Jimmy.

For a while he sat on the top of the steps watching us, but he seemed to get kind of interested, and before long

Continued on page 1329

New Year Greeting

WE GREET the new year and we greet you, dear CHRISTIAN HERALD subscribers, with glad, exultant hearts, and with joyous confidence for the coming year.

Sweet, indeed, is the fellowship that begins in sympathy, that continues in service and mutual helpfulness, and that, with the passing years, with the strengthening of purpose, and with the generous effort, each for the other's good, ripens into a warm and lasting friendship.

Never was wish more warm and earnest than our wish at this moment, when we say to you, men and women, to you, boys and girls in nearly half a million CHRISTIAN HERALD families throughout the world—Happy New Year! We wish you, every one, a bright and happy new year, full to the brim with rich and abounding joy.

You have helped us, you have encouraged us, you have made us glad with your sympathy and cordial letters of praise and good wishes. We have worked together in many noble enterprises for the blessing of humanity and the bringing of heaven to earth. We have been separated by a few mere miles of land and water, but we have been close together, none the less, shoulder to shoulder, heart to heart, in the real companionship which no distance can separate. So shall we continue! So shall we go forward together into the new year.

We know you. We need not tell you that the way to have a truly Happy New Year is to help somebody else to have a Happy New Year. You know it as well as we do. We need not tell you that you cannot possibly help somebody else without being helped yourself. You know that, too. You have learned it by experience. So when, with an eager, throbbing earnestness, we wish you all a Happy New Year, you know something of the depth, and breadth, and fulness of our wish for you, and for others THROUGH YOU.

When the Master said to Peter, "Lovest thou me? . . . Feed my sheep . . . Feed my lambs," he was bidding him the happiest, the most supremely joyous New Year and New Life possible to human experience.

Dear CHRISTIAN HERALD folks, think of the sheep, think of the lambs throughout this great world that need to be fed by the lovers of that same Master! Can we wish you, or can you wish us, any Happier New Year than to wish that we may, together, have a large share in this blessed work?

Now, we must, as heretofore, proceed in a careful, methodical, businesslike way. Enthusiasm without a strong, well-fitting harness can hardly be depended upon to do any work aright. Your co-operation with THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has made all things possible that have been done in the past and the present, and gives us good hope for a larger and more joyful future.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

People's Home Journal

By bringing good literature within the reach of the reading public of this country, The People's Home Journal has probably done more than any other popular fiction and home magazine to help build up the American home into the great national bulwark that it is to-day. For the past twenty-five years fathers and mothers have looked to The People's Home Journal for their reading and the reading for their children. This magazine has had a wonderful influence for good in every one of the homes—almost a million—into which it goes. It has become famous for its brilliant serial and short stories. Then you will also find all kinds of departments to cover a multitude of home subjects, such as cooking, care of children, entertainment, latest styles in clothing and newest fashions in needlework.

The Housewife

The Housewife is exactly described by the name it bears, being edited with a view to giving the woman, who has the care and development of her home at heart, valuable suggestions and assistance. The department devoted to Cookery always contains practical, seasonable and tasty recipes. The Fashion Department, recently enlarged, displays the most desirable and fetching styles. The Social Circle, a special department, found in no other magazine, is used by Housewife readers as an interchange of ideas for home decoration, amusement, hints in economy, health, etc. The many serial and short stories are interesting and wholesome, effectively illustrated. Handsomely printed with beautiful colored covers. A magazine the arrival of which the reader looks forward to each month with interest.

McCall's Magazine

The greatest woman's fashion journal in America. Has over one million subscribers—more than any other similar publication. Besides showing the latest designs of McCall Patterns, each issue is brimful of sparkling short stories and most helpful information for women. McCall's is a large, artistic, handsomely illustrated hundred-page monthly periodical that no woman can afford to be without. If you wish to save money and keep in style, subscribe for McCall's Magazine at once. Any one of the celebrated McCall Patterns (value 15 cents) free with each subscription. Select your free pattern from your first number of McCall's. McCall Patterns lead all others in style, fit, simplicity, economy, and number sold. More dealers sell McCall Patterns than any other two makes combined.

Ladies' World

This is the big year of the Ladies' World. 1911-1912 marks the 25th year of its existence. Nothing has been left undone to make the Ladies' World during the coming year run far ahead of its record for any previous year. The magnificent list of writers and illustrators, rich array of magazine material and the ever valuable departments will make the Ladies' World almost indispensable to you during this—its Silver Anniversary Year.

The December Jubilee Number will contain an especially written commemorative poem by Edwin Markham, special articles by Speaker Champ Clark of the House of Representatives and Mrs. Robert M. La Follette, Strickland Gillilan's reminiscences, stories by John Luther Long, Florence Morse Kingsley, Beulah Marie Dix and the beginning of an entrancing serial by Edith Barnard Delano.

MAGAZINE

Begin the New Year With a Gene

This may be the last season in whic you can secure all the leading magazines club rates. Post Office restrictions a becoming more and more stringent, and pe haps it will soon be impossible to supp magazines at the present low prices. Man

Christian Herald One Year
Ladies' World One Year
$1.75

Or a choice of any one of the following magazines in place of Ladies' World:

Housewife McCall's People's Home Journal

The Christian Herald with any Two Magazines Named Above $2.10

The Christian Herald with any Three Magazines named above $2.40

Christian Herald ($1.50 a Year)
Current Literature ($3 a Year)
$3.00

Including a choice of any two of the following magazines: Ladies' World, Housewife, McCall's, People's Home Journal.

Or including a choice of any one of the folowing magazines: American Boy, Metropolitan, Success, Modern Priscilla, Little Folks, World Evangel.

Christian Herald ($1.50 a Year)
Review of Reviews ($3 a Year)
$3.25

Including a choice of any two of the following magazines: Ladies' World, Housewife, McCall's, People's Home Journal.

Or including a choice of any one of the following magazines: American Boy, Metropolitan, Success, Modern Priscilla, Little Folks, World Evangel.

Christian Herald One Year . .
Good Housekeeping One Year .
$2.50

Or a choice of either the Cosmopolitan or Harper's Bazar or any two in this group with The Christian Herald for $3.50

We will refund the money paid for any Magazine, including The Christian Herald if you find such Magazine undesirable in your home.

The Christian Herald, Bible House, New York

Your Own Christian Herald Renewal and One NEW Christian Herald Subscription for One Year for $2.25

BARGAINS!

ous List of the Very Best Magazines publishers have already raised their rates. We offer here better bargains than ever, more value for less money, especially in the $1.75 Group. Remember you may have your money back on any magazines you are not satisfied with, including The Christian Herald.

Christian Herald (One Year) Pictorial Review (One Year) $2.00

Or a choice of any one of the following magazines in place of the Pictorial Review:

American Boy Metropolitan Success
Modern Priscilla World Evangel Little Folks

The Christian Herald with any Two Magazines Named Above $2.60

The Christian Herald with any Three Magazines Named Above $3.20

Any two of the following magazines may be substituted for any one of the above group

Ladies' World, McCalls, Housewife, People's Home Journal

Christian Herald ($1.50 a Year). . Outlook ($3.00 a Year) $3.00

Both magazines must be ordered to the same name and address

Christian Herald ($1.50 a Year). . Woman's Home Companion ($1.50 a Year) $2.65

Or a choice of any one of the following magazines instead of Woman's Home Companion

American Everybody's McClure's Garden Magazine or any two of these with The Christian Herald for $3.80

We will refund the money paid for any Magazine, including The Christian Herald, if you find such Magazine undesirable in your home.

The Christian Herald, Bible House, New York City

The Modern Priscilla

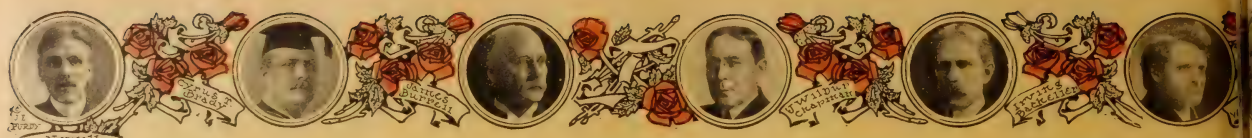
First, last and all the time, the best Fancy Work Magazine published in America, if not in the world. A practical instructor and reliable adviser in every branch of feminine handicraft known to women, including all kinds of embroidery, crochet, knitting, lace, bead work, basketry, stenciling, oil, water-color and china painting, art leather work, art brass work, pyrography, etc. Every number is profusely illustrated with beautiful original designs and full-size details of stitches. Besides fancy work, The Modern Priscilla provides its readers many specially edited departments.

American Boy

The great magazine for boys. Give it to your boy. It will appeal more to his finer sensibilities than the tawdry, soon-forgotten gifts. It trains him to live and think right. The American Boy contains stories written by men who understand the American boy—stories of adventure, skill, travel, history, biography and world events, beautifully illustrated. It has a department devoted to the Boy Scouts of America, to which Ernest Thompson Seton, Chief Scout, contributes an illustrated page each week. It is the biggest, brightest and best magazine for boys in all the world. The American Boy is eagerly read by 500,000 intelligent, manly American boys.

Pictorial Review

claims pre-eminence among women's magazines for four reasons: First, for its fashions, which are easily the most up-to-date, correct and most practical of any magazine published anywhere. Second, for its common-sense, essentially helpful practical home and household departments, which cover the whole field of housekeeping and its problems. Pictorial Review devotes more space to this subject than any other magazine in this country. Third, For the wealth and interest of its art and literary sections. Pictorial Review stories are good stories, better and more interesting, stronger stories than you are apt to find in the pages of other women's magazines.



Outlook

During the coming year the Outlook will be of more importance to you than even during the last, as the discussions in the political field will be of greater interest, due to the approaching presidential election and the outcome of the Taft policies. Of course, Mr. Roosevelt will write in his trenchant editorials on great public questions of the day. In these articles he will continue to discuss the movements for clean politics, honest business, and popular rule. Not even the editors of the Outlook themselves agree with all that Mr. Roosevelt writes, but every one must agree that what he writes commands attention.

Your Own Christian Herald Renewal and Two NEW Christian Herald Subscriptions for One Year for $3.00

THE CHRISTIAN

THE AMERICAN PULPIT. Fifty-Two Greatest Sermons of the Ye

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD publishes more remarkable sermons than any other paper in the world. During coming year we will publish a strong series by leading pulpit orators—"Fifty-two Greatest Sermons." Amo the contributors will be:

REV. J. H. JOWETT
PROF. R. A. TORREY
REV. A. C. DIXON
REV. C. A. EATON
BISHOP J. C. HARTZELL
REV. CHARLES M. SHELDON
REV. J. WILBUR CHAPMAN
REV. J. BALCOM SHAW
REV. NEWELL DWIGHT HILLIS
BISHOP WILLIAM A. QUAYLE
REV. CHARLES H. PARKHURST
DR. DAVID JAMES BURRELL
REV. CHARLES F. AKED
REV. FERDINAND C. IGLEHA
BISHOP HENRY W. WARR

IN THE FOOTSTEPS OF ST. PAUL. By Dr. Francis E. Clark

Dr. Francis E. Clark, founder of the Christian Endeavor Society, who is now traveling in the Orient, has und taken to write exclusively for our readers "A Journey in the Footsteps of St. Paul." He will visit the "Sev Churches of Asia," and will record his impressions. His articles will be finely illustrated with photographs.

CIRCLING THE COAST OF AFRICA. By Bishop J. C. Hartzell

We have arranged for a series of illustrated articles to be written by Bishop J. C. Hartzell, who has depart on a tour in the course of which he means to circle the coast of the entire African Continent. He w proceed down the west and up the east coast, visiting every point of interest, and his letters will give a t picture of the condition of Africa as it is to-day. They will be illustrated with striking photographs.

OUR BIBLE QUESTIONS SERIES TO BE CONTINUED DURING 1912

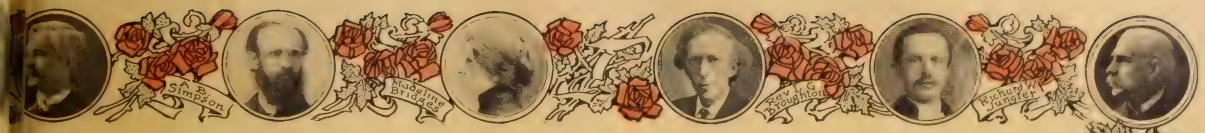
Our attractive and helpful series of difficult Bible questions proved to be one of the most popular features of T CHRISTIAN HERALD during the past year. The series will be continued during 1912 as a regular monthly d partment. Every reader of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD will have an opportunity to join this great class for Bible stud

MISSIONARY CONTRIBUTIONS FROM EVERY LAND

There is no other paper with so large and varied a staff of missionary contributors as THE CHRISTIAN HERAL In every land it has its correspondents who write of the actual life of the missionaries, giving not theories, b facts. All illustrate their letters with photographs taken with their own cameras. These contributors give special value to the paper as a journal of world-wide missionary interest.

HOW THEY FILLED THEIR CHURCHES. A Series by Successful Ministers

In this series, which will appear in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD during 1912, various well-known ministers wi endeavor to tell the secret of their success in building up a large church attendance. Such a series cannot fa to prove of intense interest to everyone who is interested in the modern church movement.



CHRISTIAN PHILOSOPHY. By Eugene Thwing

Mr. Thwing, whose articles on the Philosophy of Every-Day Life are very popular with our readers, wi continue his helpful talks in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD during 1912. Mr. Thwing has a kindly way o enforcing great truths upon the minds of his readers that makes his articles very welcome.

THE CHRISTIAN HERA

THE GREATEST AND MOST USEFUL PREMIUM EVER OFFERED

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD ALMANAC was compiled especially for our readers. Every line of it is devoted to information Realizing that CHRISTIAN HERALD readers wanted facts not available in other great almanacs, or even in ordinary libraries, it wa decided to make this a work of ready reference for every intelligent household in the land. The subjects have been grouped unde five heads, with many subdivisions: The Calendar; Religious Information; the United States Government; Agricultural Interests

ERALD FOR 1912

EW SERIAL STORY. By Cyrus Townsend Brady

us Townsend Brady, the author of so many historical novels, has written for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD a ing tale of the Frontier in the days when the life of the settler hung hourly in the balance. This story, ch is full of the heroism, and, be it said, the spirit of self-sacrifice which characterized those days, will be tinued through a number of issues of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. It is an absorbing story.

ONDERFUL POEM. By EDWIN MARKHAM, Author of "The Man With the Hoe" have just secured from Edwin Markham a remarkable poem, entitled, "The Cup of Pride." It will be blished in the first number of the New Year, and should attract much attention. Mr. Markham has promised contribute other poems to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD during 1912.

NEW YEAR'S BEST GIFT. A Symposium by Famous Americans have asked 100 representative men and women the following question: "What in your opinion would be best gift the New Year could bring to the American people?" The answers have come from Governors, yors, Senators, Congressmen, Ministers, Scientists, Educators and other leaders in the walks of life. eir replies will be published in the first number of the New Year.

CIAL ARTICLES. By Well-Known Writers

cial Articles will be published in every number during 1912. Among those who will contribute will be:

AYTON SEDGWICK COOPER, an Authority on Bible Propaganda.
PROFESSOR MASON P. YOUNG, Famous in Oriental Travel.
REAR-ADMIRAL CHARLES D. SIGSBEE of the Battleship Maine.
DR. L. O. HOWARD, Chief of the Bureau of Entomology, Washington, D.C.
PROFESSOR EDGAR J. BANKS, the Famous Orientalist.
WILFRED GRENFELL, the Arctic Hero and Philanthropist.

ON. CHARLES MCFARLAND of the Federal Council of Christian America will contribute an article entitled: The Relation Between the Church and Social Service."

EW AGRICULTURAL DEVELOPMENT. By Professor O. S. Morgan

ofessor O. S. Morgan, of Columbia University, is preparing a series of articles which concerns the supply and mand of vegetable and fruit products as between cities and towns and the producing sections in their mediate neighborhood. It contains a suggestion for abating somewhat the increasing cost of living.

SE AND NONSENSE. By Samantha (Josiah Allen's Wife)

arietta Holley, author of "Samantha at Coney Island" and other delightful books, will contribute a series short talks on homely subjects. You may be sure they will be entertaining as well as helpful.

MOUS WOMEN CONTRIBUTORS

cial attention will be paid to the Women's Department. g the contributors will be:

LINE BRIDGES KATE UPSON CLARK
PORTER, who conducts the Young People's Department.
ARET E. SANGSTER,
"The gentle Counselor of The Christian Herald Family."

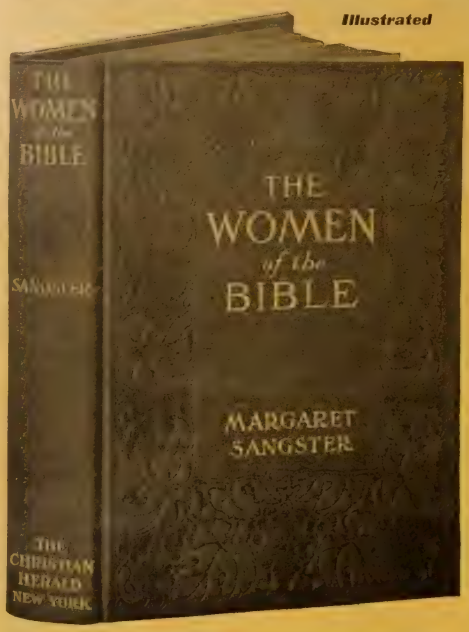
STORIES BY AUTHORS OF NOTE

These will be announced during the year. Among those who will contribute are:

ELEANOR H. PORTER, Author of "Marco" and of "Margaret."
FLORENCE MORSE KINGSLEY SUSAN M. GRIFFITH
MISS E. L. GEBHARD AMELIA E. BARR
IRVING BACHELLER MARIE CONWAY OEMLER, and others.

D ALMANAC FOR 1912

EN FREE TO ALL SUBSCRIBERS OF THE CHRISTIAN HERALD



ign Countries; General Subjects. There are about one hundred and fifty thousand words of reading matter, or more than twice it to be found in the highest-priced magazines, and even more than is to be found in the average dollar and a half book. These es give no idea of the value of this work, which will not be laid aside when read nor cease to be valuable at the end of the year, will continue to be read with an increasing appreciation of its value and importance.

THE WOMEN OF THE BIBLE

By MARGARET E. SANGSTER

Illustrated

Given Free as a Premium to Old Subscribers for Securing One NEW Subscription to The Christian Herald at $1.50. Or sent with One Renewal for $2.00.

This magnificent volume is one which will be cordially welcomed in tens of thousands of America's Christian homes. It is the most comprehensive book ever written on womankind, for it is a World's Portrait Gallery and embraces the foremost representatives of the sex from Eve down to the beginning of the Christian era.

Mrs. Sangster, who is one of the most graceful and sympathetic of American authors, has this to say concerning The Women of the Bible:

"In studying these wonderful women, we are brought face to face with many types of character. No two women in the list are precisely alike; yet not one, whether she be saint or sinner, prophetess or queen, daughter of antiquity or child of the early Christian era, fails in being distinctly and wholly feminine. There are many of them heroines who have the courage of men and woman's beauty in rare combination. There are women who came from the plain people, who rose to the height of a great occasion and met an emergency with an undaunted front."

Heretofore, history and biography have dealt largely with the doings of man; Mrs. Sangster rewrites it in the most delightful and attractive fashion, giving to womanhood its true setting in this story of the world's development and civilization. Every individual life that is touched by her pen is illuminated by her literary genius. She brings out qualities of greatness and power never before noted, or only faintly hinted. In her Women of the Bible every central character is a queen in her own right, surrounded by her faithful subjects, ruling her realm with love, wisdom and discretion, and making civilization and history. It is a book of romance in actual life in which the home, the court, the temple, the battlefield, the desert, the throne, all play their part. Here one may study and learn more of woman's true nature and of her intellectual and spiritual possibilities than in a whole library of other books. In love, in patriotism, in service, in prophecy, in religion, woman is here assigned her true place at last, and it is a noble one!

"I have written this book with enthusiasm," Mrs. Sangster says in her preface. "I have renewed in memory the happy days of childhood, when I first made acquaintance with Sarah, Rebekah, Rachel, Miriam, Hannah and how many more, as I heard Bible stories from the lips of those who long since went to abide in the home beyond the sea. Every page of this work has been to me a delight that words fail fully to portray. If my readers shall find in it half the inspiration, the pleasure and the profit I have had in writing it, I shall be more than ever glad of the privilege that has been mine in this especial work."

Seldom has any book issued in recent years been so beautifully illustrated as this great volume, which contains sixteen full-page artistically colored portraits of Bible heroines by famous masters. The book is printed in large, clear type, contains 363 pages, is handsomely and substantially bound in cloth, and is published as a premium by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

The Christian Herald Home Library

Given Free as a Premium to Old Subscribers for Securing Two NEW Subscriptions to The Christian Herald at $1.50 each. Express 25 cents extra. Or sent with One Renewal Subscription for $2.50.

This splendid little library of useful books will be found in constant demand by every member of the household. It is a condensed encyclopedia of the things that you are most likely to want information about. The following are the titles of the eight volumes with a slight indication of the contents of each:

Entertainments for Home, Church and School. Do you know how to entertain company, amuse young folks, provide holiday pastimes? Could you get up some form of amusement for a church or school social? This book will show you how.

Practical Suggestions for Mother and Housewife. Did you secure a copy of the Government Cook Book? No? Well, you will find it in this book, as well as a thousand other hints that will make your home life brighter and better.

Healthful Sports for Boys. The growing boy will read this book from cover to cover. It contains the rules for every game that every boy should know—from marbles to baseball—kite-flying to skating.

Helpful Talks with Girls. Every girl would like to know how to make extra money. This book will tell you hundreds of ways to do it at home, in business, in town, or on the farm.

Business Hints for Men and Women. Do you know how to make a Will, Endorse a Note, Draw up a Bill of Sale, Make an Investment, Understand a Deed, etc., etc.? This book will tell you.

The Handy Man's Manual is filled with practical information—from how to get free Government land to the latest kink in automobiles—from how to build a house, to the differences in standard time.

Marvels of Modern Science. In these days of Aeroplanes, Wireless Telegraphy, Radium, Seeing by Wire, etc., it behooves you to keep up to date. This book will bring you up to the minute on all these achievements which people are talking about.

How to Speak and Write Correctly. Even if you did receive a good education, you may have fallen into the habit of saying "I seen it," or "I done it." If you read the simple hints in this book, you need not go wrong.

Illustrated

PILGRIM'S PROGRESS

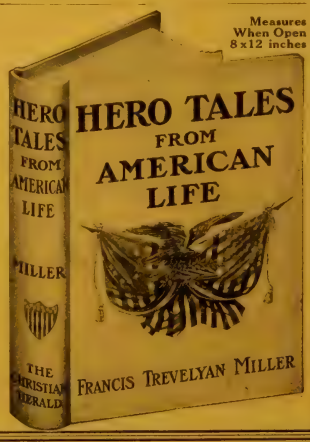
Given Free as a Premium to Old Subscribers for Securing One NEW Subscription to The Christian Herald at $1.50. Or sent with One Renewal Subscription for $2.00. Postpaid.

We have only a few copies left of our superb Illustrated Red Line Edition of Pilgrim's Progress, by John Bunyan, which THE CHRISTIAN HERALD issued as a special De Luxe Edition some time ago, and which is one of the finest and most attractive presentations of this supreme masterpiece ever published.

Pilgrim's Progress is the most beautiful allegory of human life ever written. It warms the heart, elevates the mind, dispels weariness and gloom and exerts its irresistible influence for good over rich and poor alike. An immortal book, and a book of truly immeasurable and imperishable power, this triumphant work appeals, as few books ever have or will, to the most intellectual as well as to the "plain" people; is relished as keenly by the aged as by the young; is a source of good cheer, and a lasting inspiration to men and women in every walk of life.

Though the Pilgrim's Progress is a book that should form an important part in the education of every child, and in most homes one that stands next to the Bible, there are still those who have never read its illuminating pages.

This edition is superb in its pictorial features, containing in all 102 fine illustrations—many of them full pages. The volume is handsomely bound in Red Vellum De Luxe, with an emblematic cover design and lettering in gold—428 pages. The book measures, when open, 9x15 inches, and weighs nearly three pounds.



HERO TALES

Given Free as a Premium to Old Subscribers for Securing One NEW Subscription to The Christian Herald at $1.50. Or sent with One Renewal Subscription for $2.00. Postpaid.

Would you like to know the man who traveled four thousand miles through six bleak winter months to add three stars to the American flag? Would you like to shake hands with a woman who saved sixteen children? Would you like to look upon the lad who rescued a thousand lives in a storm at sea? Would you like to see the girl who sacrificed her life for honor, and a boy who gave his life to his country? You can meet these and others in Francis Trevelyan Miller's book, Hero Tales From American Life.

Just think of it! Sitting down at your very fireside with heroes of war, heroes of peace, heroes of conscience, heroes of science, meeting them practically face to face in your own home! What a treat these 100 Tales of Heroism will prove when read in the Family Circle!

Measures When Open 8x12 inches

The Religious, Political and Civil Life of the Present Year Is Reviewed in the 1912 CHRISTIAN HERALD ALMANAC. IT IS FREE with Every Yearly Subscription

SAMANTHA AT CONEY ISLAND

AND A THOUSAND OTHER ISLANDS — By JOSIAH ALLEN'S WIFE

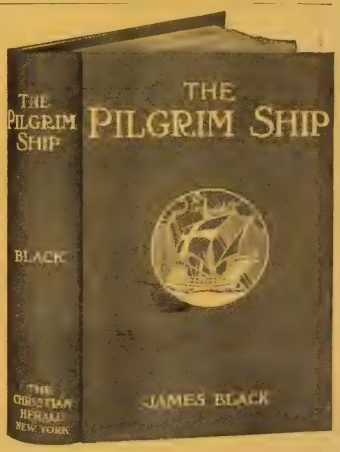
Given Free as a Premium to Old Subscribers for Securing One NEW Subscription to The Christian Herald at $1.50. Or Sent with One Renewal for $2.00

Aunt Samantha was living happily enough as Josiah Allen's wife when they returned from their trip around the world, and all might have gone as merrily as a wedding bell, had not Serenus Gowdey put the idea of Coney Island into Josiah's head. After that Josiah could talk of nothing else. He was so wrought up that he would spring up in bed at night crying out: "All aboard for Coney Island!" or, "Get your hot dogs!" or, "See the Awful Tower and the alligators!" or other things equally as bad.

Samantha gave him catnip tea, but that "didn't git the pizen out of his system." She planned a trip to the Thousand Islands, thinking to turn him from the subject, but Josiah would not be turned; he spoke of it day and night. Even the presence of Faithful Smith, a sweet soul whose father had refused to allow her to marry Dick West and so had saddened her life, failed to stem the tide of Josiah's longing for Coney Island, and Samantha was more shocked than surprised one morning to find that he and Serenus Gowdey had run away to the great amusement city by the sea.

Of course Samantha followed him immediately. What else could she do? "What wuz Josiah Allen doin' in that place of folly and fashion?" wailed Samantha. "Could he keep his innocence amidst the awful temptations? I hearn there wuz places there where folks stood on their heads; wuz his brain strong enough to stand the jolt?"

Samantha arrived in Coney Island on the day before the destruction of Dreamland by fire, and her experiences were enough to fill a book which has been called Samantha at Coney Island and a Thousand Other Islands. In it she relates her adventures, which were strange, and her stories, which are screamingly funny.



How she pursued Josiah through all the mazes of the concessions, how she rode the witching waves, went on a voyage to the moon, watched the circus, looked in the magic mirrors, sank through the floor, got lost in the maze, trod the rocking steps, lectured the Head Hunters, discovered the fire, rescued the incubator babies from the flames, and finally saved her beloved "pardner," Josiah, from the jaws of the blazing lion, etc., etc., are all told graphically with humor and pathos in this book, which is published by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

Samantha at Coney Island is a large and handsome book, beautifully bound in cloth. It is printed in large type, and has 350 pages. The various scenes described are profusely illustrated in line drawings by a well known artist, who has caught the right spirit of fun and incorporated it in all his drawings.

THE PILGRIM SHIP

By JAMES BLACK, M. A.

Given Free as a Premium to Old Subscribers for Securing One NEW Subscription to The Christian Herald at $1.50. Or Sent with One Renewal at $1.85

One of the most fascinating tales that has ever been penned. This wonderfully romantic narrative of the voyage of the Prince of the Happy Isles to a far distant country, tells of the many extraordinary adventures that befell him on his journey. His vessel was a warship of great swiftness and unique armament, with guns that were known by names to the officers and crew, but which worked like no other guns you ever saw or heard of. The good ship Safety was fully provisioned for a long voyage and her charter gave her wide privileges. She was right seaworthy, too, and bravely weathered all the gales and hurricanes she encountered in mid-ocean. But the terrors and dangers of the sea were far less than those ashore, for when the Prince's ship reached the Land of Delusion, and later when they sighted Lotus Land, the seamen had some stirring adventures.

In a sense the whole voyage of the gallant Safety was a fighting one, as there were encounters afloat and ashore and many hairbreadth escapes. Sometimes she would skirt the Gold Coast, and again the shores of the Land of Silver. Hidden reefs and sand banks would threaten her at times; but she escaped them all.

There was a remarkable "City of Idols," which she visited and where her forces made some recruits; also a dreary and dangerous "Land of Dole" and a Land of Slaves. Queen of all the distant countries was the Land of Pleasure, wherein many a subtle danger beset the voyagers, especially at Gaytown, the capital. But of the wonderful adventures of the Prince with his gallant ship and faithful crew you must read in the book for yourself. It is a story which will linger in the mind and will be recalled with pleasure long after, just as Bunyan's famous book has been read and enjoyed by countless multitudes. The Pilgrim Ship holds a charm for the reader that is equaled by hardly any other book we know of; it allures, delights, surprises and uplifts as you read.

The Pilgrim Ship is a volume of 320 pages, handsome cloth binding, beautifully printed in clear bold type, suitable for readers of any age, for it is a book that will hold an equal charm for both old and young. Moreover, it is a tale which seems to magically illustrate itself in the mind of the reader as he proceeds chapter by chapter, creating the most fascinating and delightful pictures, for it is all action, like a living panorama.

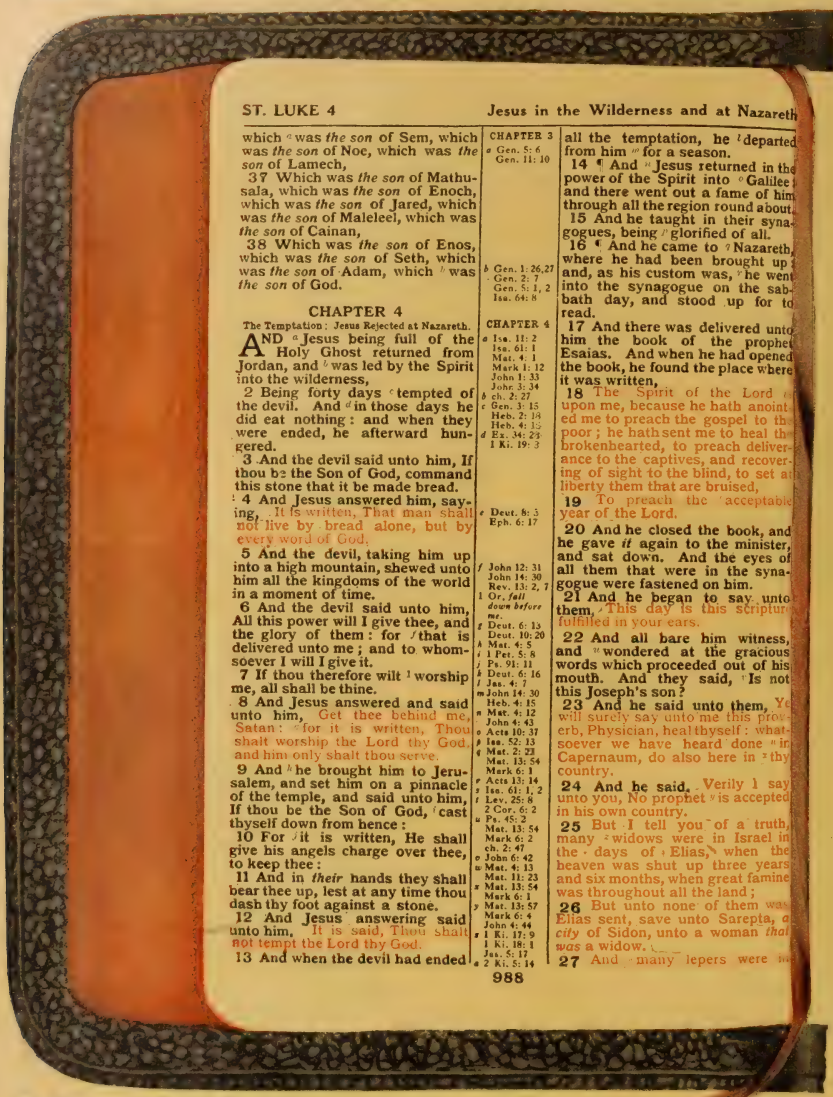
If you wish to make this wonderful voyage in the best of good company, and to have a part in these adventures in which so many of your friends are sharing, get aboard the Pilgrim Ship.

LIFE WORK OF LOUIS KLOPSCH

Given Free as a Premium to Old Subscribers for Securing One NEW Subscription to The Christian Herald at $1.50. Or Sent with One Renewal for $2.00

This Is Your Last Opportunity To Secure a Copy of This Great Book

Louis Klopsch, whom the whole world loved, left to every man and woman a rich legacy. He bequeathed to them the secret of his splendidly successful career. How he found the master-key which opened doors that led to honorable service, and how he used it; how it enabled him to carry out to complete triumph his wonderful work in almost every country on the globe, helped him over difficulties that would have halted most men, put great resources at his disposal, brought powerful people to his side and gave him as voluntary allies kings, premiers, potentates, cabinets, to further his world-wide enterprises—all of this, with much more, is disclosed in Mr. Pepper's book.



The Life Work of Louis Klopsch is not an ordinary biography; it is a volume that thrills with its intense human interest and grips the attention from the first chapter to the close. We trace, step by step, the gradual development of the immigrant boy; we see him as the discoverer of the great secret almost at the outset of his business career, the possession of which transfigured his whole life.

Guided by Mr. Pepper's vivid and realistic narrative, we travel with Dr. Klopsch through the Western States in that terrible winter of 1892-93, when he succored our starving farmers. Then we go with him over sea to Russia, on his famous "mission of bread." We journey with him to Cuba, where he set food trains flying to save the starving reconcentrados. Now we spin along with him in a dog-sled over the frozen meres of Finland in mid-winter. Anon we wander at his side among the fever camps of stricken India, and listen to words of comfort for the suffering. We see him sending forth from the home ports his food-ships to far distant lands. We are spectators of his audiences with the Kings and Queens of Italy and Sweden, with the Russian Emperor at his summer palace at Tsarskoeselo and with high dignitaries in many lands, receiving congratulations and decorations.

The scene changes and we see him lovingly surrounded by the tenement waifs at the Children's Paradise which he created, and he joins in their games or leads them in song in the Children's Temple. We stand beside him as he speaks to the men of the Bowery Mission, or gives food and kind, sympathetic words to the gaunt, shadowy figures of the "Bread Line." Like the magician's carpet in the fable, this wonderful book takes us almost around the globe with Dr. Klopsch. We feel the thrill of his splendid courage and his enthusiasm, and as we share in his campaigns, we get a glimpse of high ideals, far beyond the ken of sordid souls—ideals that glorify and ennoble life and make it well worth living. Read this great book for yourself. Send for it to-day and learn and apply the wonderful Secret of a Successful Life which it illustrates so well.

Be Sure to Get a Copy of the First Issue Ever Published of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD ALMANAC for 1912 (100 Pages), FREE with EVERY Yearly Subscription

Only India Paper Red Letter Bible in the World

ST. LUKE 4 — Jesus in the Wilderness and at Nazareth which [a] was the son of Sem, which was the son of Noe, which was the son of Lamech,

37 Which was the son of Mathusala, which was the son of Enoch, which was the son of Jared, which was the son of Maleleel, which was the son of Cainan, 38 Which was the son of Enos, which was the son of Seth, which was the son of Adam, which [b] was the son of God.

CHAPTER 4

The Temptation: Jesus Rejected at Nazareth.

AND [a] Jesus being full of the Holy Ghost returned from Jordan, and [b] was led by the Spirit into the wilderness,

2 Being forty days [c] tempted of the devil. And [d] in those days he did eat nothing: and when they were ended, he afterward hungered.

3 And the devil said unto him, If thou be the Son of God, command this stone that it be made bread.

4 And Jesus answered him, saying, It is written, That man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word of God.

5 And the devil, taking him up into a high mountain, shewed unto him all the kingdoms of the world in a moment of time.

6 And the devil said unto him, All this power will I give thee, and the glory of them: for [f] that is delivered unto me; and to whomsoever I will I give it.

7 If thou therefore wilt [1] worship me, all shall be thine.

8 And Jesus answered and said unto him, Get thee behind me, Satan: [g] for it is written, Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him only shalt thou serve.

9 And [h] he brought him to Jerusalem, and set him on a pinnacle of the temple, and said unto him, If thou be the Son of God, [i] cast thyself down from hence:

10 For [j] it is written, He shall give his angels charge over thee, to keep thee:

11 And in their hands they shall bear thee up, lest at any time thou dash thy foot against a stone.

12 And Jesus answering said unto him, It is said, Thou shalt not tempt the Lord thy God.

13 And when the devil had ended all the temptation, he [k] departed from him [l] for a season.

14 ¶ And [m] Jesus returned in the power of the Spirit into [n] Galilee: and there went out a fame of him through all the region round about.

15 And he taught in their synagogues, being [o] glorified of all.

16 ¶ And he came to [p] Nazareth, where he had been brought up: and, as his custom was, [q] he went into the synagogue on the sabbath day, and stood up for to read.

17 And there was delivered unto him the book of the prophet Esaias. And when he had opened the book, he found the place where it was written,

18 The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, because he hath anointed me to preach the gospel to the poor; he hath sent me to heal the brokenhearted, to preach deliverance to the captives, and recovering of sight to the blind, to set at liberty them that are bruised,

19 To preach the acceptable year of the Lord.

20 And he closed the book, and he gave it again to the minister, and sat down. And the eyes of all them that were in the synagogue were fastened on him.

21 And he began to say unto them, [r] This day is this scripture fulfilled in your ears.

22 And all bare him witness, and [s] wondered at the gracious words which proceeded out of his mouth. And they said, [t] Is not this Joseph's son?

23 And he said unto them, Ye will surely say unto me this proverb, Physician, heal thyself: whatsoever we have heard done [u] in Capernaum, do also here in [v] thy country.

24 And he said, Verily I say unto you, No prophet [w] is accepted in his own country.

25 But I tell you [x] of a truth, many [y] widows were in Israel in the [z] days of [a] Elias, when the heaven was shut up three years and six months, when great famine was throughout all the land;

26 But unto none of them was Elias sent, save unto Sarepta, a city of Sidon, unto a woman that was a widow.

27 And many lepers were in

CHAPTER 3
[a] Gen. 5: 6 Gen. 11: 10

[b] Gen. 1: 26,27 Gen. 2: 7 Gen. 5: 1, 2 Isa. 64: 8

CHAPTER 4
[a] Isa. 11: 2 Isa. 61: 1 Mat. 4: 1 Mark 1: 12 John 1: 33 John 3: 34
[b] ch. 2: 27
[c] Gen. 3: 15 Heb. 2: 18 Heb. 4: 15
[d] Ex. 34: 28 1 Ki. 19: 8

[e] Deut. 8: 3 Eph. 6: 17

[f] John 12: 31 John 14: 30 Rev. 13: 2, 7
[1] Or, fall down before me.
[g] Deut. 6: 13 Deut. 10: 20
[h] Mat. 4: 5
[i] 1 Pet. 5: 8
[j] Ps. 91: 11
[k] Deut. 6: 16
[l] Jas. 4: 7
[m] John 14: 30 Heb. 4: 15
[n] Mat. 4: 12 John 4: 43
[o] Acts 10: 37
[p] Isa. 52: 13
[q] Mat. 2: 23 Mat. 13: 54 Mark 6: 1
[r] Acts 13: 14
[s] Isa. 61: 1, 2
[t] Lev. 25: 8 2 Cor. 6: 2
[u] Ps. 45: 2 Mat. 13: 54 Mark 6: 2 ch. 2: 47
[v] John 6: 42
[w] Mat. 4: 13 Mat. 11: 23
[x] Mat. 13: 54 Mark 6: 1
[y] Mat. 13: 57 Mark 6: 4 John 4: 44
[z] 1 Ki. 17: 9 1 Ki. 18: 1 Jas. 5: 17
[a] 2 Ki. 5: 14

988

The Speed at Which this Page is Run may Throw Out the Alignment of the Red Lettering. It is NOT SO with the Bible Itself.

Our Red Letter Bibles

India Paper RED LETTER Bible

Weighs Only 20 Ounces

Given FREE for FOUR New Subscriptions at $1.50 each.

The only genuine edition of the Red Letter Bible is the Authorized or King James' Version, unchanged save for the variation of the color in the type. Two colors (Red and Black) are employed, in accordance with the simple plan devised by the late Dr. Louis Klopsch, the Originator of the Red Letter principle applied to the Holy Scriptures.

What Is a Red Letter Bible?

1 In the Old Testament, the passages quoted by our Lord, or directly related to incidents to which he referred, are Printed in Red.

2 In the New Testament, the words universally accepted as those of the Saviour are Printed in Red.

3 A Red Star (★) immediately following a verse in the Old Testament indicates that the verse embodies a prophetic reference to Christ as the coming Messiah.

Our Red Letter Bible, illustrated herewith, Contains Full References; also a Concordance, Subject Index, and Dictionary—all under One Alphabetical Arrangement—together with Helps, Maps, and Numerous Illustrations.

The text of this Bible is set in Bold-Face Minion, especially designed for this work. There are 268 pages of Helps or Concordance and 17 superb Maps. This gem of a Bible, small in bulk, light in weight, very legible and very durable, weighs only 20 ounces. It is bound in American Levant, overlapping edges, red-under-gold, and makes altogether the handiest and most satisfactory Bible now on the market. For size of type, size of page and appearance, see illustration on this page.

We send this superb Bible, together with The Christian Herald for one whole year, and our valuable and intensely interesting 1912 Almanac for $3.00

Special 2,000 copies of Red Letter Bibles on Bible Paper—not India—given FREE for Two NEW Subscriptions at $1.50 each. Postage 25c extra.

Something Still Better

IF you can afford to pay $1 more, ask for the same Bible bound in Genuine Morocco, Calf Finish, Leather Lining, Silk Sewed, which will wear a Lifetime. This Bible is Equal to Any $10.00 Bible. It is Sent with THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for One Whole Year and Our Valuable 1912 Almanac for $4.00

Or given FREE for Six NEW Subscriptions at $1.50 each

Our Red Letter Testaments

Given FREE for Two NEW Subscriptions at $1.50 each

This beautiful volume is the ONLY NEW TESTAMENT which contains ALL THE WORDS SPOKEN BY OUR LORD PRINTED IN RED. The Type is Very Clear, and the Alignment of the Red and Black Lettering Absolutely Perfect. The Red Letter New Testament is Exquisitely Bound in American Levant, Soft and Flexible, with Overlapping Edges—Red Under Gold—with Book-mark—a Compact Volume that may be Conveniently Carried in the Pocket.

The Red Letter New Testament is Issued in Both the Authorized and Revised Versions, and is Sent, All Charges Prepaid, Together with THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for One Year, and our 1912 Almanac, ALL THREE FOR ONLY $2.00

When ordering, state whether you want Authorized or Revised Version. All charges prepaid in every instance.

A CONVENIENT ORDER BLANK FOR YOU

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, 93 Bible House, New York City:—Enclosed find $.....for One Year's subscription to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD and the Magazines and Premiums as indicated below. Please send to the following addresses:

		NAME	STREET AND POST OFFICE	STATE
Send The Christian Herald	to
Send Women of the Bible	to
Send Samantha at Coney Island	to
Send The Pilgrim Ship	to
Send	to
Send	to
Send	to
Send	to

Date ..... 19 Name of Sender ..... Address .....

The Christian Herald Almanac will be sent FREE to every Christian Herald Subscriber, New or Renewal, immediately after receipt of Subscription

THE GOSPEL OF THE BREAD LINE

DURING its whole thirty-two years of existence, the Bowery Mission has probably never witnessed such a scene of activity and success as has already characterized the fall and winter work of 1911. The social and humanitarian branches of that work are great simply because the work of grace in the individual hearts of men is great. It is a perpetual revival. Night after night the auditorium is crowded with men who from the uttermost depths of degradation and need literally cry out for God and salvation. The Brotherhood meeting, held every evening at 7 o'clock, comprises from one hundred to one hundred and sixty men who are "hungering and thirsting for righteousness." That they are being "filled" is evident from the joyful testimonies they give, and the bright, hopeful, useful lives they live. A large proportion of these converts are being dispatched every day by the Labor Bureau to positions in distant places, where they continue their living testimony of the Christ within them. The Bread Line at 1 A.M. every morning feeds over one thousand famishing men and boys.

On Thanksgiving evening at the annual meeting the arrangement was made to admit the members of the Brotherhood first through the rear entrance of the building. To our great surprise and delight they almost filled the audiorium. Think of it! a hall full of converted men! The remainder of the crowd had their dinner in the breakfast room below while the meeting was proceeding.

There have been several distinguished visitors lately. Mr. Thomas Robinson Ferens, an English member of Parliament, together with Mrs. Ferens, spent a Sunday evening at the Mission. Mr. Ferens is a recognized leader of Noncomformity in England.

Mr. and Mrs. Ferens spent a Sunday recently in New York, and on the evening of that day, being accustomed to the English hour of service, which is much earlier than ours, reached the Bowery before the Mission doors were opened, and saw the great crowd of men waiting for admission. Then they paid a visit to the Brotherhood meeting, and stayed right through to the end of the larger meeting. Beautifully unostentatious in his nature, Mr. Ferens waited until nearly the end of the meeting before he spoke, but what he said will never be forgotten by those who heard him. Quietly but earnestly he testified to the indwelling presence of Christ in his heart and life, and made a most powerful plea to the men to live lives of obedience to God, and of blessing to their fellows.

Major E. R. Johnstone, who, as CHRISTIAN HERALD readers will remember, supervised the distribution of the provisions of the recent China Famine Fund, was our next visitor. He called his address a "desultory talk," but seldom has a more vitally interesting discourse been given in the Mission. His statement as to the possibilities of China, and the far-reaching effects of the present revolution, was little short of an astounding revelation to his hearers. Nothing, however, that he said was of greater significance, or more impressive, than his testimony to the value of the work of Christian missionaries and educators in the newly awakened lands of the Far East.

The Hon. Richard E. Connell, Representative in Congress from the twenty-first district of New York, was the third of the trio of visitors. Congressman Connell is serving his first term in the House, but has already made his mark there as a public speaker. Judging by his effort at the Bowery Mission there is little doubt that he will soon be recognized as one of America's front rank orators. His address included a masterly appreciation of Rescue Mission work, which he declared to be statesmanship of the highest order. He said that he spoke from experience, experience gathered in his journalistic days, of homes restored, families reunited, neglected children taken care of, and manhood regained by the drunkard and ne'er-do-well. His appeal to the men, based on a hymn which had just been sung—"Never Give Up"—stirred the crowd, and secured for Mr. Connell a royal Bowery ovation.

Probably the most extraordinary meeting ever held in the Mission was that of November 14, when twenty men celebrated the first anniversary of their conversion. The question is often asked, "Do the converts stand?" Well, here were twenty who had held on for one year amid all the perils of Bowery life. Pathetic beyond description were some of the stories they told. Stories, some of them, were of salvation from the very "uttermost" of helplessness and degradation. One man declared that the only times he had been sober during the past seven years were when he was in some hospital. There were also stories of terrific temptations that had been withstood, and glowing testimonies of the satisfying life in Christ that so many of them were enjoying now.

Nearly every one of the twenty were twelve months ago absolutely homeless, receiving the roll and coffee in the Bread Line and walking the streets in misery day and night. Without exception they testified to being won for Christ by little acts of kindness shown to them by workers in the Mission. In this great needy corner of God's great harvest field there is only one way to win perishing souls and that is Christ's way, viz., caring for and believing in them.

J. G. HALLIMOND,
Superintendent.

Daylight Applicants for Aid at the Bowery Mission

This is the time of year when the Bread Line is in full operation and funds are specially needed. Checks and money orders should be sent to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, 92 Bible House, New York City.

SHEPHERDS

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 1320

he was right down with us—just like Reg Wright. Then an unruly hen went to work scratching in the flowerbed, and Jimmy flew after her. He got her out finally, and drove her back into the chicken yard.

"Those hens are as bad an the Anarchists and Suffragists," panted Jimmy, as he returned.

"What's this?" cried the gentleman.

"We know 'em!" said Jimmy darkly, shaking his head. "You round 'em up —out of jail, into the bathtub; out of the bathtub into the saloon: out of the saloon into the jail: out of jail into the bathtub again—and father and Allie hotfooting it after 'em."

"The Suffragists?" gasped the gentleman, crinkling up his eyes. They were very nice eyes, too, and when he laughed his mouth went up at the corners.

"No," said Jimmy soberly. "The Have-to-be-Helped: most of 'em are some kind of Ist, though. They all come here—to talk with father about their troubles, and to talk to Allie about her responsibilities. And some of 'em are nice—and some aren't: and they eat so much!"

"Mrs. Delany says don't tell her: she knows they're a deep lot," said Cissy.

"The Suffragists?"

"No. The other Ists. The poor ones."

"Oh," said the gentleman thoughtfully. "I rather thought, you know, that the trouble with the poor ones was that they couldn't. Didn't have the chance."

"They don't: only in spots," we said promptly. "They're always hungry, and it takes a frightful lot to fill 'em up. And Allie says you've got to stand by and give first aid to the empty."

"Allie?"

"Yes. Our sister. She's drilling a class now, so's they'll behave all right before the new bishop. Our old bishop wouldn't have minded much; he knew our sort of poor people."

"And you don't think the new bishop might understand, too?"

"Allie doesn't know. We've been told he's—different: Allie says she only hopes he'll have sense enough to have eyes and see not and ears and hear not, at times. Our old bishop said you had to be like that, with our sort of parish."

"Oh!" said he, thoughtfully. "I see. Suppose you sit down here on the steps with me, and let's talk it over."

Jimmy's rompers were in slivers, so we had to tie them about his knees with a piece of wrapping cord; and Cissy's frock was faded, but Cissy always looks nice; and my blouse was rumpled, and what I suppose you'd call soiled.

Florian sidled up and leaned against the stranger's knees—they are that sort of knees, anyhow. Florian lisps, and he makes an awful racket with his feet when he walks, and he's always falling down and bumping himself. But Florian is a very nice kid. Jimmy's eyes are blue, and Cissy's and mine are gray, like father's; but Florian's are big and soft and brown, and his hair is shining and curling and soft, like mother's. He has a little quick pink smile, and a chummy, sort of lick-your-hand way, something like our old Rover's; I am sure if Florian had a tail he'd wag it off from pure friendliness.

"Now," said Mr. Harwood—that's what he told us to call him—"let's have some more about the Ists. I've a glimmering notion of what an Ist really is. I suspect I've met a few in my time. Suppose we compare notes."

We explained that in our parish the Ists are different sorts. For instance, father's a plain Christian, and so is Allie. That's one sort—just Christians without being any Ist, which is more comfortable. And some are Ists without being Christians, which is messier, and makes plenty of trouble for the other sort. And some are all that, and more, which is unpleasant; and some aren't anything at all, which is worse yet. And all of 'em keep father and Allie busy.

"I see," said Mr. Harwood again. He twisted Florian's hair about his fingers—Florian's hair holds on to your finger as if it loved you. "I'd like to have a long talk with your father, and that's really why I called this afternoon. And I think we're going to be great friends, you little people and me. And may I have a glass of water, please?"

As a mark of deep friendship and respect, Cissy filled a goblet half up with syrup, and filled that again with water, and brought out a ginger cooky. We are very fond of syrup-and water—it's our wine. We can drink quarts of it. When we go to play with the Wrights they give it to us, and when they come to play in our yard we give it to them.

Mr. Harwood said nobody had thought to give him syrup-and-water for more years than he liked to think of, and that he used to dote on it, and he had a wolf's tooth for ginger cookies.

"Do your children have it, too?" Cissy wondered.

"I haven't any children—not even a wife, poor me," he told us.

"I dare say it's just as well you haven't," said Cissy soberly. "They're a great trouble, and they cost you a frightful lot of money, which is very bad—especially if you have got to share, like us. Not that we mind," she hastened to add, "only there isn't enough to go round."

Florian put out his hand and played with the little gold cross that swung from Mr. Harwood's watch chain.

"Florian!" said Cissy reproachfully. "You've been told not to touch things, haven't you?" "His hands," she explained, "are nearly always dirty. That's why we have to make him keep paws off."

"They're nice an' clean," said Florian, and he went right on tinkling the little gold cross. "Rover licked 'em all two bofe."

Mr. Harwood laughed, and kissed him twice. He said he'd had a perfectly lovely time, and he'd come again to see just us, if he might, and we said we'd be delighted, and begged him to. We all went to the front door with him.

A little later Mrs. Delany came, to say that the two youngest children weren't any better, and she was troubled in her mind about them, and she wanted Allie to stop by in the morning to see them. And Florian told her he was tired all over, and he

Continued on next page

A Boy Sculptor of Gifts and Gri

ONE of the picturesque figures at the New York Zoological Park these days is a fourteen-year-old boy modeling wild animals at close range. He is Avard Fairbanks, and he comes out of the Far West—from the mountains of Utah—with a lump of clay, an absorbing love of wild animals and a determination to become a sculptor as his stock in trade. Inside the protecting rail of the Lion House, right up against the cages, he sets his modeling stand, and with his sleeves rolled up to his brown elbows he moulds and digs and pats his clay in the shapes of the huge beasts behind the bars. His ambition is to model wild animals with strict fidelity to their natural postures, and he has made up his mind to win a place among the successful sculptors of the world, no matter what it costs in hard work.

Young Fairbanks is a modest, quiet, self-reliant lad; he has already burned the midnight oil in a painstaking study of animal anatomy, so that the lumps and bulges that show through the hide of a Siberian tiger, for instance, are no longer things of mystery to him. He has crowded a year's study into six months, working all day on his animals from a position right before the cages, and attending regularly the night classes at the Art Students' League in Fifty-seventh Street.

His natural gift for reproducing "action" in groups of fighting animals or those in attitudes of stealthy movement has won for him two scholarships in the classes of the Art Students' League. His first scholarship came as a result of his "Fighting Pumas" and the second was won by his "Study of Fighting Panthers." The members of the awarding committee pointed out the crudities of his drawing and certain defects of composition, but the action was there, and it was because of that feature in his work that the prize was bestowed. Correct drawing can be learned, but no amount of study will give a student the ability to infuse a realistic sense of movement into the figures he is modeling unless he has talent to begin with.

Everybody connected with the Zoological Park, from Dr. Hornaday down to the motherly woman who matronizes over the rest room, and even the humblest animal feeder, is interested in the boy who works so earnestly with his clay and little wooden modeling tool in front of the wild animal cages. The tigers, lions, jaguars and pumas themselves seem to regard him with friendly eyes. They often look as if they were consciously posing, and in the picture shown here you cannot help noticing the approval with which Prince, the big African lion, gazes at the tiny model of himself just outside his bars.

"It takes me a long while to get a piece finished," said Master Fairbanks, "because I have to wait hours, sometimes, for an animal to take a pose I'm doing him in. I worked on my tiger and my bear at the same time, so as not to waste any more hours than I could help. The keepers used to give me a loaf of bread for bait. I'd go down to the bear den and flourish the bread around until the bear I wanted ambled down to the front of the cage. He'd pose for me an hour at a stretch sometimes, with the help of a piece of bread. Then, when he got tired I often could get him to come back again by whistling for him and holding up another chunk. But after about two hours of "being good," he wouldn't sit another minute, no matter how much bread I tried to ten him with. He was through posing for the day, a then I'd go back to the tiger and wait for feedi time, when he would be sure to sit up on his haunch in the position I wanted him.

"I work here almost every day, except Saturd and Sunday. The crowd's too thick on Saturda to get any work done. They push in on all sides me, and a couple of dozen children climb up on t railings so close that I can't move my elbows."

There is no other place in the United States th offers such a collection of animals from whi sculptors may draw living models. Few people the crowd that surges through the Lion House a aware that a well-equipped studio is a part of t building, designed for painters a sculptors who desire to work fro live wild animal models. Th room contains a row of lockers, ru ning water and a great cage in which the particular animal whic is chosen for the model is brough This artists' room is used only i winter, the artists preferring t work outside at other seasons.

The last model completed h Master Fairbanks is that of th American Bison. It was a pluck piece of business to stand out on th range, working away among th whole herd of buffalo. None of th men artists who have worked in th park has been so daring as to ven ture in among these wild fellows.

Avard is back at work at the Ar League this winter under the schol arship he has now. At all events he has made a fine start, and there are many persons who are watching him patiently plodding along in his work, who confidently believe he is destined to be a sculptor of note by the time he has come of age.

LILLIAN E. ZEH.

Avard Fairbanks at Work on His Model of Prince, the African Lion

SHEPHERDS

CONTINUED FROM PRECEDING PAGE

wanted her to cuddle him in her lap and sing Shule Agrah—it's a nice soft, croony Irish air. He went to sleep with his head on her shoulder, and she carried him in the sitting room and covered him up on the lounge.

When Allie came in, Florian woke up cross, and said his head hurt, so Allie put him to bed and gave him some powders. When she was going over our lessons with us, we told her about Mr. Harwood, and she said if he called again to ask him to name a particular hour and father would try to see him, if it was about parish matters. She looked very tired and sad, and Jimmy asked if the class had been very awful. She said no, it wasn't bad—only sad. She had been planning for some of the girls' dresses, poor little things! And Mary Fennis couldn't possibly be confirmed this year, after all. They had lately lost another child, and they were pushed to the limit of endurance. And we couldn't possibly spare another cent right now—

"No clothes, Allie?" asked Cissy.

"No anything," said Allie.

Cissy took a long time over her lesson. Then she shut the book.

"Allie," she said, "Mary can wear my dress. We're about the same size —and I won't mind, if she doesn't."

"Your old muslin is hardly a confirmation frock, Cissy dear," said Allie, smiling. "I've darned it about a thousand times, you know."

"But I wasn't offering her the old muslin," said Cissy indignantly. "I mean my new dress, of course—the one you've just finished."

"Cissy! Your new dress? And you haven't had one yourself for ages —no: I can't do it."

"Mary never had one at all. She's never had anything. And I want you to give her mine — to keep, Allie — and remember pleasantly. You always do remember things pleasantly when you've been dressed pretty in them—at least, I do."

Allie's face was quite beautiful when she turned to Cissy. And Jimmy reached over and squeezed her hand.

"I'll talk it over with you to-morrow, Cissy," said Allie, after a long pause. "Then, if you've quite made up your mind, dear—and you can change it without any one blaming you —you can do as you wish."

The next day was Saturday, and after we'd helped do our share of the work, Allie went off to see Mrs. Delany's children, and we stayed in the yard playing. Cissy was a native woman, and a tiger—which was me— had seized her and was dragging her off into the jungle, which was the spirea bushes; and a noble Hindu, which was Jimmy, was trying to rescue her from the roaring beast. We were all yelling like Comanches when Mr. Harwood came.

He said he dearly loved a good tiger hunt; and if we'd sit on the steps by him he'd tell us about a really truly one he'd been in, in India. Florian hadn't been playing. He didn't feel well, and Allie had given him some powders and told him to keep quiet. He had sidled up against Mr. Harwood and leaned against his knees while we listened to the tiger story—and a great one it is, too.

And all of a sudden, Florian began to cry. He said his throat hurt and hurt and hurt, and his head was going round and round and round. Mr. Harwood felt of his hands and forehead, looked down his throat, and asked us where the telephone was. He called up Dr. West himself, and he held Florian in his arms until the doctor came.

The doctor looked down Florian's throat, too, and said something to Mr. Harwood in a low voice. He rushed off in his auto, and half an hour later he was back, and he gave Florian what is called antitoxin. We were all called into the study, and he'd just finished with us and had singled Jimmy out, too, when Allie came in. She looked as if she'd been walking very fast, and her face was very pale.

"Florian? And Jimmy, too?" she seemed to know without being told.

"In Jimmy's case there are only symptoms, Allie, my dear," said our kind old doctor. "Florian—" he stopped. Dr. West loves Florian like his own child.

"I couldn't get to the Delany children last night. I went this morning, and I found a terrible state of affairs. The three of them have diphtheria, doctor. . . Jimmy, Florian, baby!" She gave a great cry at that, and ran up to them with her arms stretched out. You see, we're really Allie's children.

"Antitoxin almost always cures, when it's given in time, Miss Halsey," said Mr. Harwood. The little laugh-wrinkles had gone from about his mouth, and he looked very big and helpful and kind. "And we should not forget in Whose care are all children." His voice was so steady that my heart stopped turning somersaults, and Cissy took her fingernails out of my hand, into which she'd been everlastingly digging them.

Allie didn't seem in the least surprised to find him there with us like that—it just seemed, somehow, that he belonged.

And then Dr. West quarantined us. He said there was danger of a regular epidemic in the parish, anyhow. So there we were—two of us down, and no help. We couldn't afford a trained nurse, as Allie told the doctor flatly. And we couldn't let any of our people come—they were needed too badly at home, as it was.

"I'll stand by you the best I can, Allie, my girl," said the doctor. "And by the grace of God we'll pull our youngsters through — we've got to! You and I have weathered many a storm, Allie—we'll weather this one. But you've got to have help—you can't do all the nursing by yourself. Some one's got to lend a shoulder—you've lent yours often enough, God knows! and turn about's only fair play."

"Why, here's mine," said Mr. Harwood cheerfully. "Give me half an hour to arrange my affairs—over the telephone. And then give me a cot in a corner, and I'll stand by these children."

Dr. West looked him up and down, and nodded.

Continued on page 1333

Brander Cushing's Ambition

A New Serial Story Written for The Christian Herald

By Charles M. Sheldon.

Author of "In His Steps"

Synopsis of Preceding Chapters

The story opens with a vivid description of a brilliant scene at the launching of the new American battleship Republic, 26,000 tons displacement, at the great navy yard at Dockville. Secretary of War is present with many other high officials, members of Congress, army and navy officers. The great steel monster of construction, the most perfect triumph of modern shipbuilding, is the work of Brander Cushing, the famous builder and naval contractor. He is present, with his son Sidney, on the launching platform. The signal is given, the music strikes up and the huge vessel is "christened" in the usual manner by Miss Pax Marston, the beautiful daughter of Rear-Admiral Marston. A tiny bow of ribbons, which was released by the impact of the stroke at the moment the conventional bottle broke on the vessel's bow, flutters past the high launching platform. Several snatch at it, but only one, Sidney Cushing, succeeds in grasping the little touch of color, though he does so at the risk of losing his balance and dropping a sheer seventy-five feet to the river below. A dozen spectators, risking his peril, spring to his assistance, but he recovers his poise, although his hat, caught by the wind, is wafted away.

After this adventure, he is introduced to Miss Pax, the Admiral's daughter, who has been an interested witness of his exploit. She questions him about his rescue of a young sailor on the cruiser Del Monte a year before, and although young Cushing modestly evades a direct answer, she is satisfied that the heroic act was his. Miss Marston invites him to call upon them in Washington. Leaving the launching platform, he is proceeding up town to buy a boat to replace his lost one, when a sudden explosion occurs near at hand in the big naval supplies factory of which his father is the principal owner. The whole building seems to burst into flame. Cushing, seeing numbers of women leaping from the windows, at the risk of his life succeeds in saving a number of workers. He is horror-stricken at the terrible tragedy he has witnessed and stunned by the reflection that his own father is responsible for the lack of fire-escapes, which he had been notified by the fire marshal two months before to provide, but had neglected. He goes back, half-dazed, to his father's office. The son tells his father plainly that he remembers the marshal's notification. "Somebody is guilty of the death of those girls," he says. "Who is it?" The next day the papers announce that criminal proceedings are to be instituted against the parties responsible for the disaster, Brander Cushing being mentioned by name. The builder is besieged by reporters, to whom he denies point-blank having received any notice from the marshal. He knows that the prosecution will be in the hands of District Attorney Fleming, his political enemy. Sidney is sent to Washington, to be out of the way while his father faces the coming trouble. Brander Cushing finds the men in his yard antagonistic to himself, regarding him as responsible for the loss of so many lives. Attorney Fleming visits him and an exciting scene follows. Fleming dares Cushing to open his safe and prove that he has not got the notification papers locked up. Cushing orders him out of the office, and he withdraws, after threatening to subpœna Sidney. Cushing is visited by Athanasia Ward, one of the girls saved by Sidney from the factory fire. She tells him how the door of the factory was locked, preventing escape and causing many deaths. Cushing is horrified at this revelation, which the girl makes in warning him of danger of violence from the employees of the shipyard. Hermosa Howard enters and confirms the rumors of trouble. As the funerals are to take place next day he orders the yard closed and puts extra watchmen on duty. Next morning he goes alone to the scene of the burials, hears the service and returns unseen to the shipyard. On entering the great draughting-room he sets to work on the drawings on the floor. While so engaged he is assaulted by a man who has secreted himself in the building. A struggle ensues in which the assailant is rendered unconscious. He recovers slowly and gives his name as Andrew Brodie, and says he is "one of the people," and that Cushing is a capitalist, and therefore their enemy. Cushing, finding the man faint from hunger, gives him a silver dollar, which he ungratefully flings back at the builder's head. That night, Cushing's home is attacked by a wild mob. Windows and doors are broken. In the midst of the disturbance there is a loud report, and Cushing knows that the shipyard has been attacked.

CHAPTER VIII—Continued

"THAT'S right, too," said a man standing in the crowd near the shipbuilder. "And will the works be rebuilt, do you think?"

"I hope not!" said Cushing, beside himself with mad hate of every one. "Before I rebuild, I'll let the whole gang of brutes starve to death."

"Are you Mr. Cushing?" the man asked.

Sidney pushed in between his father and the man. The fire department charged through the spot. Everything was confused, and masses of men swayed all over the street. Sidney urged his father to move back away from all possible danger of any further explosion or of falling timbers. His father seemed dazed by the sight of the ruins. But in a few moments he recovered his usual cool and deliberate manner, and with great energy sought out the police to see if anything could be done for any of the watchmen who might have been left in the buildings.

"Fogerty is missing, and seven men on the extra night shift, Mr. Cushing." It was Merrill, pale and exhausted. He had run all the way from home, and instantly on his arrival had made inquiry about the men.

"If they were in there, there is no hope for them."

"None."

"Have you any idea as to the cause or how the fire started?"

"Athanasia softly touched his hand"

"A bomb, or a number of bombs, of unusual size."

Several men near by testified to hearing at least six different explosions in different quarters of the works, followed by a final explosion of tremendous volume.

"Come, father," said Sidney gently. "Come. There's not a thing you can do here. Let us go home."

Brander Cushing yielded, after staying with the officers until it was practically certain that all the night watchmen had perished in the ruins. When he turned his back on the scene, Cushing's shipyard was a mass of smoking, ghastly ruin, its tangled skeleton of twisted steel and iron stretching along the water front all that was left of the proud and strong concern that had stood there at the launching of the Republic.

Sidney and his father, after submitting to an interview from the newspaper reporters, at last found a little sleep in the bombarded bedrooms, which Angus and the frightened housekeeper had cleared out a little.

Morning brought the papers and with them a summary of the day's and night's events.

Seven men seriously wounded during the attack on Cushing's residence. Two dead. A number of arrests by the police, who were seriously criticised for not dispersing the crowds quicker. The damage to Brander Cushing's house mostly confined to broken windows and interior defacement. Neither he nor his son had been injured. The shipbuilding plant a complete ruin. Evidently the work of a bomb or a series of bombs, planted with great skill at different quarters of the works.

There was heavy insurance on the shipyard. But Brander Cushing would not say whether it would be rebuilt. He was under contract to build the new warship, and would in all probability meet the conditions if possible. But the reconstruction of the immense plant would be a task of enormous dimensions. Meanwhile four thousand men were out of employment, and winter coming on. It was a calamity for Dockville, and a serious blow to its industries.

It did not seem possible that the people who had lost their children in the factory fire would or could have perpetrated this outrage. Cushing's deliberate and repeated statement, now known to all the public, that no notice to his company to erect fire escapes had ever been served on him, was generally believed even by most of those who were personally bereaved.

"The events of yesterday and last night have created strong sympathy for Cushing. It is doubtful if any action taken by Fleming, the county attorney, can result in any indictment of the shipyard owner."

In another section of the paper Cushing read a significant item: "County Attorney Fleming has postponed immediate calling of the grand jury pending strict investigation of the shipyard explosion. This meets general approval. The jury will probably not meet until the beginning of the January district court term."

Brander Cushing's lip curled.

"He wants to wait for this reaction in my favor to cool off. Fleming is no fool. He knows that under present feeling no indictment could be brought. It begins to look, Sid, as if we might not have to—"

"Yes, father. Pray God we don't."

Silence.

"Will you build again?" Sidney asked eagerly, his face anxiously searching his father's.

"Yes." Brander Cushing got up from the table and his whole figure squared itself. His jaw set with strength. "Yes. I'll rebuild bigger and better than ever. But best we can do, it will take time. Time, Sid, and no amount of either time or money can replace some of my models and plans. Lucky for us, boy, that I carry most of them in my head as well as on paper."

"Father, will you prosecute any of the rioters? Last night I recognized Burleigh, Sayles, Burns, McTairsh, Ranlow, and half a dozen other foremen. What will you do?"

"See that they have first choice at the new work. We can't afford to make any more enemies. I'm inclined to think what happened last night may turn out a blessing in disguise for us after all. Let's make the most of it."

And for the next four months, Brander Cushing made the most of it in a succession of energetic movements that amazed the people of Dockville.

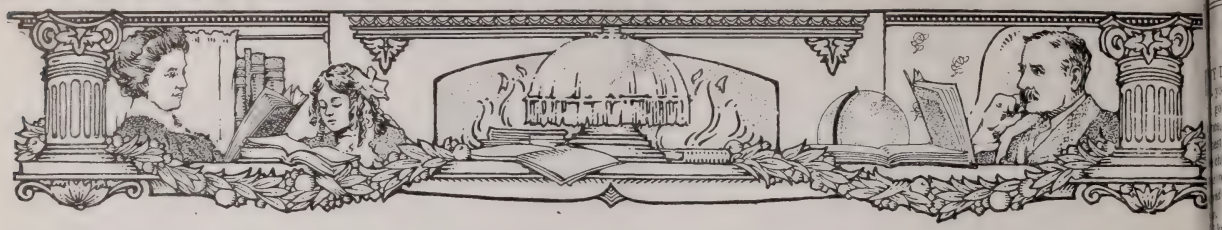
The works began to go up again with incredible swiftness and audacity. He cleared the ruins and brought in building material. He worked at all hours. No one knew when he slept. He was everywhere. No problem was too complex, no situation too puzzling for him. He employed more men from his old list than he could use. With all else he made a systematic payment of money to scores of families among the victims of the factory fire.

Silas Fleming made no move. Apparently he took so little interest in the prosecution of the naval factory fire that one of the papers took him sharply to task in a leading editorial. This was three months after the event.

A month more went by and people had almost ceased to talk about the horror. Then, one morning in the middle of January, the dailies were black with lurid accounts of another tenement-house tragedy in Chicago. This time it was a series of defective fire-escapes that buckled up like lead when loaded with the sudden weight of the unfortunate inmates. Then the public—that fickle, cold-blooded, forgetful, sensation-loving public — began to ask what had become of Silas Fleming and his grand jury.

That night Brander Cushing had confronted Sidney at dinner, exultant and triumphant over affairs at the new shipyard.

"Well, Sid, what do you think? Things are moving, eh? We relay the keel next week."



"It's a miracle!" Sidney exclaimed.

"And I feel ten years younger than I did five months ago." Brander Cushing stood up and shook himself. He looked superb. The animal vitality in the man was astonishing.

Through all that incredible period of activity, Sidney had "stood by" in very sturdy fashion. He had been in every sense his father's right-hand man. The knowledge he gained of all sorts in the rebuilding was of infinite value to him. He had been so incessantly busy that he had almost forgotten Pax Marston. He recalled that afternoon on the river where the girl had innocently given him the news that had started him back to Dockville that night. And he had remembered

Continued on page 1334

BY THE GLOWING WINTER FIRE

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER

The Charm of the Bargain Day

FEW women can resist the charm and temptation offered by the bargain counter. There are three or four ways of conducting the familiar business of shopping. One way is to set forth armed beforehand by the precise knowledge of the amount that may be spent, and a carefully arranged memorandum of the articles to be purchased. If the woman shopper understands exactly what she wants and systematizes the work so that she can finish her purchases at the linen counter before she goes to the suit department, if she does not waste time in loitering here and hurrying there, and if she itemizes everything she seeks even to ribbons and pins, she will find shopping easy and expeditious.

Another method is that of the shopper who is in little need of adding to her wardrobe or buying supplies for her house, but who likes to see what people have to sell and enjoys mingling with the crowd.

. . .

STILL another way, and this the least to be honored, is that of the extravagant lady who, having an account and sending her bills to her husband, buys anything that attracts her, with heedless recklessness. Singularly, the women of these three classes are almost equally fond of a bargain. Goods that are marked down from the original price are looked at, longed for and sometimes transferred from the seller to the buyer without much thought as to their ultimate use. Goods that are offered in large capital letters as below cost, fairly clamor to the ordinary woman to be seized while they are in reach.

An amusing story used to be told about a woman who proudly brought home from an auction a large brass door-plate inscribed with the name Thompson with a p. The woman's name was not Thompson, and there was no probability in the immediate future that the door-plate could be used by any of her kinsfolk, not one of whom bore this surname. She said to her husband, "Should we ever have a daughter, and should she marry a man whose name was Thompson, this door-plate would be very convenient for her door."

Undoubtedly there are many excellent bargains that offer good value to the woman who goes out on a shopping expedition. Real economy dictates that one should not buy that for which she has no present use or probable future use, even if it be offered on easy terms.

. . .

CERTAIN seasons of the year are notable because they do offer actual and legitimate bargains to the purchaser. In January the stores blossom out with fascinating white goods, and she who would replenish her linen closet or make advance purchases for summer may exercise thrift by doing her shopping at this time. The housekeeper who aims to have on hand a sufficient supply of table linen for every occasion, and who deems an ample outfit of underclothing a necessity rather than a luxury, is not to blame if she avail herself of the bargains arrayed before her at the opening of the year. The drifted snow is not whiter than the damask sent to us from looms over the sea, and many articles of domestic manufacture have a strong claim on the purse of the economical shopper.

. . .

Church Fairs and Cigarettes

CHURCH fairs bring needed funds into the treasury of the Ladies' Aid Societies, and nothing can be more desirable as a means of promoting acquaintance in a congregation than a fair or bazaar. It has an object in view. The object is to buy new carpets, to replace those that are worn out, to cover faded cushions, furnish the pulpit or assist in the reduction of a church debt. Many meetings in anticipation bring together practical women who set clever brains and fingers at work, and who finally show results of which they are not ashamed. The objection often made that those who attend a fair are forced to buy what they do not want and pay a fancy price for useless articles, cannot be sustained. Nobody is compelled to buy what he or she does not want, and a large proportion of the articles displayed are not on sale at ordinary shops. The prices seldom rise higher than they should, considering the cost of material and the artistic skill shown in their construction.

Church fairs and suppers enable women to raise money for the work of the church and for charity, in larger amounts than they would otherwise find possible.

A caution is, however, in order. At a church fair recently held in a suburban town, not remote from New York, a beautiful young woman, dressed in the costume of a Spanish peasant, went up and down the room offering cigarettes for sale. The cigarettes were tied in dainty packages and were the contribution of tobacconists to this particular bazaar. As there is on the statute books a law against the sale of cigarettes to minors, and as at every church fair there is a youthful contingent of the male sex, this law of the State was no doubt violated with impunity. The objection urged by conservative women to the introduction of cigarettes at the fair was overruled on the ground that people in these days ought to be broad-minded. There is a line of demarcation between right and wrong which is plain and obvious. There can be nothing broad-minded in the promotion of cigarette smoking among young men.

It is much to be regretted that recent fiction the baleful cigarette has pushed itself forward, and is supposed by novelists to be making its way in society where women smoke after dinner with graceful puffs in the company of men. American women are not accepting cigarette smoking as a popular or permissible custom for themselves, and American mothers should see to it that their boys do not use cigarettes. At church fairs neither the smoking room nor the counter at which pipes and tobacco are sold, nor the beautiful vendor of this poisonous plaything should be tolerated.

New ideas of the right kind are eagerly sought by those who are planning fairs and festivals. The woman who can devise something attractive, diverting and perhaps educational in this line can help her sisters by telling them about it. Correspondence on the subject will be in order and may be sent to the editor of this page.

. . .

A Word for the Wallflower

AT THIS season social functions are numerous, and there is seldom an evening company which does not include the bashful girl and the self-conscious youth as well as the popular person who is never ill at ease. Shall we not do what we can to draw out the timid and diffident, introduce them to the right people and see that they do not spend forlorn and depressing hours where others are having a good time? One's heart aches for the sweet young girl who has put on her prettiest dress and ventured into the social arena only to find other girls preferred before her, while she is left to sit still among the older ladies wondering very much why she is not a success and wishing herself safe in her room at home where she may have the comfort of a good cry.

At your church sociable, whether or not you are on the reception committee, take special pains that the stranger, the young girl or the young man recently come into the congregation, and any one else who seems to be solitary, is lovingly drawn into the pleasure and warmth of the occasion.

There are wallflowers who would prove themselves able to bloom and shine in the foreground, if only they had the chance. The responsibility for making every one happy and at home at a supper, reception or other affair rests upon women in general, and largely devolves, as a matter of course, upon those who accept the role of hostess. In one's own house there is never an excuse for permitting any one to be a wallflower.

Grandmother's Spinning-Wheel

THE spinning-wheel brought into Priscilla's family by a Puritan ancestress really belonged to a great-great-grandmother. As an heirloom it is a proud possession. Priscilla, who bears a name worn by six generations of good women, has powdered her hair and tried to make herself look like her grandmother's picture. She is sitting at the spinning-wheel and wishing she knew how to work it precisely as her grandmother did.

HAPPY COZY CORNER DAYS

A LETTER TO OUR BOYS—From the Aunt in the Cozy Corner

Y DEAR BOYS: I want to write you a letter this week, and I am going to moralize or administer ice, nor am I going to tell you the est way to get your lessons or do chores, but I do want to say this: better I know the genuine all- nd American boy the better I like knew a good deal about boys, too, I was brought up among them h in Europe and in this country. es, believe me, the nearer one gets the American boy the more one es and trusts him. You very soon in to discover that his heart is in right place. Have you ever ughtabout that? Boys with hearts the right place—it means so ich. He can turn his heart d his hand and his brain etty cleverly to his opportu ies, too; and as a hearty, ndy, brainy boy, the Amer n boy has no superior on rth. Look at our captains industry and finance, our ntesmen, our scientists, our ventors, our ministers of the spel they look mighty big d important, do they not? r they lead the world. And ey were boys like you. No ngs or princes nor noble- en's ons anywhere are your periors, nor have they any ch opportunities as are ours. Any American boy n, by his own efforts, rise a position so exalted that overtops any sovereign on rth n power and influence r god in the world. This a great deal to say, but it is ue.

FindOut the Reason Why

F YOU are lazy or unam- bitious, find out the reason hy. It is a disease that can e cured; get it out of your ystem as quickly as possible, or it does not belong there. Thereis no place on earth where a boy's life is so worth while, or where a boy can get o much for a little effort as ight ere in our own coun- ry. nd, believe me, there re noinsurmountable obsta- les. Do not think because ou are poor that this is an obstacle; it is not so. There re plnty of ways near at hand that any earnest, honest oy may get what he wants. f you don't believe it, listen o thi:

Prty Good Testimony

UPWARDS of three thou- sad sturdy, restless, fun- loving schoolboys have, within a space of a few weeks, snapped up the straightforward and businesslike opportunities to make money that THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has offered them, and are working like heroes. Upwards of three thousand boys within three short weeks are being paid for good work on THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, the same as the editors, the managers, artists and writers are paid for theirs. From the letters it comes out that some of these boys are making money for an education, others are earning it, for they want to buy for themselves the various things that a boy always wants but does not like to ask his parents for; one youngster, God bless him, like Robert Fulton, is paying off the mortgage on his mother's farm. This is pretty good testimony that the American boy, no matter where you find him, in the village, in the mountains, on the farm, or in our great teeming cities, is a fine sort. Work is not beneath his dignity; no, indeed! He dignifies his work, and men and women everywhere respect him.

It is with great pride and pleasure that I am wishing you a happy New Year. Remember, we are all living one of the best parts of our lives here and now. Your interests are our interests; THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is opening up one after the other unusual opportunities, and I have almost never known a year to look so bright and attractive. Once again, a happy New Year to American boys everywhere. May God bless us all.

A Nice Letter

DEAR Aunt in the Cozy Corner: I received the dearest little watch this morning from you. Indeed, I never expected to win such a beautiful and lovely prize. I thank you so very much for it. I have not worn it as yet. I'm afraid of losing it or getting it broken. We all love THE CHRISTIAN HERALD very much, but we children think it is so much better for us since it has a Cozy Corner.

Thanking you again for the beautiful watch prize,

Your Cozy Corner girl,
ANNA E. HUCK.

The Princess Louise

THIS picture is made from a famous equestrian portrait in the Tate Gallery in London. Sir John Millais, portrait artist to the court of St. James, painted the figures of the princess and the page. Sir Edwin Landseer painted the dog and the horse.

An Extra Prize Offer

TRY your pens this week on a story, the title of which shall be, "The Princess and the Page (in less than four hundred words). The first prize shall be a beautiful photograph of the famous portrait, 12½ x 10 inches, and twenty smaller copies of it for the best stories in order of merit. Stories to be in by January 15, 1912.

The Knights' Code

THE laws of the Knights of the Round Table were these:

Be ready. Help those that cannot help themselves.

Be courteous. Do nothing to hurt or offend any one.

Be honest and try to win a name for clean honor.

Be cautious, and never break your promise.

Chivalry requireth that youth shall be trained to perform the most laborious and humble offices with cheerfulness and grace and to do good unto others. These are the laws of chivalry and manhood, and nothing better can be offered in their place.

The great point about the Knight was that he was always doing kindnesses or good turns to people.

A gentleman is any one who carries out the rules of chivalry of the Knights.

Making Holiday in China

THE ancient custom of propitiating the rain-god is still observed in remoter parts of the Chinese Empire. The processions (for there are two on consecutive days) are called the Tai Gon and No Gon, names whose origins are now obscure, and they were originally intended to propitiate the rain-god.

In the Tai Gon twelve small girls, about ten years old, fantastically arrayed, are carried all round the town on the shoulders of picked coolies, while a man walks at the side with a crutch to prop them up when necessary. Besides these there is a whole host of attendants, dressed in official robes, as well as two figures with grotesque masks, habited as priests. The show is accompanied by the banging of gongs and cymbals, and a particularly horrible sort of clarionet, which produces a succession of discords.

The No Gon procession is led by the organizing committee, mounted on horseback, all clad in official robes and hats, and followed by our twelve little friends of the day before, who appeared to be mincing along over the heads of the crowd. Then comes a sort of see-saw, with four little girls slung at the ends of the poles, and carried by twenty-four coolies. Next follow six or eight more tableaux, all arranged after the same style; one with a girl just appearing through the top of an enormous egg, another little person who was standing apparently on the edge of a china vase, the next on a teacup, and so on.

There is undoubtedly some mythical or religious meaning attached to all this, but no one seems to have any clear idea about it, and it simply remains a show, a day for making holiday.

SHEPHERDS

Continued from page 1330

"Allie's got to have help and have it now," he said. "You're a blank stranger, but— In this parish, my good sir, we're used to walking in and helping strangers. Sometimes they're angels unawares and they come back and help us. Stay, in God's name, if you will."

"Then give me five minutes' talk with you, doctor, and half an hour at the phone to set certain affairs in order and reassure my friends — and I'll be ready for instant service."

He talked in a low voice with Dr. West while Allie got Jimmy and Florian to bed. Then he called up Mrs. Merrivale, which rather surprised me, for she is perhaps the richest and most fashionable person in our town. She does not come to our church, of course. She belongs to Mr. Rockwell's church, which is High, and has carved reredos and velvet carpets that your feet sink into, and cushioned pews, and flowers and lights and stained glass windows.

I wish our people could just rest and pray in that sort of a church occasionally. It does look as if they might have a beautiful place to pray in, even if they do have ugly places to live and die in.

I don't know, of course, what they were saying to Mr. Harwood at the other end of the phone. But at our end, he was saying in his quiet voice, Yes, that he knew quite well what he was doing, and that he was going to stay. And that they were to cancel all his engagements for the present, and to send some necessary clothes to him; and above all, they were to keep his whereabouts and his business strictly quiet.

He'd been stopping with Mrs. Merrivale, who was an old friend of his, he told us. It did seem strange to have some of her friends with us! But he was really splendid. He used to say, smiling, that you couldn't live in the same house with people like father and Allie, and not live up to yourself.

To be concluded

A Happy New Year to Little People

GOOD-NIGHT IN THE TOY CUPBOARD

Good-night, dear toys, we love you so,
But mother 's calling, we must go;
The day has been so sweet and bright,
So go to sleep till morning light.

Good-night, dear Dolly, do not fear,
For good old Dobbin 's watching near,
And now and then he 'll give a bray
And that will keep the "scares" away.

Good-night, dear Dobbin, stay awake
And watch o'er Dolly for my sake;
Don't let her fear, you understand,
But keep good watch in cupboard land.

Good-night, my dear old butcher shop,
Good-night, dear drum and flag and top;
When day returns we'll have such fun—
Good-night, good-night to every one.

— Treasure Book of Children's Verse.

A January Prize Contest

Listen, my children, and you shall hear of the midnight ride of —— ——; yes, Johnny, you might have seen him pass, had you been living near Boston, ——. You are so foolish I think we will go on to the battle of —— ——. No, Willie. You'll find that history states Burgoyne surrendered to General ——. What? No, Eliza, you must forget; the name of the Frenchman was ——. Well, getting back to our work again, Stony Point was captured by General ——. From across the ocean came moans and groans at the sea-fight won by —— ——. What's that? Of course he was not the one: Cornwallis surrendered to ——. And now I guess you can go and play; that's lesson enough for a single day.

For the best answer to this puzzle a first prize of a guaranteed gun-metal watch, a second prize of a Rochester Premo Camera (guaranteed), a third prize of a box of best Japanese paints or a best quality jack-knife, and twenty-five supplementary prizes will be awarded. Answers to be in by the 15th of January. Prizes will be awarded strictly in order of merit. If you have not already written introducing yourself to the Aunt in the Cozy Corner do not wait. Write to-day, and you will receive among your Christmas gifties a letter of welcome written especially to you.

Good-Night Verse

He crowneth the year with his goodness. . . . His word runneth very swiftly. He giveth snow like wool; he scattereth the hoarfrost like ashes.

Ever lovingly and faithfully,

The Aunt in the Cozy Corner

Brander Cushing's Ambition

Continued from page 1331

also with a thrill of pleasure the girl's honest and undisguised expression of regret when he had told her he must return home and did not know when he might be in Washington again. He had parted from her with a feeling weighing on him that some kind of trouble rising out of this lie of his father's would ruin any romance he might possibly allow to grow up towards this bright creature who seemed to look so kindly at him.

But now that his father was his old self again, and no hint of danger had disturbed them for several months, he began to think of Pax again. Only that morning in his room he had taken the little bow of ribbons out of its place to look at it thoughtfully.

CHAPTER IX

TWO mornings later Brander Cushing, sipping his coffee, and glancing over the morning daily, stopped, laid the paper down, finished his coffee and then looked across at Sidney.

"The grand jury begins its investigation this morning."

"The grand jury?"

"The factory business. Fleming has got busy."

Pause.

"Shall we be summoned?"

"No. It will be a district court case. I don't think, Sid," slowly, "that Fleming can make out anything. He has been too slow."

A week later, at the breakfast table, Brander Cushing again paused over the morning paper, as he looked up from it over at his son. Both of them had been absorbed to the full extent of all their powers of mind and body during that week. The work at the yard was going splendidly. The men seemed to catch the ambitious energy of the master. There was outwardly no expression of ill-will towards him. He seemed to have the respect that formerly made him self-satisfied as he walked through the works. So far Silas Fleming and the grand jury had not obtruded.

"It does not seem possible."

"What, father?"

"The grand jury has brought in its bill. It finds me guilty of—"

"Of what?"

"Manslaughter and criminal negligence."

"Oh, father! it can't be!"

"It is, though. Curse Silas Fleming!"

Silence.

"What can we do?"

"Nothing but wait for the trial."

"When will that be?"

"I suppose this term."

"On what grounds could the jury bring in a bill of manslaughter? The failure to provide the—?"

"No. It seems the two doors on the floor where most of the girls worked were locked. Of course, that was not my affair. And Fleming cannot prove it."

"Who could testify about that? Nearly all the girls on that floor were killed."

"We know two who were not."

"Two?"

"Those girls, Hermosa and Athanasia."

"Others came over the board."

"But none of them except those two could really swear that the doors were locked. Besides, the paper says, one of the elevator men found in the débris the very lock of one of the doors, the bolt shot back, you understand."

Brander Cushing got up and shook himself.

"Come!" he said almost roughly. "Let us go down to work."

"Father," said Sidney gently. "You know I will stand by?"

"I know it. Don't be afraid. It'll all come out right."

That evening Sidney, obeying an impulse that he had more than once felt but in the busy weeks had not had time to gratify, went over to the double-decker to see Hermosa and her father.

He shut his senses to the memory of the horrors of the place as he went up the dark stairs. He had forgotten the particular location of the room and had to inquire.

When he knocked, there was at first no answer. After the second time he was answered by a man's voice.

He went in and found Hermosa's father alone.

He sat in the same place where he had been when Sidney burst in five months before. When Sidney spoke the man's face lighted up.

"Hermosa is helping Athanasia with her work. Her brother is in the hospital. Yes. He was injured during the trouble at your house. He was not doing anything. Just looking on. As he turned to run, after the police began to fire, he was struck in the back."

The man talked quietly, with a sad undertone, as one acquainted to the full with life's tragedy.

"When will your daughter be back?"

"Soon, I think. I'm glad to see you, Mr. Cushing. It was a great thing you did, a great thing. I could almost see it."

"I would rather not talk of it. Do you suffer much, Mr. Howard?"

"Not at all. I am entirely free from pain."

Then for the first time Sidney noted, looking more carefully over into the dark corner, that the blind man was weaving something. He made a gentle inquiry.

"Yes, I am making horsehair braid. Hermosa lays out the colors in the proper order every morning. I am very happy in my work."

Sidney watched him. One hand and arm were entirely well and free. The other hand and arm were so affected that he could use two fingers by keeping the arm slung in a frame which moved back and forth as he directed it from a curiously made harness of levers manipulated with the elbow of his other arm. He worked as he talked, in a quiet manner that actually rested the looker-on like a sedative. Something about the regular patient movement of the man's fingers brought the tears into Sidney's eyes.

The door opened quietly and Hermosa came in, followed by Athanasia.

The girls stopped at the sight of Sidney, who had risen.

"I called, Miss Howard, to—"

He really had no clear motive in his mind for coming. That was the reason he could not finish his sentence.

Hermosa smiled. Athanasia looked at Sidney earnestly.

"I have not seen either of you since—since you came so generously to warn us."

"It did not do much good," said Athanasia simply.

"I am sorry to hear of your brother's injury. He is better, I hope."

Athanasia colored. It was the second time in her life that Sidney had spoken to her directly.

"Jim ought not to have been there. But he is getting better."

Silence, which grew embarrassing for Sidney. Hermosa went over to her father and helped him with some little difficulty, and then sat down by him. The room was dimly lighted.

"I am sorry, more than I can say, for your father, Mr. Cushing."

Sidney waited, thinking Hermosa had not finished. Athanasia sat near him. Her face looked anxious.

"Perhaps that helps me to say one or two things, Miss Howard. You will not mind if I ask some questions?"

"No."

"I may as well say that I regard my father's position as critical. He will not acknowledge it. You have testified to the county attorney that the door was locked?"

"Yes," slowly. "It is true. It was locked."

"And the key?"

"Was not in the door."

"You are sure of that?"

"Yes."

"By whose order was the door locked?"

"I do not know."

"Surely you don't believe, Miss Howard, that my father—"

"No!" sharply from Athanasia.

Hermosa was silent.

"My father, Miss Howard, of course disclaims all knowledge of the locked doors in the factory. It must have been the act of some foreman."

"The foreman of our floor was killed in the elevator. Of course, I believe your father was not to blame for such an order as the locked doors. But I had to testify to the fact that they were locked."

"Oh!" cried Athanasia.

"And it must be a great relief to you, Mr. Cushing, that your father is free from the guilt of not providing escapes."

Silence.

Athanasia spoke again, very timidly in manner; her remarkable voice contrasted with it so as to create an impression of two distinct personalities.

"Mr. Cushing, what would happen if—if—it could be proved that the door was not locked?"

"It would greatly weaken the indictment for manslaughter."

"What will they do to your father if he is found guilty?"

"Athanasia!" Hermosa rose and came over to the crippled girl. Athanasia looked perplexed, but did not cease to look earnestly at Sidney. A deep red spot glowed on her cheeks.

"Miss Howard, it does not hurt me. Father and I have gone over all that, Athanasia." (He spoke the word because she seemed so like a girl to him, her crippled bent form contrasted so with Hermosa, who stood by her.) "If my father is found guilty on the charge brought, he will have to go to State prison for five years or more."

"Your father?"

"Yes, my father!" Sidney Cushing said it with a sob. After all, he was not much more than a boy in years, and his affectionate nature, lacking a mother, had poured itself out about his father.

The two girls instinctively moved nearer him. Athanasia, with a naive, almost childlike sympathy and wish to comfort him, softly touched his hand, and then shrank back as if she had been guilty of an unmaidenly act. In the dim light I do not think Sidney noticed it.

"But—but—they cannot find him guilty. He is so powerful and—and so good. He has not punished any of the men for attacking him, and—the burning of the works. They can't find him guilty."

"I hope they cannot."

"Mr. Cushing, I told the jury that the door was locked, but I don't feel sure."

"Athanasia!" Hermosa spoke in astonishment. Athanasia was silent.

Sidney was amazed. Then Hermosa looked at Sidney with a look of explanation. Whether he understood or not, she could not tell. Only as Sidney returned her look he noted as well as he could, in the uncertain light of the room, her attitude of poise. From that minute there crept into his mind an image of such a character that he could not define it. The most he could say was that she commanded his most alert, intelligent interest.

When he went away he spoke to the blind man last. The two girls were standing in the middle of the room as he shut the door, Athanasia following him with a gaze that seemed to burn like a beam of light through the obscurity.

To be continued

Cornish Sent C... Year's Sold Under Bond To Plea...
Don't buy hastily—insist that the maker pro... strument and you will know whether it will pl... and is all t... claimed. Cornish ... and organ on trial ... onstrate ... ity with... gating pro... buyers ... then and ... on a condition ... that, if no ... ly as repre... or many ... satisfactor... instrumen... take back ... time with... refunding ... chase money, together with freight charges bot...
Sold At Factory Prices
By the Cornish "Year's Approval Plan" you buy intelligently, save one-third or more of regular retail price, and get an instrument of renowned quality and superior tone. Perfection of material and workmanship guaranteed for 25 years.
You Choose Your Own Terms
Send today for the handsome Cornish Book, which explains fully our very liberal terms of selling plans and shows the latest styles of pianos and organs. You should have this beautifully illustrated book, whether you buy or not.
Cornish Co. Washington, N. J.
Established Over Half a Century

THE SIGNATURE
on this can has an inner meaning. It means that There's no lie on the label
Then no ... in the ... can Hunt's Supreme Quality
CALIFORNIA FRUITS
inside the can are luscious Peaches, Pears, Apricots a... Cherries.
Write us about our World's Fair ... 100 Free Trips to California
HUNT BROS. CO.
112 Market Street, San Francisco Cal.

5% And Your Money Safe
THIS Company has paid 5 per cent on deposits ... years. Investors all over the world avail themselves of this opportunity of getting liberal earning without a vestige of speculation. Your money can be withdrawn at short notice any time.
Assets of over $2,500,00... and the conduct of our business in accordance with the stringent New York banking laws, protects ... Loans are made only on the best class of New York and suburban real estate. The earnings are allowed ... day of deposit, are compounded semi-annually, or remitted ... quarterly or semi-annual ... as preferred.
INDUSTRIAL SAVINGS & LOAN CO. NEW YORK CITY
Write for particulars. Probably we can refer to a patron in your town.
Industrial Savings & Loan Co.
2 Times Bldg., B'way & 42d St New York

Buy the Original
ZIMMERMAN "AUTOHARP"
AUTOHARP Trade Mark
"The Nation's favorite ... None genuine without ... trade mark ... tobacco ... A musical ... ted to all classes ... stores ... $5 to $75 ...
"Easy to Play." ... Send for Free ... illustrated ... more ... THE PHONO-H... East Boston, ... lity at ... ther ... eral, ... role ... here ... any

6% NET
For 26 years we have been paying ... the highest returns consistent with ... methods. First mortgage loans ... which we can recommend after ... personal investigation. Send ... for List ... and Certificates of Deposit also for ...
PERKINS & CO. Lawr...

For Developing and Printing ... by writing me for prices. Developing 10 ... Prints, 3 cts. up. Send two films for FR...
H. A. CLARK, 3 Plaza, BROOKLY...

Women of Baptist Alliance

HE World's Baptist Alliance Convention at Philadelphia during the summer of 1911 brought existence a new world evangelizorganization of women—the wombranch of the World's Alliance. membership of body includes en n many countot the globe—sia, the Orient, ope South Amer- South Africa, at Britain — revr the Baptist p of Christian ers have gone th bright mesot the Gospel. bject is the exion of Christian ene to hearts hones in all parts e lobe.

e secretary of ner and importwcld movement hristian women iss Edith Camp- Cane of Balti-, Md. Graduated n Bryn Mawr in . Miss Crane served as secry of the Bryn Mawr School Baimore for six years before tck up the duties of Young Women's Christian Association leadership as assistant executive secretary of the New York State committee of that organization. In May, 1907, she was elected corresponding secretary of the Woman's Missionary Union, auxiliary to the Southern Baptist Convention, a position which she still holds. Miss Crane was one of the delegates at the great World's Missionary Conference in Edinburgh in 1910. She was made chairman of the woman's meetings held in connection with the Baptist World Alliance in Philadelphia in 1911. And she was then elected secretary of the permanent organization of the Women's Auxiliary to the World Alliance.

Miss Edith Campbell Crane

A young woman of rare spiritual power, with fine organizing and executive ability, Miss Crane will have great opportunity in her new position for putting her gifts and experience into work full of promise.

J. A. S.

"How Do You Do?" or to that Effect

E Moorish natives of North Africa have a system of salutawhich is unique even if it doesn't pealery strongly to us. The passgod wish of the German or the nchman or the American doesn't med itself to your Moroccan, and the street conversation of the risman, "Hello, old man! How re? Going strong—that's right, ng"—his language has not words pass his disdain.

r is the kind of conversation tes place at every meeting of to friends or acquaintances—M Abd'l-Khader and Mr. Boo'l-a.:

"e be with you this morning."
n with you be peace."
lo do you do?"
Vliout any ill."
r you well?"
'hik Allah!"
n is your health good?"
good."
n you have no ill in your body?"
ive none."
r your bones, how are they?"
y are indeed strong."
r your little bones?"
re is no ill to them."
d the marrow in your bones, is ?"
s well."
d your limbs, are they well?"
ey are sound, praise be the st."
d the whole of your body, is it well."

"And your forehead, how is it this morning?"

"By your life, truly it is well."

"And how is your nose?"

"It is free from harm, I am grateful to you."

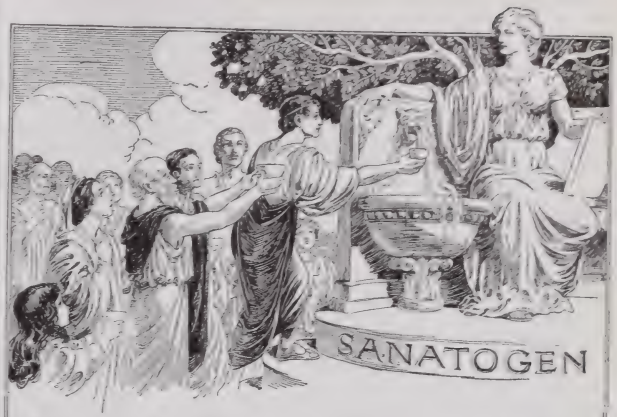
"And your ears, are they well?"

"They are well, may the Prophet be blessed."

And so on and so forth, until almost every part of the human system has been alluded to.

Among the Workers

—EVANGELIST NICOLAS ZAMORA writes that Family Altar League, now three years in operation, is in daily contact with 140,000 lives throughout the country, and steadily growing.



—REV. JOHN H. ELLIOT, D.D., and Mr. Albert Simpson Reitz have just completed a successful evangelistic mission in Plattsburg, N. Y., with the united churches. Many definite decisions for Christ were secured and many additions to the churches were received. These evangelists have begun another campaign in Harrisburg, Pa.

—ON SUNDAY, December 3, the twentieth anniversary of the pastorate of the Rev. Dr. Howard Duffield was celebrated at the Old First Presbyterian Church, New York. The morning service at 11 o'clock was conducted by Dr. Duffield, and the Rev. Dr. Henry Mottet, rector of the Church of the Holy Communion, preached in the evening. No one is better qualified to speak concerning the problems and possibilities of the down-town church than Dr. Mottet. His splendid achievement in adapting the Church of the Holy Communion to the changed conditions of the lower city make it peculiarly fitting that he should voice the feelings suggested by the celebration of a similar twenty years' struggle which Dr. Duffield has made so successfully to establish and to enlarge the work of the Old First Church.

Undesirable Advertisements

T record of 1911 just closing gives some idea of how much precaution is aken by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD to exclude undesirable advertisements om its columns; for instance, during the year we have refused 110 ements, aggregating 10,331 lines, provided each of these advertisers s advertisement in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD but once only. Of course, been allowed to advertise, many of them would have inserted their ements more than once, so that the aggregate of 10,331 lines—over fourges—is very much less than the full amount which would have been d to our columns, had not THE CHRISTIAN HERALD been so careful of the s of its readers.

Whenever any of our subscribers is defrauded by an advertiser in THE TIAN HERALD we will make good the claim, provided that the subscriber, ust be of record, has mentioned THE CHRISTIAN HERALD in writing to the ser, and provided the claim is made to us within two months of the date appearance of the advertisement. We do not guarantee financial adverbut we take every possible precaution to assure ourselves of their y before admitting their advertisements to our columns.

Nerve Sufferers Find Sanatogen a Source of Renewed Strength

NO physical suffering is more distressing in its beginnings, more dangerous in its aggravated forms, than suffering brought about by impaired nerve health.

Sleep, appetite, energy, all suffer from nerve loss and all combine to depress the mind, and to weaken the foundation of the entire system.

Impoverished nerves have their own peculiar and imperative needs—food needs that are specifically recognized and naturally helped by Sanatogen.

Nerves cannot be repaired by drugs—by goading, or any form of mere stimulation. They need the tonic help of a food—their own food. Sanatogen combines in concentrated form the precise nourishment demanded by the exhaustion.

This reconstructive power of Sanatogen, this regenerative force, feeding and sustaining the delicate nervous network, and infusing its rejuvenating energy into every part of the system, is recognized by the 15,000 practising physicians who have written hearty endorsements of this greatest of food tonics.

Does not such a record of achievement suggest that Sanatogen will help you?

We ask you earnestly to get acquainted with Sanatogen. Investigate our claims first if you like, and we are only too glad to have you do so. Ask your doctor about it, and in any case write at once for our book, "Our Nerves of To-morrow," written in an absorbingly interesting style, beautifully illustrated and containing facts and information of vital interest to you. This book also contains evidence of the value of Sanatogen which is as remarkable as it is conclusive.

Sanatogen is sold in three sizes: $1.00, $1.90 and $3.60

Get Sanatogen from your druggist—if not obtainable from him, send upon receipt of price

THE BAUER CHEMICAL CO., Everett Building Fourth Ave., New York

Mme. Sarah Grand

[illegible] Heavenly Twins, writes:

"I began to take Sanatogen after suffering from years of enforced idleness from extreme debility, and had most frightful attacks of nervous prostration. After a few weeks, I found myself able to throw off these attacks in a day or two instead of weeks, as formerly. I feel myself able to endure work which would, but a few months ago, have laid me up for days, as much of both as I ever did."

Late King Edward's Physician

Dr. [illegible] late Monmouth writes:

"I have been using Sanatogen for a number of years in my practice with excellent results. These results have been [illegible] and I have no hesitation in saying that Sanatogen is a most valuable remedy for [illegible] when a reconstructive tonic is required to restore the strength, to stimulate the bodily functions, and to improve the circulation of the blood."

Charles D. Sigsbee

Rear Admiral U. S. Navy, writes:

"After a thorough trial of Sanatogen, I am convinced of its merits as a food and nerve tonic. Its beneficial effects are beyond doubt."

Amelia E. Barr

the well-known popular author, writes:

"I send my sincere gratitude for the marvellous help I have derived from the use of Sanatogen. When I commenced it seven weeks ago, I was in an extremity of nervous weakness brought on by [illegible] mental work aggravated by the shock of a bad fall backward. Slowly at first, but surely, it [illegible] and strengthened me, so that now I have almost my usual good health."

CLASS PINS

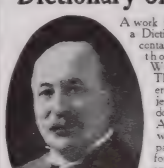
Attractive New Catalogue of elegant up-to-date designs. Class and Fraternity Pins, Emblems, Enameled and Jeweled. Class Rings Trophies and Medals mailed free on request. All pins mounted with our patent safety clasp. Work Guaranteed.

PETER PAUL & SON, Jewelers and Stationers
136 North Pearl Street Dept. A. Buffalo, N. Y.
COLLEGE SCHOOL FRATERNITY

Monarch Light Touch
TYPEWRITERS
$3. rental for one month
$15. rental for six months
Sold on EASY PAYMENT plan
Send for Literature and address of nearest office
Executive Offices: 300 Broadway, New York

MUSIC TAUGHT FREE
HOME INSTRUCTION

We want to advertise and introduce our home study music lessons into all parts of America, and will give you absolutely free instruction if you will simply recommend the International Institute to your friends after you learn to play. We successfully teach Piano, Organ, Violin, Mandolin, Guitar, Cornet, Banjo, 'Cello and Sight Singing.



You may not know one note from another; yet, by our wonderfully simple and thorough method, you can soon learn to play. If you are an advanced player you will receive special instruction.

Our lessons are sent weekly. They are so simple and easy that they are recommended to any person or little child who can read English. Photographs and drawings make everything plain. If you accept our free tuition offer you will be asked to pay only a very small amount (averaging 14 cents a week) to cover postage and necessary sheet music.

We have successfully taught others and we can successfully teach you. Write to-day for our FREE booklet, which explains everything. It will convince you and cost you nothing.

INTERNATIONAL INSTITUTE OF MUSIC
98 Fifth Avenue, Dept. 00, New York
No connection with U. S. School of Music

"Dictionary of Thoughts"

A work that is to thoughts what a Dictionary is to words. It contains 16,075 of the best thoughts of 1,775 of the Worlds greatest Authors and Thinkers (ancient and modern) on 968 different subjects — 682 closely printed double column pages, and Authors reference index, by which the thoughts of any particular Author are quickly found. We make the following special offer to examine this book at our expense as we know it will never come back.

Send us no money—fill out and mail the coupon today

F. B. DICKERSON CO.,
78 Lafayette Ave.,
DETROIT, MICH.

Send without expense to me "Dictionary of Thoughts." After 5 days I will return book or send you $3.00.

Name .....
Address .....
Occupation .....

God's Purpose in Man's Life*

Sunday School Lesson by Dr. and Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts

TWO occurrences made one morning the most momentous in the life of Zacharias the priest. Both took place in the temple at Jerusalem, early in the morning, even at "the time of cock-crowing." Zacharias was one of a company of priests whose duty it was on that particular day to examine the temple courts by torchlight, to stir to fresh flame the fire on the altar of burnt offering, to trim the candles in the golden candlestick, and to make ready the golden altar of incense. The last act of preparation was to cast lots to determine who should that day offer the incense which symbolized Israel's accepted prayers. It is said that only once in a lifetime might one enjoy that privilege, and he was henceforth called "rich." It was the day of days to Zacharias. He was sixty years of age, but then the ministers of God were not disqualified by age—only by infirmity, and Zacharias was not infirm.

An Oriental Picture

See this picture: "The celebrant priest, bearing the golden censer, stood alone within the Holy Place, lit by the sheen of the seven-branched candlestick. Before him—somewhat farther away, towards the heavy veil that hung before the Holy of Holies, was the golden altar of incense, on which the red coals glowed. To his right (the left or the north side of the altar) was the table of shew-bread; to his left (on the right or south side of the altar) was the golden candlestick. Still he waited as instructed to do, till a special signal indicated that the moment had come to spread the incense on the altar, as near as possible to the Holy of Holies. Priests and people had reverently withdrawn from the neighborhood of the altar, and were prostrate before the Lord, offering unspoken worship, in which record of part deliverance, longing for mercies promised in the future, and entreaty for present blessing and peace seemed the ingredients of the incense that rose in a fragrant cloud of praise and prayer. Deep silence had fallen on the worshipers, as if they watched the prayers of Israel ascending to heaven in the cloud of odors that rose from the golden altar in the Holy Place. Zacharias waited until he saw the incense kindling. Then he also would have bowed down in worship, and reverently withdrawn, had not a wondrous sight arrested his steps."†

(In teaching this lesson to any grade of class the teacher should use pictures of the things mentioned, and if possible of the scene itself.)

A Heavenly Visitor

The second occurrence: It was unlike the first occurrence because it came suddenly and unexpectedly upon Zacharias. Nothing like it had ever before happened in the temple. A being of another world stood between the golden candlestick and the golden altar, and regarded him as the one he had come to communicate with. "Fear fell upon him"—not guilty fear, but he was overpowered by the majesty of the vision. He was reassured by the voice of the angel as he uttered the wonderful tidings he had come from heaven to bring: "Thy wife Elisabeth shall bear thee a son, and thou shalt call his name John. And thou shalt have joy and gladness; and many shall rejoice at his birth. . . . And many of the children of Israel shall he turn unto the Lord their God. And he shall go before his face in the spirit and power of Elijah to make ready for the Lord a people prepared for him." At the first occurrence Zacharias' cup of blessing had been full; but the second occurrence made his cup overflow. During all the years of his manhood he had often longed, even prayed, for a son. Not having a son had been a sorrow to him because to an Israelite it was a cutting off from being in the line of the Messiah. Now he was to have a son! The angel Gabriel had brought him word from heaven—a wonderful son, worthy to be compared with the greatest of prophets, even Elijah! The thought was too much for him to grasp, and he said to the angel, "Whereby shall I know this?" And for almost a year he was not able to speak another word, for the angel said to him, "Thou shalt be silent, and not able to speak, until thy son shall be born."

The people were waiting outside for Zacharias to come out and pronounce the priestly blessing. Presently he came, but he could not speak the words of benediction. The assembly was awe-struck, for then they knew that he had seen a vision in the temple. They dispersed, and Zacharias went to his home in the hill country.

The days of expectation on the part of Zacharias and Elisabeth were filled with holy thoughts concerning their child, for the angel had told he was to be one of great destiny, and that the grace of God should be upon him to prepare him to be the forerunner of Christ.

God's Plan

It is a wonderful matter to consider that God had a great work in the world to be done, and created a man expressly for it, that man being John, who should prepare the way for the Son of God in the hearts of the people.

Has God ever done anything like that since? We believe that what men call success is the working out of God's plan in individual lives. Therefore, let not any successful men or women lay a flattering unction to their own souls, as did King Nebuchadnezzar when he said, "Is not this great Babylon, which I have built for the royal dwelling place, by the might of my power, and for the glory of my majesty?" (Dan. 4: 30). Not until he was humbled to the lowest degree, his hair grown as eagle's feathers and his nails like birds' claws, and his feeding like that of the ox, was he brought to a true estimate of his own insignificance compared with the power and majesty of God. All of the great preachers who have delighted and helped the church; all of those scientists who have grasped the stars, and played with lightning, and caused the elements to be their servants; all teachers who have opened up the treasures of knowledge; all workers in metals who have filled the world with beautiful and useful things; all husbandmen who have brought forth the treasures of harvest and caused desert places to blossom—these have all been men created by God to do their special work. Let us read in Exodus 35: 30-35 how Bizaleel and Aholiab were endowed by God to work in gold and in silver and brass, and in cutting of stones, and in carving of wood, and in all manner of workmanship when Moses was about to enter upon the construction of the tabernacle. And the women, too, were endowed, for they did spin with their hands and brought forth the blue, the purple and the scarlet, and the fine linen, to be used in the garments of the high priest, and in the wonderful hangings which formed so conspicuous a part of the tabernacle. The women who did

Continued on next page

* The International Sunday School Lesson for January 7, 1912. The Birth of John the Baptist Foretold. Luke 1: 5-23. GOLDEN TEXT: "Without faith it is impossible to please him." Heb. 11: 6.

† Edersheim in The Life of the Messiah.

It's a me in itself!

Rich, juicy beef; sound New York State apples; selected raisins and cur all put together with a da sweet cider and flavored v wonderful spice blend.

There you have a real pie—a pi possible only with

NONE SU MINCEME

"LIKE MOTHER USED TO MA

Just the satisfying, staying, dessert the working man rec Just the appetizing, savory, v some dessert that finds g favor in every American ho

A 10 cent package of Such Mince Meat makes 2 big pies. At the grocer's.

MERRELL-SOULE CO., SYRACUSE, NEW YORK

Members of Association for Promotion of Purity in Food

Starting His Bank Account with His Own Earnings.

Many Christian Herald Boys are NOW earning a splend spare-time, after-school income—so much every week.

Besides—each boy earns prizes.

The boy who does the best work gets a pony, too.

All boys have an equal opportunity—those who just are starting a others who have large and profitable lists of customers.

Any boy can start NOW. We will supply the first ten copies FREE of cost—fifty cents' worth.

Use this coupon today.

SPECIAL COUPON

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD,
Bible House, New York City. Date.....

Please send me a start in business and tell me all about how I may win the beauti Shetland Pony, if I do good work.

Signed.....

Address.....

Age..... Town..... State.....

Sunday School Lesson

Continued from preceding page

were called "wise-hearted." We st believe that a similar endowment s upon Dorcas when she made the ts and garments for the widows l orphans (Acts 9: 36, 39). Let girls or women who read this on, who can make anything beauti- or useful, paint a picture, decorate ga, carve in wood, embroider or do iner needlework, write an article a book, make music on any instru- nt, teach, or do the part of a nurse, them give God the praise as they l they have found their vocation, t they are doing what God had in- ded they should do. We repeat, d has a plan for each and every life, d he reveals it not by an angel, as did to Zacharias, but generally rough circumstances by which he rrounds individuals, and by the rrings which he gives to souls that n be explained in no other way. t us in our own development, and in r efforts to help others, strive to be laborers with God.

Probably not for a moment did it ter into the minds of Zacharias and isabeth that they would try to make t of their promised son anything but at the Lord intended he should be, prophet to prepare the way of the rd. But all parents are not as wise they. When Isaac Watts was ien to writing poetry as a boy, he as beaten by his father, when he claimed:

O father, do some pity take.
And I will no more verses make.

Gutenberg's mother was scolding m for his worthlessness when the ought of printing was being born in s brain. Pascal, being forbidden in hood to study geometry, made cir- s and lines and triangles with arcoal in his playroom, and as he d no teacher and no book, he gave mes of his own to his figures, call- g a circle a "round," a line a "bar," d so became a world-famed mathe- atician as God intended he should . The father of George Stephen- n forbade his boy the tools with hich to whittle and make machines, t the child built them with mud. andel's father tried to make a law- r out of him, and took his music om him, but the wonderful genius Handel, with only a muffled instru- nt, stealthily played in the attic.

The mother of James Watt called him "the idle, shiftless James," and his aunt gave him a severe scolding for idleness, saying: "Take a book and employ yourself usefully; for the last hour you have not spoken one word, but taken off the lid of that kettle and put it on again, holding now a cup, and now a silver spoon, over the steam, watching how it rises from the spout, and catching and collecting the drops of hot water it falls into. Are you not ashamed of spending your time in this way?" But the aunt did not have her way, the boy did, and the world was given the wonderful "steam carriage" (locomotive engine).

It is surely the mission of those who are the guardians of childhood to put around it such influences as shall kindle rather than quench the tendencies which God has implanted.

As to our own activities there have been many Micawbers who spent their lives waiting for something to turn up—therefore uselessly. Instead of waiting, let us do the next thing, no matter how commonplace or how difficult the task may be, and in that obedience we may discover what is God's purpose in our life.

The Lesson Taught to Children

Let several pictures of little babies be shown, and let a short conversation follow in which the children are given opportunity to tell about their babies at home. "My baby" is the expression they will invariably use! Probably some child can repeat the poem, "Where did you come from, baby dear?" by George Macdonald; if not, it should be read by the teacher.

"How did you come to us, you dear?"
"God thought about you, and so I am here."

After this, they will be ready for the story about how God thought about Zacharias and Elisabeth, and promised them a little son. The man was needed who should get the hearts of the people ready to love the Lord Jesus, and so he sent this baby to Zacharias and Elisabeth, even telling the name by which they should call him. Perhaps there are several boys named John in the class; they should be asked to stand in their places, that they may recognize somewhat the blessedness in their name, and perhaps be incited by it to noble lives.

Answered Prayers

rs. J. L. K., East Sparta, O. "I wish to acknowledge a wonderful answer to prayer."

C., Branchville, N. J. "God has recently answered a prayer for me beyond anything I could ask or think."

rs. J. S. M., Scranton, Kan. "I wish to acknowledge the fact that God has given me a direct answer to prayers."

. E. C., Texas. "I wish to express my acknowledgment that God has been very gracious in answering my prayers."

) L. J., Eunis, Texas. "I acknowledge that God has heard and answered my prayers. The evidences are unmistakable."

. T., Safe Harbor, Pa. "I wish to acknowledge an answer to prayer. I know that our heavenly Father is ever ready to help us if we put trust him."

. M. L., Wilmington, Del. "I made a request of our heavenly Father for success in a special undertaking, and he quickly and perfectly answered my prayer."

reader of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for many years, wishes to acknowledge that God has answered prayer in restoring a child to health, and wishes to thank him."

rs. H. N. R., Fairview, Mont. "I wish to acknowledge an answered prayer. I was in great trouble and asked the Lord to deliver me. He gave me much more than I asked."

rs. J. M. J., Murfreesboro, Tenn. "I know our heavenly Father answers our prayers. I asked him to give me strength to go through an operation, and I know that it was his help that saved me."

rs. J. B., Greentown, Ind. "I wish to acknowledge God's goodness to me in answering my prayers. During the past two years he has been most generous in restoring to health my children and in answering many other prayers."

Called Higher

John D. Drake, of Middlefield, O., passed from earth June 3, 1910.

Israel Wright (78), of Holland, Mich., was called to the long home on October 22.

Mrs. Rose A. Isbell, of North Adams, Mass., died March 19, 1911. She was a reader of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for many years.

Mrs. I. C. Toler (84), of Blakely, Ga., a subscriber to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, died at the home of her niece there on September 18.

Mrs. Margaret H. Stone died at her home in Homestead, December 3, 1910. "None knew her but to love her."

Mrs. Sarah H. Hawthorn (85) died recently at her home in Albia, Ia. She had been for twenty-five years a reader of this magazine.

Mrs. Lucy Tunison (75) was called to her heavenly home on March 8, 1911. "To her THE CHRISTIAN HERALD came next to her Bible."

Mrs. L. R. Shearer (82), of Van Wert, O., a subscriber to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for the past ten years, was called home September 19.

Mrs. Mary J. Anderson, of Cedar Hill, Texas, passed away recently at her home there. She had been an earnest Christian worker and a subscriber to this paper for many years.

Mrs. J. L. Paterson (78), of Rock Spring, Wyo., died recently at her home there. She had been for many years a subscriber to this paper and a contributor to its charities.

Mrs. Mattie Giddens (60), of Commerce, Texas, recently passed to her rest after a long period of invalidism and illness. She was a devout Christian and for years a subscriber to this magazine.

Mrs. Harriet Smith Gay (79) of Dale, N. Y., recently passed on to the heavenly home. She had been a subscriber to this magazine practically ever since its inception. Many of her generous gifts have gone to aid the various charitable enterprises of the paper.

For Universal Service

The Press and the Bell System

The power of the individual writer is multiplied by the printing press. In the same way the power of the individual telephone is multiplied by the Bell system. In both cases, increased usefulness comes from progress towards universal service.

By means of the press the knowledge and thoughts of writers are spread throughout the land, maintaining among all the people the common language and the mutual understanding which makes for national co-operation.

By means of the Bell system, each individual telephone becomes connectable with every other telephone and each unit in the nation is given a personal membership in the most highly developed system of communication that the world has ever seen.

The press prepares people for co-operation; the Bell telephone system enables them to really co-operate. The press educates people separately; the telephone enables them to act upon their mutual knowledge immediately and at any distance.

By co-operation with telegraph and cable systems, universal service for communication is being made international.

AMERICAN TELEPHONE AND TELEGRAPH COMPANY
AND ASSOCIATED COMPANIES

One Policy One System Universal Service

GUARANTEED Freight Paid

Our Gold Coin Stove Guaranty is to take back the stove at our expense, any time within a year and refund your money if you are not satisfied.

Freight is prepaid; safe delivery insured, ready to set up—even polished. Send for our Free Catalogue, Price List and Offer.

Our prices are $5 to $20 less than any dealer's prices. The stoves are only of the very best—and so guaranteed.

Gold Coin Stove Co. 11 Oak Street, Troy, N. Y.

MARVEL SOLDER

INSTANTLY MENDS ALL LEAKS

in all kinds of household utensils—enameled, tin, iron, copper, brass, etc. Solders Without Heat. Just squeeze from tube and spread over hole or crack with fingers. Hardening, it makes solid, smooth surface. Patches all machinery. Fine for motorists.

Send 10c for trial tube.

MARVEL SOLDER CO. AGENTS WANTED
1937 Broadway Dept 8 New York QUICK SALES BIG PROFITS

PATENT YOUR IDEAS

$8,500 offered for one invention. Book "How to Obtain a Patent" and "What to Invent" sent free. Send rough sketch for free report as to patentability. Patents advertised for sale at our expense in Manufacturers, Journals.

Patent Obtained or Fee Returned

CHANDLEE & CHANDLEE, Patent Att'ys
Established 16 Years
925 F. Street, Washington, D. C.

Give the Swindler The Laugh

Learn to detect the tricks that professional "gyps" and crooked dealers work in order to beat you in a horse trade. Read as told by Dr. A. S. Alexander, the famous veterinarian, and published by Farm Journal for the protection of its friends and supporters against fraud. This book reveals every frame-up practiced by the slickest rascals in the business—the "Widow Dodge," the "fresh butter" trick, the "ginger" trick and scores of others. Also contains the most practical advice as to the care and cure of horses. The most complete and valuable book of its kind ever published—offered to you with a four years subscription to the most helpful and practical farm paper published—

"Horse Secrets"

Farm Journal

—unlike any other paper—teaches the doctrine of commonsense farming in a forceful, to-the-point and interesting way all its own. A sensible, cheerful, clean, quaint little paper which has carried sunshine and valuable advice into country homes for thirty-five years, and now numbers upward of four million readers. This paper monthly for four years and "Horse Secrets" at once postpaid

Both For $1.00

Send for them at once, and if, on the receipt of the book, you don't believe that in it alone you have much more than your money's worth, say so and we'll stop the paper at once.

Farm Journal, 184 N. Clifton St., Philadelphia

Christian Herald Peace League

Programme for Peace Circles Fortnight Ending January 12

GENERAL topic: The Responsibility of the Church; also the Individual Responsibility of Church Members in the World Peace Movement.

Motto: The first duty of the Church to-day is to mould men of such character and ideals that from its ranks will be chosen men to fill the responsible positions of government.

Roll call, officers' reports, reading of the minutes, unfinished business, reading of matter from headquarters, general discussion of the topic and of the Interrupted Peace Meeting, of which an account is given on page 1315 of this issue. Songs, recitations, readings, historic tableaux and many social features should be added to the programmes during the holiday season.

Suggestions for special programmes for holiday peace meetings will be gladly supplied.

Peace League Leaflet

A leaflet which contains extracts from the Peace sermons of the leading divines, delivered throughout the country on the 26th of November, 1911, will be sent free of cost to any readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, together with organization leaflets and other printed matter in the interest of World Peace.

Address all communications to Secretary, CHRISTIAN HERALD PEACE LEAGUE, Bible House, New York City.

A NEW FAMINE COMMITTEE

—THE REV. E. C. LOBENSTINE, of the Presbyterian Mission at Hwai Yuan, and the Rev. Arnold Foster of the London Missionary Society at Wuchang, China, were recently appointed to organize a new famine relief committee at Shanghai. The committee is now formed, and has for its president Bishop Graves, of the American Episcopal Mission. Mr. Lobenstine is secretary, and Mr. C. R. Scott, manager of the International Banking Corporation, treasurer. Dr. Wu Ting Fang and nine other prominent Chinese are serving on the committee. A serious effort is to be made not only to relieve present distressing conditions of famine, which are due to the overflowing of rivers, but to conduct engineering operations, particularly in the Hwai Valley, which will lessen the likelihood of future floods.

A LAUGH IN EVERY LINE

Received the book Samantha at Coney Island, which is a continuous laugh from beginning to end, underneath which her Christian character shines forth in every chapter. The Almanac, which you sent with your good paper, should be called instead of an almanac what Jimmie named his book (in the continued story To the Highest Bidder) a book of "val'ble information," for such it is in every sense of the word. With the best wishes for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD and the good work it accomplishes, I remain EMMA KNAPP.

Peekskill, N. Y.

PEARLS
Frederic's Famous Scientific Pearls
in Graduated Strings including Artificial Pearl and Diamond Cluster Clasp. Regularly sold at $5.00. SPECIAL $3.00
Illustrated Catalog Sent for 10c Postage
Three New York Stores FREDERICS Direct to Wearer Manufacturers
Address Mail Order Office
52 West 37th St., New York

VIRGINIA APPLE ORCHARDS For Big Profits
$50. Cash and $10.00 Per Month Buys a 10-acre APPLE ORCHARD tract in "The Beautiful Shenandoah Valley of Virginia." Other farm and fruit lands $15.00 per acre and up. Best climate, water, neighbors, churches and markets. Send for "Southern Homeseeker," maps, rates, etc.
Address F. H. LaBaume, Agt'l Agt., Norfolk & Western Ry., Box 3002, Roanoke, Va.

POST CARDS
10 Valentine - - - - 10c | 10 Washington's Birthday 10c
10 St. Patrick's Day - 10c | 10 Birthday - - - - - 10c
10 General Subjects - 10c | 10 Greetings - - - - - 10c
Three 10-cent packages mailed for 25c. One package of each of above 60 high grade cards mailed for 50 cents; 100 for 80 cents. We mail a special assortment of any of the above subjects for 60 cents per 100.
MADISON ART COMPANY, Madison, Conn.

PIANO LESSONS
By mail. A simple, practical and entertaining course for home study. No previous knowledge of music necessary; anybody can learn. Lessons sent weekly. Booklet Free.
Dept. 40, Interstate School of Music, Box 2015, Boston, Mass.

A Tour in the Sahara

Continued from page 1314

caravan stopped earlier than usual and we were fortunately able to dry clothes and luggage in the sun which came out shortly afterwards and in the evening we lit a great fire.

After seven days' journeying we arrived at our first Arab village, beautifully encircled by plantations of date-palms. The dwellings of the people are very quaint, being built of sandstone and plaster. Sandstone is found in abundance in the neighborhood, while the plaster is burnt and prepared by the natives themselves. Wood is very scarce here, so the dome-shaped roofs are constructed without beams or rafters. There is no need for windows, as the people sit in their courtyards. The interior of the houses seem very clean and when the floor becomes dirty it is easily renovated by a fresh supply of sand.

In this our first village we commenced a series of magic-lantern services—one for boys at sunset, followed later by another for men. They were well attended and the people listened most attentively to the explanations given of the Bible stories.

We came across one or two Shawia men—of that Berber race who live in the "Tell" or mountain district of the north. Their language and customs greatly resemble these of the Kabyles. As the Arabs here can grow no corn, the Shawia men bring it down from their country—a five to seven days' journey, and sell it in the Arab villages.

The great Moslem fête of "Aid Kebir" took place while we were in the village. As we were talking to a Jewish rabbi we heard a great noise of drums beating and people singing and suddenly a clamoring crowd came surging along through the narrow streets to the market-place. The procession was headed by a marabout about thirty-five years of age who was followed by some students and other people of the village. He stopped in the market-place and a great hush fell upon the multitude as the marabout gave his blessing on their fête after which the crowd repeated "Amin, Amin."

In many of the places visited we were particularly struck with the fact that a number of the men and boys had the mark of the cross tattooed on their foreheads. One young man told us that this was often done to those who suffered from bad eyes. And another informed us that parents often mark their elder children in this way to save the younger ones from an early grave. It has been supposed, however, that this custom dates from early Christian days or from the time of the Crusaders. In one village, on the outer wall, the sign of the Cross in plaster, standing some six feet high, was most distinctly outlined. We visited a small carpet factory in an Arab house. The carpets, very thick and prettily designed, are made of camel's hair and wool. The natives use these to sleep on—for bedsteads and couches are conspicuous by their absence.

Our tour did not end as auspiciously as it began. We journeyed northward, leaving the sand behind us, and came nearer to the mountains. Then we turned westward and traveled over a country with a clay soil which from time to time had evidently been plowed. During these days we had bright sunshine interspersed with rain and traveling was comparatively easy so long as the ground was fairly dry. But one night it rained heavily. On we went, however, until progress became almost impossible, for the country was covered with mud and the camels were continually slipping. While we made for the nearest village the rain continued to pour down and as we were obliged to cross a stream which could not be traversed with heavy luggage one of the camels was unloaded and the heavy cases carried across the thick mud. At last we reached the village, but it was impossible to pitch our tent because of the mud, and no house could be hired.

We went to the house of the sheik and were told that he was ill and could not see us. After some palaver the people agreed to let us into the stable with the sheep and cattle. A few men came in and we asked them to sell us oats for the camels and wood for a fire, and promised to pay any one who would bring us good drinking water. Water and wood they refused and only offered us oats at an exorbitant price. After awhile Mohammed managed to secure a small jug of water and a few sticks.

Next day it was raining and our prospects appeared anything but pleasant. Our provisions were running extremely short, and we had very little money left. On the second day the sun shone for a few minutes and our hopes revived; but at night it rained again. Our Arab suggested that we should go south, making a long detour of six or seven days' journey, and thus reach Biskra. There were drawbacks to this plan, too, as there were rivers to cross, any one of which might bar our passage. Moreover that route led us out of the way of any villages where we could find provisions. The day following brought us cold, showery weather. However, we decided at all costs to push on to the next village, where the Kaid lived. But when we had packed our luggage Mohammed refused to start, for he was afraid that the camels would slip in the mud and break their legs. To help over this difficulty, we hired a mule at a high price to carry the heavy baggage, and engaged two men to come with us in case of an accident or a difficult passage. Up to the last moment Mohammed hesitated, but eventually we started on a ten to twelve mile walk in the mud. This took us nearly five hours. On the road the sun shone out, and when we reached our destination we obtained all we needed for ourselves and the camels, and found a lodging.

With a brisk wind the ground dried a little, and after two days' forced marches of from twenty-five to thirty miles each day, we reached Biskra, and there took the train to Algiers.

Household Hints

Improved methods, tending toward a greater economy of work, have come into practice with the increased knowledge of labor-saving devices now on the market.

Paraffin may be used to advantage for many more purposes than is generally known. While the average housewife uses paraffin for sealing jars of preserves, and has found it the best method, few know of its remarkable cleansing properties for laundry purposes, when combined with the ordinary use of soap. The following are the simple directions for its use:

Prepare the clothes as usual in the boiler with soap and water. Into this put two tablespoonsful of melted paraffin and allow all to boil together the usual length of time. The only attention necessary during the boiling process is to turn over the clothes now and again. Rubbing is unnecessary. Many washing-powders facilitate washing because of the injurious alkalis they contain, but do not eliminate the usual need of the wash-board.

The appearance of a warmed-over roast or a half chicken may be greatly improved by filling in the hollows with mashed potato, then browning in the oven with the meat.

A pretty and economical idea for hair ribbons is to make them of the same material as the children's wash-dresses. There is no additional cost, as strips sufficient for this purpose are generally left over, and may be neatly hemmed along the lengthwise edges and the ends either hemstitched or fringed. The ribbons may be put in the laundry along with the dresses they match, and so kept clean and fresh.

When making a wash dress for a "grown up," allow enough material for a couple of kitchen aprons to match. This will give an added neat and attractive appearance to the working house gown.

Ordinary noises are often annoying to an invalid, even the ticking of a clock is sometimes more than the sensitive nerves can bear. Yet, when there is no time-piece near, a sense of loneliness is felt. A trained nurse discovered that by placing a thin glass tumbler over a watch, the ticking was almost inaudible, even when very close to the bedside.

Use Your Xmas Money to Buy this Bargain
Look at this Beautiful Belgian Lynx Set for $9.00

BECAUSE Christian Herald readers are among our best customers we can afford to sell them this set of Belgian Lynx cheaper than they have ever been offered before.
We will sell you his set of furs subject to our ironclad guarantee of money back without question or quibble if goods are not perfectly satisfactory.
Separate Muff, ... $5
Separate Scarf, .. $5
Being the largest Mail Order Fur House in the world, we can sell cheaper than other firms — if you have seen a set of Furs that you want, get our price before buying elsewhere.
701 Write for beautifully illustrated Catalog of Furs, sent you Free of Charge. Write today. Don't put it off.
ALASKA FUR CO., Manufacturing Furriers, Estab. 1876
1217 D Market Street, Philadelphia, Pa.
Reference: Bank of Commerce, 624 Chestnut St., Philadelphia

WHY N. Y. R. O. 6% BONDS ARE THE BEST
Because principal is assured by larger percentage of Real Estate equity than any other company offering similar securities
Because this company has never deviated from the principle of purchasing for permanent ownership only, never for speculation
Because our business has been successful from the start and has a continuous interest record for 15 years, with increasing strength and security to Bondholders and increasing profit and dividends to Stockholders.
Because the Company is managed by experienced, capable, conservative men who have spent their entire careers in the study of realty values.
10-Year Bonds, $100 each, paying 6 per cent. semi-annually by check, can be bought outright or in annual payments over a period of years.
Assets $3,150,000. Over $1,000,000 repaid investors to date. Booklet 14 fully describes our business. Sent on request.
New York Realty Owners
489 Fifth Avenue, NEW YORK CIT

TYPEWRITERS GIVEN AWA
The Emerson Typewriter Co. of Woodstock, Il have recently given away over 400 of the highest grad wholly visible typewriters made in the world. Th have gone into every state and territory in the Uni States. There may be some in your town. They a giving them away everywhere to men and wome boys and girls, over eighteen years of age, on surpri ingly liberal conditions.
If you can make any use of $100.00 typewriter, pr viding it did not cost you ever one cent, then in letter or on a postal card addressed to "Frank Wilder, President, Woodstock, Ill.," simply sa "Mail me all your Free Offers," and by retu mail you will receive their Free Offers, the resu of over 400 who have just received typewriters fr and you will learn how you can get one of the typewriters free right away.

I Was Deaf 25 Years
NOW I HEAR WHISPERS

with this artificial EAR DRUM in my ears. I never feel them—they are perfectly comfortable, and no one sees them. I will tell you the true story, how I got deaf and how I made myself hear.
Medicated Ear Drums Pat. Nov. 3, 1908 No. 902,865
Artificial Ear Drum Company
Address GEO. P. WAY, Manager
G. P. WAY 2 Adelaide Street, Detroit, Mich

10,000 CHURCHES USE THE THOMAS INDIVIDUAL COMMUNION SERVICE
Send for list of churches and Special Introductory Offer. Outfitsent for trial
THOMAS COMMUNION SERVICE CO., Box 125, Lima, Ohio

PATENTS How to GET Every Dollar Your Invention is Worth
Send 8 cents stamps for new 128 page book of Valuable Information. Interest to Inventors.
R. S. & A. B. LACEY, Dept. 36 Washington, D.

CHURCH BELLS SCHOOL
Ask for Catalogue and Special Donation Plan No. 44
THE C. S. BELL CO. Est. 1858 Hillsboro, Ohio

Christian Herald

COPYRIGHT, 1911, BY THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

$1.50 a Year—5c. a Copy
Published 52 Times a Year

New York—Christmas Issue—Dec. 6, 1911

Vol. 34—No. 49
Offices: Bible House, New York

OUR · MAIL · BAG

Questions and Answers

M. O. D., Clarksburg, W. Va. 1. Were musical instruments used in the Jewish worship by the command of the Lord, and if so, why did he condemn it in Amos 5: 23? When it says, "For so was the command of the Lord" in II. Chron. 29: 22, are we to understand that the Lord commanded the music to be used, or that he commanded the people to obey the king? 2. How do you reconcile the prophet Nathan (II. Chron. 29: 25) and the prophet Amos 5: 23 and 6: 5?

In the golden age of Hebrew music—the period covered by the reign of David and Solomon—the temple was a great school of vocal and instrumental music, all consecrated to the worship of Jehovah. The Psalms, as we know them to-day, were merely a portion of the great Jewish hymnal. There were many instruments and numerous choirs with a variety of able leaders and conductors. Whether this vast musical system of worship was a plan of David's own or was the result of divine inspiration is not specifically stated, but it was the king's purpose to honor God in his temple with magnificent services of praise, and there is no reason to doubt that it was acceptable. See I. Chron. 25th chapter. At the time of which Amos wrote, the nation had drifted into sin. Their services were no longer accepted of God and the prophet accused them of hypocrisy in their songs, their prayers and their offerings. The passage in II. Chron. 29: 25 (from which you have omitted three very essential words "by his prophets") indicates that the prophets wrote under inspiration, interpreting the divine will to the people. If we remember the totally different conditions that prevailed in Amos' time, the two passages are seen not to be in any sense conflicting.

Mrs. G. D., Connellsville, Pa. What are the "seven deadly sins"?

As defined by the Roman Church, they are: Pride, anger, envy, sloth, lust, covetousness and gluttony. We cannot answer the other question in your letter.

G. E. H., Jersey City, N. J. Kindly explain (1) Acts 3: 19-21; (2) Gal. 3: 29, "What promise is this," made to Abraham, "that the Church is to be heirs of." (3) Ps. 31: 17. (4) Ps. 146: 3, 4. (5) Ps. 49: 14.

(1) The more accurate translation is given in the Revised Version: "That so there may come seasons of refreshing from the presence of the Lord, and that he may send the Christ," etc. The "refreshing" is to be preparatory, but it is not quite clear whether the time of "restitution" and of the "sending" of Jesus are to be successive or contemporaneous events. (2) As Christ is "Abraham's seed," so the Galatians, who were mostly aliens (not Jews), to whom Paul spoke, if they were "one in Christ" were therefore Abraham's seed also, which was tantamount to saying that they were his full heirs in a spiritual if not a legal sense. The promise is set forth in Gen. 12: 2, 3, also 22: 17 and 26: 3, 4. (3) The passage simply means that not the righteous, who have called upon God, but the wicked who have not called, in just retribution will be consigned in shame to the silence, where they will have no opportunity to do so. Now, they slander God, but soon they will be in "the noiseless region of the dead." (4) The Jews had foolishly trusted Pharaoh and other heathen princes to aid them against their enemies, and had now to learn that such help was unstable, while God-given help is enduring. (5) The ungodly are powerless to defeat the will or defer the purposes of God. Though they seem to triumph for a moment, their strength and influence are buried with them and they are quickly forgotten.

H. B. C., Springdale, Ark. 1. Christ said (Matt. 19: 23) "that a rich man shall hardly enter into the kingdom of heaven." What is the lesson conveyed? 2. St. Paul said (I. Cor. 6: 10) that extortioners shall not inherit the kingdom of God. Where does justice end and extortion begin? What is extortion?

1. To rightly understand the full significance of the passage, read Luke 18: 24-27. It may be liberally interpreted: "How hard it is for those who trust in riches to enter! Unless this idolatrous trust and confidence in mere wealth is overceme they cannot enter" except by a miracle of divine grace, which changes the heart. Jesus found no fault with the young man because of his riches, since wealth, and the power and influence it brings, may be made a means of great blessing if used in the right spirit as a trust committed to our stewardship. He found, however, that his wealth was to him of greater moment than his eternal welfare, since he could not grasp the great opportunity offered him by the Master. 2. The passage in I. Cor. also has a bearing upon the love of wealth and the hard and merciless means that are sometimes adopted to acquire it. Where extortion begins may be defined by statute, but it must really be determined by the conscience, since what is a fair return in one case may be a cruel extortion in another. We must carry the Christ idea into our business relations, and deal not only justly but generously and humanely, never making gain of another's necessity.

A Christmas Letter Box

An Extraordinary Big Value Offer

Given Free as a Premium to Old Subscribers for Securing One NEW Subscription to The Christian Herald at $1.50. Or Sent with One Renewal for $2.00

10 Christmas and New Year Letters with Envelopes
5 Christmas Cards
5 Christmas Tags
10 Poinsettia Tags
25 Poinsettia Seals
50 Christmas Santa Claus Seals

105 Pieces, retail value $1.25

The two, three and four color Christmas letters in this box retail at 10 cents and upwards each. We bought the remainder of the season's production of a large concern at less than cost of manufacture. The letters are extremely handsome and perfect examples of printing and embossing, with each verse or sentiment decorated in gold or bronze. Each letter is different and each is supplied with an envelope for mailing. With the letters in a box come cards, tags and seals as enumerated above. All printed and embossed in full color. The supply is limited, so do not delay to order at once. Postage 10 cents extra. Address:

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York City

Mrs. M. D. S., Langhorne, Pa. Was Paul a notable success as a public speaker?

That he was a remarkably effective speaker—clear, forcible, logical and eloquent—is sufficiently proved by the epistles, which are among the best examples in existence of spiritual literature. He was a man of excellent education, with the logical training of a Pharisee, and his culture and ripe experience, combined with his zeal for Christianity, made him the greatest of the apostles. King Agrippa paid him the tribute of acknowledging his great learning and his persuasive address. He was educated partly in Tarsus (then a noted seat of learning) and partly in Jerusalem, drinking in not only from his teachers, but by his travels, all the wisdom of the Greeks of that day. He is believed to have known Greek and Latin and to have studied the pagan philosophies of his time. It is evident that he had been a student of rhetoric, and he was even able to speak extemporaneously in Greek (Acts 21: 37; 17: 22) and probably also in Latin. We can only conjecture concerning the likelihood of his having engaged prior to his conversion in the controversial encounters of the day. He had a philosophical mind, and on becoming convinced of the truth of Christianity made the best use of his fine intellectual endowment for the advancement of the Gospel.

A. T. G., Bridgeport, Conn. Should a man's religion control all his actions, even in politics?

Certainly, we should live our religion. It should influence us in all our activities, and if we are really sincere, it will do so. This includes politics as well as business and social life. As to your other questions, we would say that even assuming, as many claim, that there are evils in all the political parties, our influence, exerted in a right and manly way, may help to correct some of those evils. Jesus told his disciples that he did not pray that they be taken out of the world, but that they might be kept "unspotted from the world." The world has never been moved forward or helped by men who retired from the fight because they preferred moral seclusion to the warfare of a Christian soldier, but rather by those who have gone into the thick of the conflict and made their influence felt in the outcome. If all the good people were to flock away by themselves there would be little spiritual progress and no missionary work at all.

Reader, Wahalak, Miss. Please explain Prov. 26: 3.

It is an ancient proverb which has its parallel in several languages. The Chaldaic, Syriac and Arabic have it "a spur for the ass," while the Hebrew has the word netheg (bridle). The whole passage means that as horse and ass at times need the whip or the spur to control and direct them, so the fool (the hot-headed, thoughtless person) needs a forcible reminder of authority to check him from rushing into sinful folly. The rod of affliction is frequently such a reminder.

L. S., Hinsdale, N. H. What name did the parents of Jesus Christ give him?

They gave him the name of Jesus, as divinely directed, and no other (Matt. 1: 21), because he was "to save the people from their sins." The older form of the name was Hoshea (saving), which in a later day became Jeshua (deliverance), but all three forms of the name have the same meaning. The conferring of the name "Jesus" was in no sense a human choice, but a divine direction as indicative of his character and mission. On the eighth day he was duly named according to the rites of the Jewish people (see Luke 2: 21).

S. P., Pittsburg, Pa. I have been reading THE CHRISTIAN HERALD sermon on "The Redemption of Rahab." You say, "I have broken every law you ever made and crucified the Son of God afresh." Now, does not the Bible teach us that there is a sin that can never be pardoned? Would there be any use of such a one trying to do good, "taking a false oath"?

We referred this question to Bishop William A. Quayle, the distinguished author of the sermon in question, who writes, in reply: "This 'sin unto death' is not a matter we can locate, and it is very safe to say that so long as any one wants to come to God, the way is open. He stands at the door and knocks at every such heart."

G. A. C., Seattle, Wash. My little son asked me where all the water went after the flood of Noah's time.

There are several answers possible to this question. The obvious one would be that much of the immense volume of water went off in vapor, forming clouds. Some speculative writers on the subject have suggested the reverse, however, holding that in antediluvian days the earth, being yet insufficiently cooled, was steeped in vapor, that mists took the place of rain (see Gen. 2: 5, 6) and that the skies and moon, sun and stars were invisible from our planet. At the appointed time, the whole mass of vapor was precipitated in the form of rain, causing the flood, which only subsided when a great part of the water had found its way into the heart of the soil and into subterranean passages (see Ps. 104: 6-8), while the surface liquid mass was still further reduced by solar evaporation. Other writers have conjectured that the flood may have been caused by a shifting of the earth's axis, and that the waters receded when equilibrium was restored. We give these views for what they are worth. Many volumes have been written on the subject.

Miscellaneous

R. F., Troy, O. There is no scientific basis for such a conclusion. See item in Christian Herald Almanac for 1912.

Mary E. Peecher, Griggsville, Ill., would be thankful to any reader who can send her the address of her relative, O. C. Moore, formerly of San Francisco.

B. B. J., Dubuque, Ia. A Mohammedan tradition, which is recalled annually by the Moslem imams (priests) who conduct the service to pilgrims to Mount Arefat, near Mecca, is to the effect that Adam and Eve, immediately after their expulsion from Eden, were separated from each other in the storm and darkness. After a hundred years of wandering, they met again on the summit of Arefat and instantly recognized each other. An obelisk marks the site of their reunion. This is one of the many strange traditions or legends interwoven with the religion of the Prophet.

NEW YORK, DECEMBER 6, 1911

THE · CHRISTIAN · HERALD

A WEEKLY ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER FOR THE HOME

George V.
King of Great Britain, Emperor of India

The Magnificence of the Orient in the Durbar Procession

Queen Mary
Great Britain, Empress of India

DELHI AND THE FIRST IMPERIAL DURBAR

By CHARLES M. PEPPER

The Kutub Minar, Delhi

THE voyage of King George and Queen Mary of Great Britain to India to take part in the gorgeous spectacle of the coming Coronation Durbar interests the whole world. Opinions may differ whether or not the great expenditure which the Coronation Durbar at Delhi will cost is really necessary in order to sustain the prestige of the British power in India. Some Englishmen think not; some think otherwise. But reasons of state prevail and British statesmen charged with the interests of the empire are responsible for the royal voyage.

The Durbar is usually described as the most imposing Oriental spectacle that Western eyes ever witness. Picturesque it certainly is. The wonderfully caparisoned elephants are possibly the most entertaining feature, although to me the people are always more interesting.

Some years ago, coming down from Kashmir, I stopped at Delhi to learn for myself something of its thirty centuries of tradition, if not of verified history. The records of the Buddhists, of various Hindu sects, of the Mohammedans, and now of Christian civilization are there. The annals are blood-stained, but possibly no more so than any other part of India.

It is, after all, modern Delhi that is described in the guide books as the tourists' delight. Types of all India are found there. I did what tourists usually do, first climbed the tower of one of the mosques and took a general view of the city. Its many flat roofs reminded me of Spanish civilization and of Havana, although the bulbous domes of the Mohammedan mosques and the clusters of cupolas of the Hindu temples have no counterpart in the architecture of Havana. As everywhere in the Orient the real life of the people is seen in the streets and the bazaars. The leading business street is the Chandni Chauk. The squatting beggars line it, but that is a street setting which one gets used to. The first morning I strolled along the Chandni a Hindu funeral attracted my attention. The swathed corpse on a stretcher was borne on the shoulders of body bearers. It was covered with flowers. Three musicians walked in advance. Eight or ten mourners, running behind them, strewing flower leaves, were conspicuous. I noticed that in passing the Mohammedan mosques the music was silent. After that the chant was resumed with the "tum tum" iteration of the musicians. Some veiled Mohammedan women watched the spectacle as closely as I did.

Delhi is a great mercantile centre and the dealings in cotton fabrics or piece goods are very extensive. This trade is conducted by both Hindu and Mohammedan merchants. In the bazaar are the articles of carved ivory and sandalwood for which Delhi is noted. The bazaar merchants are persistent. The stranger who undertakes to drive along the Chandni finds them apparently throwing themselves in front of his horses in order that he may be forced to stop and avail himself of the opportunity they offer. However, in some way they manage to avoid the horses' hoofs.

The bazaar dealers are said to be the most greedy of any in India on account of their over-charges. But this can be said of the bazaar dealers in any Indian city. It is related that King George, when he made his visit to India as Prince of Wales, became very unpopular among the merchants of Delhi because of his refusal to pay their over-charges. Countless visitors, however, thanked him for his courage.

Continued on page 1246

Nawab Fakhr ool Mook

The Maharajah of Kholapur

The Maharajah of Patiala

Potentates who will Attend the Durbar

The Babe of the Bethlehem Cradle

A Christmas Sermon

By Bishop Wm. A. Quayle*

TEXT: Luke 2—"Ye shall find the Babe wrapped in swaddling clothes lying in a manger. . . . And they came with haste."

IT IS my purpose, by God's help, to take this cluster of purple grapes from the vineyard of God, and squeeze their juices in part into a cup for our hearts to drink this morning.

I have thought a good deal, first and last—being something of a lover of letters—of passages which dare not be omitted from the world's literature, because their loss would be so utter that heartbreak would ensue upon the loss. And my conviction holds now that this passage out of the Gospel of Luke—in which is rehearsed in simple, tender and delicious phrase the birth of a Babe, with such simplicity and poetry, with such chasteness of reserve and daintiness of touch, that it seems as if it might have been written with ink made out of tears, or it might have been written with ink made out of the dawns of morning and the dews of night—is such a passage. I freely say there is no passage in human literature more utterly exquisite, more beautifully human, more graciously divine, more entirely earthly, more absolutely heavenly, than this beautiful story of the birth of Jesus Christ. And I would think it were the bounden duty of everybody that has a heart to read this story at Christmas. All persons who have no hearts are excused from doing large things; but all people who have hearts are in honor bound to their hearts, as the Christmas time comes on, to read everything in the Gospel story touching the Divine advent in the birth of Christ.

The Evangelists' Narration

And the thing that will strike us, as we read these preludatory statements of the Gospel, is that every man said what impressed him the most. The Gospel of Mark begins with the preaching of John and the advent of Christ into work, because Mark was always sweaty with haste and dusty with toil. The beginning of the Gospel of John reaches back through the eternities, to the first morning dawn that ever this human life of ours could look toward. John saw Christ enthroned and glorious. And John looks there and then looks here, looks up, far up, and then down, clear down unto the earth, and sees the advent of the God of the eterntities into time and the coming of heaven's chiefest personality to our earth. Matthew begins the story by the appeal to genealogy, by the appeal to history, that this Babe, lowly born, was yet a Babe of kingly lineage, which he traces back to Abraham, as a Jew might and would; and then he traces it to the lowly Bethlehem house, and says that though He had not the apparel of kingship, yet wise men sought him to worship him. And Luke, who was a Greek and wore a Greek name, and had a fund of science and literature as fine as the historian Thucydides, took up the whole matter from the first and told the story of the prophecy of the birth of John and the prophecy of the birth of Jesus; how John was named before his birth, and how Jesus was named before his birth. And then he tells what I suggest in my humble belief is altogether the sweetest poem that was ever thought out by man and set down by a tender human hand—the Birth of the Christ.

The Wakeful Shepherds

Sometimes I find men and women to whom this Virgin Birth seems superfluous; some to whom it seems incredible; some who do not care to think upon it; but so far as my poor faculties are concerned, it appeals to me, that if anybody has the large perception or understanding, the infinite heart-hunger, the eyes that can look into eternity and not be afraid, they can see that the Virgin Birth is so wholly apt in history, is so wholly worthy of God, is so right a method for the coming of the Christ of the times and the eternities, that we dare not hesitate to receive it and believe it.

And that night, while the shepherds were awake and watching over their sheep—humble men at humble task—an angel came and took the sky for a pulpit and preached his sermon; and he told it with such pungency and force, such directness and poetry, such heavenly-mindedness and such earthly speech that the shepherds did not forget and could not, but committed the whole sermon to heart; and when the sermon was ended, then all the sky was peopled with choiring angels; and the choir sang what the preacher had said. For the preacher had spoken in poetry, and the choir of heaven had set it to music, and the sky was one voice, welcoming the King of Heaven to the Manger and the Cross. Now, that in brief is the story.

Worth While to Watch

When Jesus came to Bethlehem, it was the people who were on the lookout that saw him. It is not a question of how many wonderful things transpire; it is not a question of how many beauties are apparent. The question is, Who watches? All the glory that ever burned along the sky-line of the west is lost to people who don't look. Life is so filled with wonder that nobody can fall into a routine who watches. The street yesterday was very full of people. The crowd was crushing, the tumult of melody in people's hearts was strong and great, reverberant like the sea and psalm-singing like the angels' song. The crowding throng was very great and very glad, but every human life there presented and represented, if we were watching, was a poem. Blessed be all the people who turn Christmas faces to the Christmas places, and take up the tune of the holy, happy Christmas.

It is the watcher who shall see the poetry. It is the singer who shall catch the psalm. The shepherds were out watching. And Bethlehem's town knew not that any King had come, and Bethlehem's village heard not the Baby's cry, and Jerusalem's throng heard not the advent of the chariot of Him whose glory fills eternity with light. They heard not, they saw not; only those saw who stayed awake to watch.

I go through an art gallery and I see the pictures and I look at them hastily, and when people say to me, "What do you think of the gallery?" "Oh," I say, "good pictures; fine, fine!" And then I go to hear somebody talk of pictures one day, and he has raptures over them, and he tells where there were such pictures as glowed with glorious tints, and flamed with morning sun-up, and had the grace and quiet of the evening's coming, and forges in which the coals of iron glowed, and anvils on which the irons seemed to be alive with fire. And when I had heard him through, I was enraptured with his saying and was bound I too would see those pictures. And I went to him after his discourse was ended, and I said, "Where were those pictures you saw?" And he said, "In such a place." And lo! it was the picture gallery through which I had passed and only said in perfunctory fashion that they were good. But the upward face—the upward look! Heaven cannot get at me, if I look at the ground. Morning cannot drench me with its wonder, if I am sodden in sleep. The watcher is such as see. I would God this morning, as we take this holy narrative and hold it up before our faces, we might be led to watch. If we do so with the world, what should we not see? Scan everybody's face, look at everybody's life, see all gospels, watch all mercies, peer into all mysteries; let the earth appear sublime, let the heavens appear, as indeed they are, divine. Now, we watching folk see what is in life—so much of poetry and song, so much praise and service, so much dignity and fidelity. It is worth while to be looking toward the sea what time the sea lifts up its blue rim against the blue rim of the sky. Worth while to be out watching, so that when heaven comes down we shall be there at the welcoming.

When a Child is Born

When the shepherds went at the angels' bidding, they saw a common thing. All they saw, when they went away from the angels' singing, was a Babe in his mother's arms. And if those shepherds were simply folk who had the narrow and dried-out soul, then you know that amongst themselves they said, "What fools we are to have left the singing angels, to have come here to hear the crying of a baby!" But men who sit erect and watch the thing through, and who have enough of the apocalypse of God in their hearts to let God say his larger things in their souls, we know about what they saw. They saw only this: that one new baby had been born among the homes of men. They saw that. Just one baby, and his name was Isaac Newton. Just one baby, and before he died he held gravitation in his hand and held it fast. Just one baby born in a cabin in Kentucky, and when he died the world fumbled at its task and ceased to read and only learned to weep, when Abraham Lincoln fell fast asleep with his uncompleted task in his bleeding hands. Just one baby, born at a preacher's house where there were too many children already, and Samuel Wesley and Susannah had one more to feed, one more baby to love. There are never too many babies at the house of such as have a heart to love. Just one baby at the Epworth town parsonage, and now that he is dead a hundred years and past, men rise at the four corners of the earth and thank God that one more baby came to that crowded parsonage house, and John Wesley was born. One baby at a peasant's home, and the mother leaned over it and blessed it, and the father came and took the little red hand and stooped and kissed it, and Martin Luther had come to town; and nobody cared. And then one day Martin Luther went into the capital that we name Heaven, and all the people thronging its streets gave him welcome and sang a song of Paradise.

The Great Mother-Love

One baby! Beloved, if we might learn one needed thing this morning, might it not be this, that every cradle is holy, that every baby, though laid in manger or in kingly cradle, has around it a glory like trailing clouds of sunrise? No one can guess against to-morrow. There are no slum babies born; there are no princely babies born; there are just God's babies born, and every cradle is an eternity come to town. I tell you that if once we watch the cradle at the manger of Bethlehem, the cradle of a mother's rocking arms, the singing of a mother's lullaby, the chanting of the angels, to stop no more forever, the whisper of a mother's kiss upon a baby's cheek, the rapture of the singing songs, a mother saying only this, "My baby! My baby!"—if we look at that, it might put us in love with every baby's cradle and make us eager to kiss every baby's cheek, and want to help every baby into larger life. To be in love with the Babe of Bethlehem makes us in love with every baby everywhere. You poor black mother! No need to pity her. Why, my heart, she has her baby. It is sweet to her as yours is to you, woman. I remember Margaret Sangster said, in a book I read of hers one time, a thing that I think worthy a thousand volumes—that there is not a rapture known to compare with any mother's rapture over any baby. And the black mother in her dusky arms holds her baby, and the Hottentot mother in her arms holds her baby, and the Korean mother in her arms holds her baby, and you, mother, in your arms hold your baby; and maybe you women know something, therefore, of how big God's heart is, and how lavish God's love is.

The Lesson of the Manger

There are no common folks. If we are poorly neighbored, these folks we thought commonplace, these everyday facts, these birthdays at many folks' houses, these common children at play on common streets—these folks, since Jesus came and lay in yonder manger at Mary's breast, are God's uncommon folks. There is a vast, a sweet equality at cradles. I have ministered first and last at many a house; I have gone to where sorrow had intruded before me; I have gone out with the unspeakable lament of broken hearts sounding in my ears, but I have only seen a woman stretching out her empty, vacant arms and hands for the baby that was and is not, and calling, "Baby! baby! baby!"

O Christ, thy manger is so sweet! O Christ, thy birth hour is so beautiful! O Christ, by thy common coming, like the other common folks, thou hast sanctified birth and forever made human life sublime. Where were you born? No matter, seeing we are all born for the morning light and the Christmas house and the great, sweet to-morrow.

And the angel said, "If you will go and look, you will find a Babe wrapped in swaddling clothes and in a manger," which I would have you remark is this truth, that we found things as God said they were. If we might learn this holy article of trust in God, it is to believe him when he speaks. This Bible is still his voice; what he says is true. They came

Continued on next page

*Bishop Quayle, of Oklahoma City, Okla., is one of the most eloquent leaders of American Methodism.

CHRISTMAS ON THE BOWERY

'TIS the blessed Christmas morning;
All the world is full of cheer.
'Tis the brightest, happiest morning
That can come in all the year.
Thus we tell, in song and story,
As we go our favored way;
Yet through all this Christmas glory,
There is bitter grief to-day.

What is Christmas on the Bowery?
What but bitterness and sin!
What but want and woe and heartache
To the souls of men shut in!
In from all that makes life holy,
In from all that makes it glad;
In with poverty and squalor,
In with all that's vile and bad.

Who will help them back to manhood—
They who now have lost their way?
Who will give to them the message
Of a Saviour born to-day?
Born amid the poor and lowly
With a manger for his bed;
He who through his life so holy
"Had not where to lay his head."

Yet amid the gloom, a lighthouse
Sends a ray so clear and bright;
Through the darkness that surrounds them
Comes that blessed, blessed light.
How that light attracts and draws them
When all else is dark and cold!
Eagerly they turn and hasten
To the shelter of the fold.

If that light is still kept burning,
We must help supply the oil,
We must furnish food and clothing
From the products of our toil.
We must haste and share our comforts
Ere some "mother's boy" goes down—
He who, saved, may one day sparkle,
Brightly sparkle in our crown.

Pittsfield, Me. MRS. MARY B. WINGATE.

The Bethlehem Cradle

Continued from preceding page

and found the Babe at the manger. God's utterances are truths. If we find what God hath said, we shall find what things are true. God is established in his veracity. He cannot equivocate and he will not mislead. He hath said that he was the light of men; he hath said that he was the Bread of Heaven; he hath said that he was the Resurrection and the Life; he hath said that he was the Judge of the quick and the dead; he hath said that we were to dwell with him. He hath said it.

And the manger is empty and the Mary mother hath died; but from Bethlehem's hill and from Bethlehem's empty manger shines the light ineffable, and in the sky hath swelled out the song which sounds in our listening ears this morning: "Christ was born at Bethlehem." The lowly born; the King of the ages; the Lord of the living, the Lover of human kind; he who died for us that we might live to him. O Christmas morning, Christmas morning!

PRAYER: O Lord, we bless thee for this morning. We thank thee we have seen the children coming to the children's Christ. We thank thee that we belong to God. We thank thee that, though we are far from our eternal home, we are turning glad faces thitherward. Keep us along the Christmas road; keep us along the Christward journey; keep us with the heart of a little child and the heart of grown-up women and men combined. Keep us in the Christmas faith and on the Christmas course forever. Amen.

ANVIL SPARKS

..LIE-TAINTED lips cannot be beautiful.

..A SOFT head cannot stand hard knocks.

..TO WALK with God one must keep regular step.

..SOME folks have tenacity only in holding on to trouble.

..DON'T let the cost of your keep be wasted; be worth something.

..DON'T be secretive about the good points you discover in your neighbor.

..THE hand that rocks the cradle is the hand that slaps the divorce court.

..A GOOD grip on yourself ought sometimes to serve to loosen your purse-strings.

A LETTER TO 350,000 Wonder-Workers

WHEN we begin to talk to so many, all at once, it seems a great undertaking; besides, we really want to be very personal; so if you will be kind, and enter into the spirit of our idea with us, we will select out of all the 350,000, or more, a single one—just you.

Isn't it wonderful and inspiring to know that we, each one of us, may be instruments of tremendous power in the world—or rather, not that we may be, but that, as it happens in God's marvelous providence, we are. Not everybody is; but we are—you and I. Every CHRISTIAN HERALD subscriber is a powerful defender of the faith, a stout defender and supporter of the glorious old Gospel. This is true, for one thing, because THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, which, as we have said before, is really a part of you, is the greatest Bible publisher and disseminator in the world, outside of the large Bible societies.

. . .

WHEN we think of power and try to trace it to its first source, we find ourselves always face to face with some expression of God. He is full of power. We can't begin to form even the smallest conception of the extent of his power, nor of the infinite ways in which it is constantly finding expression. We just know that both are limitless, and we know that no power can stay shut up, unless it be imprisoned by a greater power. Of course there is no greater power than God's, so it is impossible to shut up his power and keep it idle. He has provided from the beginning a vast universe in which to give free rein to his mighty power. We look up into the starry heavens—our thoughts travel to distant planets—and we are lost in wonder. Then we come back to our own little earth and we see how God's mighty power surrounds and fills it.

Elijah saw it, one day, alone in a cave, when "a great and strong wind rent the mountains and brake in pieces the rocks"; and then he saw it in the earthquake, and again in the fire. You and I have seen these things. We have seen the ocean lashed to fury; we have seen the lightnings flash in the skies, and have heard the terrific crashes of thunder—"God's artillery." Oh, there are many channels through which God's tremendous power flows, and has been flowing since eternity began.

. . .

BUT all this display of omnipotence could never satisfy God if the one supreme power of his being—the power of love—were to be shut up in his great heart and find no channels through which it could gain an outlet. Such a power as that could not express itself in a mighty wind, rending in pieces the rocks, nor in earthquakes, nor in lightnings, nor in tempestuous seas. It had to find its own peculiar expression; just as a musician could not pour out the soul that is in him by operating a steel riveting machine; he must create sweet harmonies or tender melodies. So God, to satisfy his own need for the expression of his one greatest power, love, created us—men, and women, and little children—His children—in order that the great love that filled his heart to overflowing might find its expression in us, and through us.

Yes, wonderful and sweet as it is that this God-power of love should express itself in us, flooding us with light and joy, filling us with peace and strength, lifting us up, and up, to the very heaven of companionship with him, yet it is far more wonderful, and far more joyous and ennobling, that this miracle-working God-power of love should express itself through us. That means that it actually flows from God's heart through ours into the thirsty, eager lives of other human beings.

. . .

JUST think of the great city of New York, for example, with its crowded millions of men and women and its hundreds of thousands of helpless children. Miles away, up beyond the city, is a great reservoir. It is filled with billions of gallons of water for the daily needs of these crowding millions there in the big city. Suppose there were no channels through which the life-sustaining water could flow? What good would be all the immense supply if it were not brought close to the need? But there are the aqueducts and the pipes! What a splendid thing is an aqueduct when it connects the reservoir and the city—when it serves as the channel through which the great essential blessing of physical life can flow!

You have proven that you are one of these channels by the expression of yourself through the medium of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD during the past year. This paper is constantly translating in some tangible form, for the blessing of needy ones, the love of CHRISTIAN HERALD subscribers. It is constantly helping to adjust the connections, as it were, so that the love and helpfulness flowing through you may be undiminished.

Even if you have not directly contributed money to some particular cause, such as the Bowery Mission, or the Children's Paradise at Mont-Lawn, or the feeding of starving Chinese, still you have been one of the wonder-workers, because you have supported THE CHRISTIAN HERALD itself, and have thus helped to make its direction and execution of these and many similar works successful.

. . .

REMEMBER, you are a vital part of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD just as truly as the paper and the work are a part of you. If you were to drop away from us—if you were to fail to remain with THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Family during the coming year, the paper and the work would be weakened by just the amount of your power. The working of wonders of blessing for humanity through this great channel would be decreased by just the definite and valuable part you now perform.

But you won't drop away! Rather, you will go out and find some other strong heart and bid him or her join you and us for the fellowship and service of 1912. We know not what the special need may be, but we know it is our part to be ready for what call may come. Meanwhile we will cherish and help one another; we will enjoy the rich feast of instruction, and inspiration, and entertainment which the programme of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for the coming year holds out to us; we will correspond, and ask and answer questions; we will provoke one another to good works, as commanded; we will prove ourselves—you, and I, and all of us—to be true yoke-fellows, loyal members of the great CHRISTIAN HERALD Family, and wherever our hand, or our word, or our smile, or our prayer can reach, we will be makers of joy with all our might throughout the year of opportunity, 1912. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

IN THE DARK O' THE YEAR

IN THE dark o' the year,
The little chipping birds hide low,
For their pretty nests are full of snow:
Yet there is good cheer
In the dark o' the year.

In the dark o' the year,
Rose out of the East a wonderful Star,
And wise men followed it from afar,
And a dawn drew near,
In the dark o' the year.

In the dark o' the year,
Rose, after the Star, the Christ, our Sun,
With love and pity for every one;
So Christmas is here,
In the dark o' the year.

KATE UPSON CLARK.

Advice to Preachers

PROFESSOR DAVID SMITH, D.D., an eloquent and learned minister of much experience, being asked by a young pastor how the latter could best conquer his vanity, his emotion and his fatigue, gave this reply, which might very well be studied by preachers generally:

"It is hardly necessary for you to be at so much pains to eradicate your tendency to vanity. Your fellow-students will knock it out of you; and if they leave any residuum, your congregation will deal with it. There is an edifying anecdote of a divinity student who suffered from megacephalism in a pronounced form. Once upon a time he went as 'occasional supply' to a little country church, and ere the commencement of the service he talked loftily to the old beadle about the sort of preaching which he presumed they were accustomed to in that remote parish, and the treat which they would that day enjoy, dwelling much on his happy gift of ex tempore discourse. Ascending the pulpit in due season, he got successfully through 'the preliminaries'; and when he reached the sermon, he read out his text, and then by way of advertising his independence of a manuscript, he ostentatiously closed the Bible and plunged into his discourse. Unfortunately, he 'lost the thread,' and the more he tugged at it, the more tangled did the skein become. He returned to the vestry crestfallen. No man, unless he be a fool, can long retain vanity in the ministry. Remember the comment of Euthymius Zigabenus on St. Luke's story of the Child Jesus among the doctors: 'Let us therefore, who are teachers, fear, recognizing that in our midst is the Christ, attending how we teach.' Preach 'as if the Lord Jesus were standing by your elbow' and you will forget your poor self.

"Emotion is an excellent quality in a preacher, if it be honest—the overflowing of sympathy, affection, and understanding. Indeed, it is essential. It is not preaching at all unless one's heart be stirred by the wonder of the Evangel, and touched by the pathos of life, 'the sense of tears in human things.' A preacher should be manly. Here, too, the sense of humor is a saving grace.

"It seems to me that it is hardly possible to preach without a heavy expenditure of vital energy. It is said of a noted preacher that 'every sermon burnt up a portion of his vital power.' Emerson speaks of that 'terrible earnestness' which 'makes good the ancient superstition of the hunter, that the bullet will hit its mark which is first dipped in the huntsman's blood.' I have heard of a man who boasted that he could preach thrice of a Sunday and 'think nothing of it.' 'Yes,' was the retort, 'and your hearers will think just the same.'"

WHY HE LIKES THE ALMANAC

I have just received your CHRISTIAN HERALD Almanac. I think that you have made a mistake in calling it an almanac, for it is a veritable encyclopedia of knowledge for everybody. One does not have to own a book store to find out points of every-day asking, for everything is right here in a nutshell. In other words, it is like opening a door into a beautiful room where one wants to stay, with its beautiful surroundings. It is a wonderfully helpful book and worth the price of the paper—THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Accept my congratulations for your very beautiful 1912 gift to your readers. R. C. BOWEN,

City Prison, Brooklyn, N. Y. Chaplain.

Christmas Time in the Lower Arctic

Mount Killiner and One of the Outlying Stations Locked in the Snow and Ice of Labrador's Long Winter

By CHRISTIAN SCHMITT
Nain, Labrador

ONE day in midwinter, I had occasion to call an Eskimo, as I wanted to ask him some questions. When he arrived, I was surprised to see him shiver from head to foot and unable to give satisfactory information. This shivering was all the more strange to me, as I knew that the Eskimo did not mind any amount of cold.

Christian Schmitt

I felt anxious on his behalf and asked whether he was unwell; but my anxiety was soon relieved as he related to me that he had been invited by one of his neighbors to a meal of frozen raw seal meat, and having been called straight from the meal, the cold from within and from without made him rather uncomfortable. When we think of the Eskimo and his repast we must not forget that he only has one meal a day. Early in the morning he will go hunting on an empty stomach and will not take food until evening. Then, however, he makes up for any previous loss, and the amount of food consumed is astonishing. Raw frozen seal or walrus meat is esteemed a special delicacy. It is cut into very thin slices, and men, women and children sit around the carcass of one of these animals and the meal is continued until every one is fully satisfied. These meals sometimes last for hours, the men in turn relating their experiences while killing walrus or seal with their harpoons from icepans or the firm ice out near the open sea.

Anxiously Awaiting His Share

One story, which was related to me recently, is worth repeating. An old man had moved with his household (wife and children) from the bay out to a promontory in order to hunt the seal. After he had finished his snow house and had made his people as comfortable as possible he set to work to hunt.

The seals live in the sea in winter under the thick ice by keeping open certain blowholes to which they go at intervals to breathe. A seal may have a number of these holes within the radius of a mile.

While leaving the snow hut one fine morning the old man instructed each of his family to bring a stick with him. Only the old man himself was equipped with a harpoon. Each member of this family took his or her stand at one of these blowholes and whenever a seal pushed its nose up to breathe the person at the hole would give it a knock with the stick. The seal would rush off to another hole to be served in the same manner, but eventually it would reach the place where the old man himself was at watch with his harpoon and he would then kill it.

In winter the turf huts which have bleached, roofless, in the summer rain and sunshine, but which form the Eskimo's warmest winter home, are completely under the snow-drifts and are in consequence very little affected by cold and wind. There is, however, a disadvantage, for after a snowstorm the doors and windows are completely covered in, and the inhabitants often have to dig away a quantity of snow before they can admit daylight.

The Prized Labrador White Turnips

A few days ago we gathered in the produce from our gardens and I am sending you a photo of some Eskimo children with white turnips, which grow best here. True, we endeavor to raise a few other things, but nothing thrives so well as the turnips. The few potatoes we plant have to be covered over with canvas, as the night frosts would nip them even in the middle of summer.

But I want to tell you something about these white turnips. A good many years ago the missionaries in Labrador began to make use of these turnips at Christmas time. Maybe our brethren in their first attempts to grow something on this bleak coast were gladly surprised at the heartiness and the returns this vegetable yielded, and in order to make the most of it, and with an eye to benefiting the Eskimo, they reserved a quantity of these nice large turnips for Christmas. Then on Christmas Eve, during one of the most impressive services of the year, these same turnips were served with a small lighted candle stuck in the middle, and each child in the community, from the infant in arms to the boy or girl of fourteen, received one of them as a Christmas gift.

But kindly permit me to point out to you more fully its practical use, otherwise you will lose much of my story. White turnips are classed at home among the inferior or common fruits of the field, but this is by no means the case here in Labrador. Most of these people of the far North have never seen an apple or an orange or a plum, and as they cannot think of these fruits by comparison, the turnip occupies the highest rung of the ladder in their estimation. You ought to see one of these Eskimo boys or girls bite into a turnip. It is enough to make any one's mouth water. At Christmas I have seen more than once not only the turnip disappear, but the candle also.

An Eskimo Belle of Labrador

We have no intention of discontinuing the turnips at Christmas, and while the people in other parts of the world sit around the fireside and the children play with costly toys, the Eskimo child in Labrador will receive its turnip and its face will brighten into a smile and the joy will be great. With many of them, Christmas is the most joyful time of the year. Some of the little girls have never even seen a doll, and yet I verily believe that the comparative trifles which they receive are more enjoyed than the abundance which one sometimes sees at home.

Roberta Starr's Real Christmas

By SARAH N. McCREERY

ROBERTA STARR toyed with the teaspoon in her empty egg-cup, then pushed it away with a petulant air. "If I cannot have an electric automobile for Christmas, father and mother, I do not really care about anything else. I do not appreciate a lot of little gifts. I want something that really counts." She leaned back in her chair to study the effect the words had on her parents.

Mr. Starr shook his head slowly and smothered a little sigh. "Roberta, you know that your mother and I would do everything in our power to give you happiness, but I have told you before that we cannot afford to buy you an electric automobile this year. We have the large car, and you must be content with that, and Joe is usually at your command to run it. We will give you a much less expensive gift than an electric automobile, but there will be as much love with it."

"Sallie Carr's father has a diamond necklace for her. Jane Clark's bedroom and sitting-room are to be refinished, papered, and fitted up with new furniture. They will be perfectly lovely, and it will cost a small fortune to do it. Why, all my girl friends are to have very expensive gifts, and I do not want them to think that my parents spend less on me than theirs do on them." In her earnestness Roberta had mixed her pronouns.

Mrs. Starr gave a little gasp of surprise at her daughter's last statement. "The amount any gift costs expresses little, Roberta; it is the spirit behind the gift that counts. "For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son," she quoted softly. "We give gifts at Christmas because we want to celebrate God's gift to the world. Love prompted that gift, and love, not money value, should be the standard by which we measure the gifts we give or receive on Christmas—the day we celebrate the gift of a Saviour to a needy world."

"I suppose love should prompt our gifts," Roberta assented half-heartedly, "but I have a list of forty, so I do not have much time to think about that part of it. I remember some girls because they give to me, and I would be ashamed not to exchange. My very best friends make me such fine presents that it takes all my month's allowance and a great deal of scheming to get them something just as nice."

Mr. Starr had taken up his morning paper, but he laid it down again with a serious air. "That spirit is spoiling Christmas," he declared; "the giving because somebody gives us, and the striving to have each gift we make equal in money value to those we receive, whether we can afford it or not. For my part, I wish the only gifts on Christmas would be a note or a card with a helpful message to our friends to let them know we hold them in remembrance on this greatest day of all the year. The thing that pleased me most last year was on the day before Christmas, just before closing time, the men in my factory sent for me. They were all crowded into the lunch room, and John Carlson, my foreman, acted as spokesman. "Mr. Starr," he began, "every man here wishes he could give you a present to-day, but each one has a family dependent upon him, and every penny counts. We bring you no gifts, but we asked you to come down here that we might wish you a very Merry Christmas, and may you have a year rich in prosperity, blessed with abundant health, and full of happiness, both you and your family." There was no money value with that speech, but it affected me so that I could not say a word for some moments, and when I think of it now I always experience a thrill of pleasure, for those men expressed to me the 'good will' Christ brought to earth."

Roberta smiled a superior little smile. "It takes more than that to make me happy, and give me a thrill of pleasure. I like gifts that cost a lot, and I think almost everybody else does too." Then she rose from the table and went up the broad stairway to her room.

An hour and a half later, Roberta came down dressed for the street. "I am going to finish my Christmas shopping," she called to her mother, "so do not wait lunch for me. I may not be back before dinner."

There was a fine snow flying in the air. The cool wind and the exercise brought a flush of rose to Roberta's cheeks as she walked to the station. All the way to the city she was busy with plans of what she should buy, but, now and then, a vexed look crossed her face as she thought of the electric automobile, for she had set her heart upon having it. She hurried all day from one crowded store to another, and it was four o'clock when she took the elevated train for home. Every seat was taken, but there was room for one person with a woman seated near the door. The train had gone some distance before Roberta even glanced at her companion. When she did her glance was arrested by the look of happiness on the woman's face. She looked away in a moment, ashamed of what might seem like a rude stare, but she could not keep her eyes from the face. "Would you tell me why you look so happy?" she asked impulsively. She was always doing impulsive things.

The woman smiled brightly. "I not only look happy, I am happy. It is because I was able to do two extra washings this week and earn some money to buy my children Christmas presents. I managed this way," and she leaned forward in her enthusiasm. "I took the washings home with me and did them at night after the children were in bed. I had a whole dollar and a half to spend!"

"A dollar and a half!" exclaimed Roberta. "What could you buy with a dollar and a half! How many did you have to buy for?"

"I had four children," was the reply. "Grace, the oldest, is ten. She is just wild about sewing, and I have taught her the little I know about it. She wanted a work-box and I got her one. It costs fifty cents. I bought a thirty-five-cent knife for Dick. Jane's doll was thirty-five cents, too, but it was all dressed. I have a little drum and a ball for Freddy, he's the youngest; that took twenty cents more, and the last dime I spent for candy. There won't be any happier children in the whole city to-morrow than my four, when they find their stockings are not empty."

"I never dreamed that anybody could buy presents for four people with a dollar and a half," murmured Roberta, more to herself than to her companion.

The woman looked at Roberta quickly. "Yes, you can. It is not what a thing costs that counts, it is the fact that one is remembered on Christmas. It has been four years since I was able to give the children anything."

"What will you have for your own Christmas?" asked Roberta.

"The pleasure of seeing the children enjoy their things," was the response.

The answer caused Roberta to ponder in silence for a time. "I get off at the next station," she said suddenly. "I think I shall call at your home to-morrow and see how the children liked their gifts. Please give me your name and number."

"Mrs. Emily Craig, 8461½ Fannin Street."

Roberta wrote down the number, then she gathered up her bundles and soon left the train. Contrary to her usual custom, she delivered her packages to her friends on Christmas Eve. Breakfast was an early meal in the Starr household on Christmas morning, and the gifts were opened at the table, so it was only a few minutes after nine o'clock when Roberta announced that she was going on an important errand. "Father and mother, you pay my respects to Aunt and Uncle Gregg if I do not get there to enjoy their good dinner," she requested.

"Why, Roberta, you surely do not mean—" Mrs. Starr started to object.

"Please do not ask me where I am going," interrupted Roberta, "and do not worry a mite about me. I shall be all right, and my errand is a legitimate one. Good-by," and she was gone.

Roberta rode a long distance on the elevated railway before she reached the tenement district on Fannin Street. When she knocked at 8461½, the sound was not heard above the Babel of voices inside, and she knocked again.

"It's the lady herself that I told you about," Mrs. Craig explained when she opened the door, and she turned to the company in the room with a wave of her hand toward Roberta.

Roberta entered, and her first thought was that she had never seen so many children. They filled the first small room, overflowed into the second, and in the kitchen were half a dozen mothers, each with a baby in arms. "Is—is it a party?" she stammered.

"Party? Oh, no, these children all live in the tenements near here. They didn't have any presents, so they came to see what my children got. I want my children to let the other little folks play with their things, but they will not give them up yet," was Mrs. Craig's reply.

Roberta's glance wandered to a far corner of the room, and she could easily pick out Mrs. Craig's children, for Grace was sewing with the precious work-box on her knee; Dick was whittling a stick; Jane hugged the doll in an ecstasy of joy, and Freddy beat his drum loudly. She looked in silence for a few minutes, then she turned to Mrs. Craig. "You say none of these children have had a gift?"

"None of them," was the response.

"I will be back soon," and Roberta disappeared quickly. She searched street after street for stores where she could buy toys, dry goods, and eatables. When she returned to Mrs. Craig's she was followed by two men, and each carried a large sack. She mounted a chair and asked the child nearest to her what she would like from the sack that had just been untied. "A doll," was the answer, and it was placed in the eager hands. The same question was put to every child, and it seemed that all had just what they liked best. The mothers were not

Continued on page 1251

"'A doll,' was the answer, and it was placed in the eager hands"

OUR EDITORIAL FORUM

OTTO KOENIG, President GEO. H. SANDISON, Managing Editor THEODORE WATERS, Secretary

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly by "The Christian Herald," at the Bible House, Fourth Avenue, 8th and 9th Sts., New York City. The officers are: Otto Koenig, President and Treasurer, Bible House, N.Y.City; Geo. H. Sandison, Vice-President, Bible House, N. Y. City; Theodore Waters, Secretary, Bible House, N. Y. City.

Subscription Price, $1.50 a year, in advance.
Remittances should always be made in the safest manner available to the remitter. Register cash remittances.
Foreign Postage.—For each copy to be mailed outside the United States, Canada, and Mexico, add one dollar a year.

Change of Date.—It takes at least two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.
Expiration of Subscription.—The date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription ends.
Change of Address.—It requires three weeks time to make the change. Give both old and new address.

Subscriptions may commence with any issue.
Letters should be addressed, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

Entered at Post Office, New York, as Second-class Matter
Entered as Second-class Matter at the Post Office Department, Ottawa

The Christmas Spirit

CHRISTMAS comes again and believers in every land turn their adoring eyes toward the Bethlehem manger. Every passing year increases the multitude of God's people who celebrate the event which has become recognized as the one central fact in all history, which declared God's infinite love for us in the gift of his Son, whose coming gave light to a world that lay in spiritual darkness and brought it the assurance of divine sympathy and forgiveness. For this reason, Christmas is above all else the festival of kindness, of good will, of brotherly love; the day of all days which changes "old griefs into joys, old quarrels into love." If we would hear in our hearts the songs of the angels, and if we would realize the true Christmas spirit, we must make it a season of reconciliation and forgiveness, of tender remembrances, and of generous, loving recognition of the needs not only of those dependent upon us, but of the poor who are within our reach or influence.

We may be old, but the Christmas joy in our hearts will make us young again. Though poor, we can rejoice in the glorious fact that for our sakes Jesus exchanged the splendor of heaven for the poverty of a stable. Are we rich in material blessings? Then let us pour out our offerings in his name and in thus honoring the Bethlehem Babe let our bounty inspire all those within our reach with the same spirit of grateful adoration. Nor let us forget the children. These little immortals have a special claim upon us at Christmas-time. Forever is childhood honored by the event of that day which has set on it a seal as the day consecrated to all children. The worshiping princes and magi laid their richest gifts at the foot of the Bethlehem cradle. So let us by our loving and generous remembrances make the day memorable to little folks everywhere.

To enter rightly into the spirit of Christmas and to realize its full significance, we must have Christ in our hearts and lives the whole year through. If we walk with him, hold daily familiar counsel with him, and blend our life with his, then we shall better understand, when the natal day comes around, why all heaven and earth should rejoice anew in celebration of God's greatest gift—the Christ-child, the Redeemer of the race.

Look for the Wider Field

ONE of our readers in Des Moines, Ia., who evidently has been "taking notes" of the religious movement of the times, sends us some very pointed questions. His letter says: "As a church member and worker who has a sincere desire for the advancement of practical Christianity as the Master himself taught it, I would respectfully ask: What particular advantage is to be gained from the great number of congresses, conferences, mass-meetings, monster demonstrations and multiplied talk-fests which are now becoming a fashion? They serve to let loose oceans of oratory and give the right-of-way to all kinds of theologians; but I doubt whether they are productive of anything like results adequate to their cost. Church people, who are doing all they can to make the Church effective, haven't the time to attend these big gatherings. They are too busy with the Lord's work elsewhere."

While there may be some truth and common sense in what the writer says, nevertheless we believe that if he attended some of these gatherings, even at a little personal cost and sacrifice of time, he would return to his work with new inspiration and with a broader view of the importance of the great religious movement that is now going on throughout this continent. It is well for the leaders in Christian work to meet together and compare experiences and discuss plans for work on a large scale. We are responsible not only for the tillage of our own little plot of ground, in a spiritual sense, but for the neglected fields at home and abroad, and these can only be reached and made fruitful by combined effort and by large outlay. Every such effort helps to hasten the coming of the Kingdom, and we pray that all the agencies now being used for the spread of the Gospel, in the church and out of it, in business, in social betterment, in missionary enterprise and in the distant fields abroad, may be made abundantly fruitful. In these days of far-reaching Christian effort, we have learned to recognize the fact that not only the unevangelized in our own immediate vicinity, but those remote from us, yet whom we can reach, are our neighbors and that we are responsible before God for their spiritual enlightenment. We should all strive to take the broad view. We should not forget that Jesus, in sending out his disciples, who had up to that time been laboring in a circumscribed area, said "Go ye out into all the world."

Ambassador Straus's Change of View

CONFIDENCE in the power of arbitration treaties to hold governments to the honorable fulfilment of their pledges has been sadly shaken since the opening of the Italo-Turkish War. Our ambassador to Constantinople, Hon. Oscar S. Straus, who has till now been one of the foremost advocates of arbitration, has, in common with many others, undergone a change of view on the subject. He has come to the conclusion that "until a more just sense of international peace is developed, the best upholder of peace is the power to command it"—in other words, that force rules the world still, for good or evil. This, while practical and apparently justified by recent events, is very far removed from the high ideal which peace-lovers hold. Carried to its logical extreme, it would justify the indefinite expansion of national armament by land and sea, in order that, when occasion arose, the stronger powers might act as peacemakers by virtue not of moral suasion but of superior strength. It is the old, barbarous principle of the dominance of force. Thor, the god of war, with his hammer, "Mjolner the Mighty," cannot by any logic be transformed into an angel of peace; nor can overpowering national armament ever represent to the minds of men anything but terrorism, and the heavy burden of oppressive taxation. Mr. Straus, however, makes an effective point when he says that had our government promptly tendered its good offices as peacemaker between Italy and Turkey at the outset, the whole quarrel might have been taken to the Hague Court, where it properly belonged.

The Cost of the Durbar

INDIA'S Durbar, to which the King and Queen are now hastening oversea, will be a series of spectacles of unrivaled magnificence. It will represent an outlay of many millions of dollars, and the richness of the jewels, the splendor of the costumes and the surpassing beauty and costliness of the ceremonial gatherings, we are assured by those who know of the extent and character of the preparations, will eclipse all previous displays. To the Oriental mind, such lavish magnificence will convey a profound impression of the power and greatness of the Emperor-King, as well as of the wealth and influence of the native princes who will be in attendance by the hundred, each resplendent in jewels and surrounded by their brilliant retinues. Some may criticise all this display of wealth as in painful contrast with the poverty that is always in evidence in many parts of India. It should be understood, however, that the government of India in recent years has made very ample provision, through opening large public works in various parts of the country, for affording employment to all who desire, so that the painful and widespread privation witnessed in years of famine need not be repeated. Had this not been the fact, the Durbar spectacle might indeed have been regarded as an anomaly and a sheer waste of money that might be applied to more practical purposes. As it is, the political effect it will produce, it is believed, will justify all the outlay, and India itself will not be the poorer through any added burden of taxation on that account.

Again the "Violent Sisterhood"

FOLLOWING the line of their tactics in previous years, the suffragettes of London have once more taken the law into their own hands. Chagrined at the premier's refusal to pledge the government to an equal suffrage measure, they tried to storm the House of Commons. Failing in this, they began a campaign of window-smashing, which resulted in the arrest of 220 women. Their special points of attack were the windows of the public offices, Liberal headquarters, post office, bank and other concerns, including several newspaper offices. It is charged that the violence was deliberate and that it followed a call for volunteers for "dangerous service." Among the prisoners were a number of ladies prominent in the movement. At Bow Street Court they were sentenced to fines with the alternative of terms of imprisonment ranging from a week to a month. They invariably chose to go to jail. This unfortunate episode, like that of last year, will doubtless be regarded with stern disapproval by friends of the suffrage movement generally. In England, they have drawn the line sharply against the faction which is known as the "Violent Sisterhood." It is recognized by a great majority of the women of Britain that, far from anything being gained by such disorderly demonstrations, the cause is retarded and jeopardized by feminine rowdyism. Efforts to transplant these methods to the United States have signally failed. Should the women of America win the suffrage, it will be on the ground of simple justice—a gallant recognition by the other sex, but not wrung from them through intimidation or spectacular outbursts of the Pankhurst type.

Good and Bad Manners

PROFESSOR ELIOT of Harvard discusses in the Century the topic of good and bad manners in a pleasingly philosophic way, and his observations have a conclusiveness which few will gainsay. Many charming writers have discussed manners; and eminent minds, in the intervals of graver topics, have condescended to give their views on the importance of personal deportment in social and business life. Dr. Eliot's essay deserves to become a classic. Good manners he regards as a fine art, and agreeable intercourse as an accomplishment worth striving for. At the bottom of all bad manners we find selfishness, ignorance, stupidity and lack of consideration for the desires and claims of others. He points out the importance of family and school influence on the manners of the young. He instances the influence on boys of contact with juvenile gangs; the degenerative example of the "smart set" with its selfishness and luxury, the vulgar chatter of the ball field, and the bad manners promoted by our street railway system in packing passengers together. In Christian society, he considers that it is the women who are largely responsible for the condition of manners. Of 740 public schools, 519 reported partial instruction in manners, 155 regular systematic instruction, 50 desultory instruction, and 16 no instruction whatever on the subject. Hence, he concludes that our public schools are contributing to the national stock of good manners. This is reassuring, and it would be an excellent further improvement if the teaching of manners became general in all our institutions of learning.

Contents of this Number

Wednesday, December 6, 1911

	PAGE
Madonna della Sedia. Painting by Raphael	Cover
Our Mail-Bag	1234
Delhi and the Imperial Durbar (Illustrated) By Hon. Charles M. Pepper	1235, 1246
The Babe of the Bethlehem Cradle. Sermon By Bishop Wm. A. Quayle	1236, 1237
A Letter to 350,000 Wonder-Workers	1237
Christmas Time in the Lower Arctic (Illustrated) By Christian Schmitt	1238
Roberta Starr's Real Christmas (Illustrated) By Sarah N. McCreery	1239, 1251
OUR EDITORIAL FORUM	1240
THE BIBLE AND NEWSPAPER (Illustrated)	1241
San Salvador Celebrates (Illustrated)	1242
Brander Cushing's Ambition (Illustrated) By Rev. Charles M. Sheldon	1243
Home Hearths at Christmastide (Illustrated) By Margaret E. Sangster	1244
Our Boys and Girls (Illustrated)	1245
Enjoying What Others Own (Portrait) By Dr. Orison Swett Marden	1247
Buying and Selling Securities	1252
Sunday School Lesson. By Dr. and Mrs. W. F. Crafts	1254
The Land Where They Never Grow Old. Music	1255
John D. Rockefeller Accused	1257
A Well Spent Life. Epworth League Topic	1258
Missions in the West Indies. Christian Endeavor Topic	1259

THE BIBLE AND NEWSPAPER

Conducted by FERDINAND C. IGLEHART, D.D.

Will Deport General Reyes

GENERAL REYES has been arrested at San Antonio on a Federal grand jury indictment charging him and his lieutenants with conspiracy to violate the neutrality laws of the United States, and it is understood at Washington that this is the first step in the programme of the State Department to deport the general and his aids as undesirable aliens. When the State Department became convinced that General Reyes was going to attempt to use Texas as a base for another Mexican revolution, word was sent to the self-exiled Mexican general that he had better move from the frontier or Secretary Knox would have him deported upon his first overt act of a revolutionary nature. The determination of the Administration to prevent, as far as this country can prevent, another upheaval in Mexico, where the United States has more than a billion dollars of commercial interests at stake, rests on two balance sheets which have been recently struck. One is the casting up of the accounts of the Federal Administration showing that the military mobilization on the Mexican frontier cost more than $2,000,000, besides the expenses of the Department of Justice and the Customs Division in guarding the frontier against neutrality violations by the Maderists, which amounted to another $500,000; another reason for action is that for the nine months ended September, 1911, which include the entire period of the Madero revolution, the foreign commerce between the United States and Mexico fell off to the amount of $9,993,000, of which sum $6,607,000 was decrease of our exports to Mexico and $3,325,000 was decrease of our imports from that country. Thus, American business men lost the sale of more than $6,500,000 worth of goods, and the government, in addition to the expense of mobilizing the troops and guarding the frontier, lost the duty on a large amount of imports that failed to materialize. Customs Collector Sharpe of the El Paso Customs District estimates that the falling off in receipts of his customs district alone will aggregate $200,000. Since the era of Juarez all the civil wars of Mexico have been made possible by the privilege of recruiting, arming and provisioning men under the safe shelter of the American flag. This doubtful conduct on the part of our government is now to stop, as the action against Reyes indicates, and President Madero, chosen chief magistrate of Mexico by an enormous majority of the votes cast at a free election, will be permitted to hold office and carry out his programme with the sympathy and friendship of the United States Government. This new departure of our government is in obedience to the command of the psalmist, applicable to the nation as to the individual:

Depart from evil, and do good; seek peace, and pursue it. (Ps. 34: 14.)

Government Waste-Basket Searchers

One of the most unique of all the government positions at Washington is that of the waste-basket searchers. Mrs. Mary Warren has occupied the position for nearly forty years. Miss Kate Shea has been her associate in the task for the last ten years. It is their duty to search the waste-baskets of the Treasury Department and save from destruction any money or bonds that may have fallen into them by accident. It is said that they have saved the government $1,000,000. Mrs. Warren once found a roll of bills amounting to $10,000. It might not be a bad idea for the government to set a better guard at the "pork barrel" by which tens of millions could be saved to the treasury in one year, as surely as the one million is saved from the waste-basket in two score of years. Every department of human industry is utilizing its waste forces, is stopping the little leakings everywhere, the by-products and little economies in many instances being the measure of profit, the percentage of dividend. The saving of the wastes of life, watching the little opportunities and acts of life, the guarding carefully the waste-baskets, other things being equal, mark the difference between success and failure in the material and spiritual world. The necessity of paying attention to the little economies of life was taught by the Saviour after the prodigality of his miracle when he said:

Gather up the fragments that remain, that nothing be lost. (John 6: 12.)

World-Wide Wireless

Mr. Marconi sent a wireless message to one of the leading New York dailies from the new station at Coltano, near Pisa, Italy, the other day. If the waves went out from Coltano in all directions over the face of the earth and were caught as far west as Nova Scotia, 4,000 miles away, they might have been caught in the east by a wireless tower in the mountains of Tibet. To the south ships off the coast of German Southwest Africa could have taken the same message if they were furnished with the equipment. If Peary had remained at the North Pole, and had the appliance, he could have caught the same message the New York papers got, which might have relieved the monotony of the silence which travelers say so oppresses one in that region. Within the extremes of the North Pole, Tibet, German Southwest Africa, and Nova Scotia, the message might have been taken up anywhere in Europe. It could have been caught in the eastern portion of Brazil. Taking Pisa as the pole of the sphere of the earth, and a point on the opposite side of the earth as a second sending station, and each sending out wireless currents, 16,000 miles of the earth's circumference could be reached. This would leave an untouched belt about 4,000 miles wide outside the influence of the currents. The area of this untouched belt would be about 100,000,000 square miles. Taking the total area of the earth as roughly 200,000,000 square miles, the two stations could cover about half the whole surface of the earth. The message that went out from Coltano to New York covered about one-quarter of the area of the globe. The success of the wireless has brought it into a position to be reckoned with in the practical world of business. With the correction of some of its defects it is not unlikely that within a generation or less one dozen towers placed properly on the earth will enable every person that can afford a reasonable toll to speak to any other person by wireless anywhere on the globe. It is to be hoped that then the waves of air will bear the messages of human intelligence and brotherhood and the story of love from the Infinite Father's heart, as suggested by the universality of his presence and power in the natural world.

The sound goeth out of his mouth. He directeth it under the whole heaven, and his lightning unto the ends of the earth. (Job 37: 2, 3.)

Fra Angelico Picture Stolen

The painting called the "Madonna della Stella," by Fra Angelico, was stolen from the Monastery of San Marco, which has been transformed into a museum, on a recent stormy Sunday night. The painting is a small wooden panel two feet by one, and was placed in the cell occupied by the monk Fra Angelico, when the picture was painted. The Louvre has one of the finest of the same artist's pictures, the "Coronation of the Virgin," and after that masterpiece the "Madonna della Stella" was the best known. The stolen picture is valued at $100,000. Five persons have been arrested. It is believed that the crime had its inception in the international gang of thieves who are thought to have engineered the theft of other valuable paintings, including Leonardo da Vinci's "Mona Lisa," which was taken from the Louvre last August. Stealing money is bad, but the injury is deeper when there is the theft of intellectual or spiritual values. Against thieves of the most sacred mental and spiritual treasures, as against those of material things, the commandment stands:

Thou shalt not steal. (Ex. 20: 15.)

Mrs. Warren (at the right) and Miss Shea, at Work on the Day's Discarded Papers of the Treasury Department

Big Edison Turbine Started

The new giant turbine electrical generator at the Edison Company's waterside station at First Avenue and Thirty-eighth Street, New York, was started recently. A company of distinguished men, engineers and electricians, watched the transfer of power to the turbine from the seven huge reciprocating engines on one side of the long building. The turbine is about 35 feet high and covers 297 square feet of floor space. Its weight is 420 tons, the diameter of the wheels is 13 feet, and each travels at the rate of six miles a minute. Four hundred tons of coal are required each day to keep it going. It has a capacity of 30,000 horsepower — sufficient to supply a current for Albany, Syracuse and Utica together. It has a power stronger than all the generating power of the electrical plants of all the battleships at the great review. Eventually there will be three of these immense turbines at the Edison station. All the forces of nature that we tame and press into service are the energies of an omnipotent God, the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, of which the Scriptures speak in the prayer:

As for the world and the fulness thereof, thou hast founded them. Thou hast a mighty arm; strong is thy hand, and high is thy right hand. (Ps. 89: 11, 13.)

Bible Brought $29,000

The Huth library at Sotheby's was sold at a London auction and a Mazarin Bible brought $29,000. Bernard Quaritch, the bookseller, opened the bidding at $10,000. The next offer was $15,000, and $2,500 raises were bid till Mr. Quaritch took the prize at double the price obtained for it when sold at auction once before. The real value of the book is not in the binding or paper or edition, but in the substance, which is the eternal truth. A Bible that costs only a few pennies has the same power to reform the individual heart and revolutionize the nation as the $29,000 one. And yet to the bookseller the Mazarin Bible was worth what he bid for it or he would not have bought it. If there were but one Bible in the world twenty-nine million dollars would be a cheap price for it. Of the statutes and judgments of the divine law the psalmist has said:

More to be desired are they than gold, yea, than much fine gold: sweeter also than honey and the honey comb. (Ps. 19: 10.)

SAN SALVADOR CELEBRATES

Photos Copyrighted by B. L. Singley

San Salvador's New Post Office

A Tortilla Maker

A View of Barrios Park, San Salvador

DURING the early part of November the city of San Salvador, the capital of the Central American republic that now bears only part of that name, was in gala dress, while representatives from Costa Rica, Honduras, Nicaragua and Guatemala were being entertained at the great demonstration which united all the Central American republics in the celebration of the one hundredth anniversary of Salvador's liberation from the rule of Spain. The government of Salvador made elaborate arrangements for the entertainment of all the official visitors and the delegates from the legal, medical, business, labor and socialistic organizations who were present, even sending a warship to bring the Costa Ricans, Nicaraguans and Hondurans. Special trains were furnished, and hotel and home accommodations were arranged.

From November 7 to November 12 the little Central American city gave itself over with true Latin-American spirit to its celebration. The days were filled with pageants and receptions, banquets, festivals, outdoor sports, and more serious conferences on the future of the Central American republics and their place among the nations. The Salvadorian government was lavish in its expenditure in this effort to make the occasion a basis for the furtherance of cordial relations between the Central American countries. With this object in view the press representatives from all Latin America were accorded the utmost consideration.

President Manuel E. Araujo said during the ceremonies: "Our desire is for a Central American union to indissolubly unite the five republics and make possible successful resistance to aggression, and, by the abolition of dissension, to remove the unfortunate impression in foreign countries respecting Central Americans."

President Araujo expressed his fear that jealousy of national prerogatives will oppose anything except federation of foreign republics at the beginning. He set forth his desire to co-operate with any of the other presidents who may have similar views, and declared his willingness to resign the presidential authority should such a federation become a possibility. Later he called attention to the increased progress of Salvador as manifested by the growth of commerce and the increased production of cotton, coffee, sugar and cocoa.

Salvador has certainly been making rapid strides in commercial and political progress. She is the smallest republic in Central America, being not much larger than the State of Connecticut, but despite her diminutive size she is one of the most stable and up to date. Her population averages more people to the square mile than any other country on either American continent. There are eight times as many as in Uruguay, the most densely populated republic of South America, and three times more than in Cuba, the most densely populated republic of North America.

A Coffee Caravan in Salvador Encamped for the Night

That Salvador should take the lead in political affairs in Central America is not surprising, for she was the first to throw off the yoke of Spain there, as was Venezuela among the nations of the Southern continent. During her struggle for independence one hundred years ago, the little republic had the hearty support of the progressive parties in the neighboring states, but was nevertheless suppressed by the power of Spain, which was at that time still strong in Central America and the northern part of South America. Her provincial congress was driven from place to place, but remained intact and had the sympathy and support of the people. As a last resort it was decided to ask for annexation to the United States of America. Before the commissioners could leave for Washington, however, the other Central American republics were in a ferment of revolution, and Salvador was able to pursue her course as an independent country.

The natives of this the smallest republic are perhaps the most energetic and industrious of Latin-American people. They seem to have more inclination to real work, or at any rate, they accomplish more and seem to gain wealth more rapidly. It is the constant recurrence of earthquakes and political disturbances that keeps the country poor in spite of its wealth of natural resources. Mr. Robert H. Bender, of the Central American Mission, writing recently from the city of San Salvador, says:

"The city of San Salvador has been destroyed by earthquake thirteen times, the last destruction occurring in the year 1873. Since that time it has been rebuilt, and, year by year, it is being improved by the erection of handsome buildings and embellishment of its parks and streets. The sanitary conditions are not perfect as yet; nevertheless there has been a wonderful improvement during the fourteen years I have been laboring here, so much so that yellow fever has been stamped out completely.

"As the Salvadorians have taken the lead in political affairs, they have also taken the lead in the spiritual realm; while the Gospel was not first preached in Central America in Salvador—it being almost the last to receive the Bible and missionary—yet it has made great progress in liberating many of its sons and daughters. Now from Salvador there have gone out native Christians with Bible in hand as Bible colporteurs, to three of the other republics, besides a goodly number who are engaged as pastors and evangelists in this republic.

"Since my return to the field the Lord has blessed our service, so that in nearly every service we have several conversions, and a very large attendance at all of our meetings.

"In closing I want to express my sincere thanks to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD readers for their great help to me in this momentous work."

TOPICS OF INTEREST THROUGHOUT THE WORLD

—GENERAL RAMON CACERES, President of Santo Domingo, was assassinated on November 29 in one of the principal streets of the capital by a group of young men headed by General Luis Tejera, erstwhile governor of San Domingo city. Tejera was shot and killed immediately after the attack by the President's chief of staff. The presidential party was riding along the Boulevard when they were met by a fusillade of shots fired from the corner of a side street. General Caceres fell at the first volley. His guard returned the fire and General Tejera paid with his life the penalty of his crime. Congress met in extraordinary session on November 30 to appoint a president pro tem, and convoke the electoral college which must elect a new president within thirty days.

—THOUGH AN ARMISTICE has been officially declared in China, desultory fighting has been going on, both revolutionists and imperialists being at different times the aggressors. Nanking remained in the hands of the Manchus until late in November, when a concerted attack by the revolutionists put them again in possession of the city. The cable reports state that in revenge for the massacre of their countrymen by the Manchus, they beheaded a great number whom they believed to have been implicated in the atrocities. The revolutionists seemed secure in their possession of the southern and coast cities; the conditions are such, however, that effective control is almost impossible. Premier Yuan Shi Kai affirms his belief that the provinces of Chili and Honan are safe in the hands of the imperialists, though it is generally known that only force of arms keeps them quiet. The fear that the chaotic conditions in the country would result in danger to foreigners, seems to have been well founded, for the most recent dispatches announce the murder of the missionaries at Hsianfu, in the Province of Shensi. Reports of other massacres have been prevalent, but their confirmation is as yet impossible. The British and American consuls have ordered all their countrymen to leave the interior, and take up residence in the ports under foreign protection. The prestige of Yuan Shi Kai seems to be waning rapidly. A long statement in which he appeals to China's friends in America for sympathetic support of a constitutional monarchy in preference to a republican government, makes plain his position, which is severely criticised by the revolutionist faction. It is reported that Dr. Sun Yat Sen is now en route to Shanghai, where he will take an active part in the direction of the political side of the struggle.

Brander Cushing's Ambition

A New Serial Story Written for The Christian Herald

By Charles M. Sheldon.

Author of "In His Steps"

Synopsis of Preceding Chapters

The story opens with a vivid description of the brilliant scene at the launching of the new American battleship Republic, 26,000 tons displacement, at the great navy yard at Dockville. The Secretary of War is present with many other high officials, members of Congress, army and navy officers. The great steel monster of destruction, the most perfect triumph of modern shipbuilding, is the work of Brander Cushing, the famous builder and naval contractor, who is present, with his son Sidney, on the launching platform. The signal is given, the music strikes up and the huge vessel is "christened" in the usual manner by Miss Pax Marston, the beautiful daughter of Rear-Admiral Marston. A tiny bow of ribbons, which was released by the impact of the stroke at the moment the conventional bottle broke on the vessel's bow, flutters past the high launching platform. Several snatch at it, but only one, Sidney Cushing, succeeds in grasping the little bunch of color, though he does so at the risk of losing his balance and dropping a sheer seventy-five feet to the river below. A dozen spectators, seeing his peril, spring to his assistance, but he recovers his poise, although his hat, caught by the wind, is wafted away.

After this adventure, he is introduced to Miss Pax, the Admiral's daughter, who has been an interested witness of his exploit. She questions him about his rescue of a young sailor on the cruiser Del Monte a year before, and although young Cushing modestly evades a direct answer, she is satisfied that the heroic act was his. Miss Marston invites him to call upon them in Washington. Leaving the launching platform, he is proceeding up town to buy a hat to replace his lost one, when a sudden explosion occurs near at hand in the big naval supplies factory of which his father is the principal owner. The whole building seems to burst into flame. Cushing, seeing numbers of women leaping from the windows, at the risk of his life succeeds in saving a number of workers. He is horror-stricken at the terrible tragedy he has witnessed and stunned by the reflection that his own father is responsible for the lack of fire-escapes, which he had been notified by the fire marshal two months before to provide, but had neglected. He goes back, half-dazed, to his father's office. The son tells his father plainly that he remembers the marshal's notification. "Somebody is guilty of the death of those girls," he says. "Who is it?" The next day the papers announce that criminal proceedings are to be instituted against the parties responsible for the disaster, Brander Cushing being mentioned by name. The builder is besieged by reporters, to whom he denies point-blank having received any notice from the marshal. He knows that the prosecution will be in the hands of District Attorney Fleming, his political enemy. Sidney is sent to Washington, to be out of the way while his father faces the coming trouble. Brander Cushing finds the men in his yard antagonistic to himself, regarding him as responsible for the loss of so many lives. Attorney Fleming visits him and an exciting scene follows. Fleming dares Cushing to open his safe and prove that he has not got the notification papers locked up. Cushing orders him out of the office, and he withdraws, after threatening to subpœna Sidney as a witness. In Washington, Sidney renews acquaintance with the Marstons and becomes a strong favorite with the Admiral, his pretty daughter, and his nephew. With the latter he visits the new armor-testing grounds. They note the frightful effects of the new secret explosive, bloxine, the inventor of which, an old man named Winter, is present. The government is considering the purchase of this new agent of destruction.

CHAPTER V—Continued

ALL the great governments are increasing their murdering equipment to be "prepared for war"; that is, prepared to provoke and dare if the opportunity presents itself. The annual expenses for war in England have doubled within the last ten years, and still the stupidity grows. England has 52 battleships, 4 armored cruisers, 16 cruisers, 84 destroyers, 20 submarines, and to these are to be added at once 8 dreadnoughts costing from $12,000,000 to $15,000,000 each and also an "appropriate" number of auxiliaries—armored and unarmored cruisers, torpedo boats, etc.—the additions to the present naval outfit to cost over $300,000,000. France has 21 battleships with an "appropriate" number of auxiliaries, and is building 8 more battleships with auxiliaries. In Germany militarism amounts to even greater madness. In 1872, immediately following a great war, the German empire spent $73,750,000 as direct expense of militarism; in 1898, not including the loss in labor power, the cost of the departments of murder was $337,500,000. Increases in German militarism since 1898 have been startling, and so furious is the spirit of militarism and so insanely is the government already burdened with "war charges," that in the year 1907-8 bonds were sold to the extent of $25,000,000 as part of a special effort to raise an extra fund with which to make additions to her murdering equipment.

There are in the United States 464 colleges, universities and technological schools admitting men only and both men and women; these institutions have in their libraries a total of 12,636,656 volumes, having (according to our Commissioner of Education, in his Report for the year ending June 30, 1908, page 617, a total cost of $16,262,027—which sum is almost equaled by the cost of one first-class modern murdering machine, one dreadnought.*

Admiral Marston met the young men at the gangway. He apologized a little abruptly for the absence of Mrs. Marston, who at the last moment was obliged to remain at home, owing to some unexpected calls. Pax was present, however, suitably chaperoned by the wife of an ordnance officer, to whom, as well as several other ladies, relatives of the officers on board, Sidney and Ed Marston were introduced to those they had not met after the cruiser had left the dock and begun the trip down the river.

Some time during the middle of the afternoon, Sidney and Pax found themselves far enough distant from other members of the party on the cruiser's bridge to talk without being overheard by others.

"Cousin Ed has taken a wonderful liking to you, Mr. Cushing. He has just been telling me that you saved his life again, out at the target station this morning."

"He exaggerates. It was not as bad as that." Sidney related the incident modestly.

"It doesn't lose any even as you tell it. But I see he has remembered the hat. Poor Ed! His memory is a fright, generally. And did you ever hear such a talker? Apparently he pays no attention to what you are saying more than half the time."

"Except that pause after you speak. That denotes the fact that he has been listening, don't you think?"

"Yes. Oh, yes. I love that little habit of Ed's. It's so complimentary, isn't it?"

Silence.

"Isn't it?"

"I was just trying to acquire it myself."

"Why?"

"Because you said you loved it."

"I said I loved it in Cousin Ed."

"But not in any one else?"

"Perhaps. Do you think I ought to buy you a new hat?"

"I can't wear but one at a time."

"And one in the family on the same day is enough?"

"Perhaps. But I don't feel that you owe me anything. I got the ribbons. I would be willing to lose—"

"Yes?"

"To lose several hats to get the ribbons."

The girl looked over at Cushing and slowly said: "You don't mean—"

"Yes," said Cushing at once, studying her face intently for an answering change of expression.

Silence.

"You have not told us—me—any more about those strangely named young women you saved at the fire—"

"Hermosa and Athanasia?"

"Yes. How—what do they look like?"

"I don't know."

"Don't know?"

"I saw their faces through fire and smoke. I have not seen them since."

"Have they not—not come to thank you? Why, I—"

"No. I left home the next morning."

"I suppose Hermosa is a beautiful girl. Of course she is. All girls who do such things are beautiful. And how romantic! What will you say to her when you meet?"

"Don't, please, Miss Marston!" he appealed to her in a mood of fear. Again those bodies, falling, falling! Would they never cease falling?

Pax Marston instantly changed the conversation.

"Oh, I am so glad to see from the papers that your father is not in any way to blame for the factory trouble."

"No, father is not to blame," Sidney said slowly but with some feeling of trouble on his face.

"And wasn't it splendid that he could prove to the public that no notice had ever been served by the fire marshal to put up fire-escapes, and so—"

"What!"

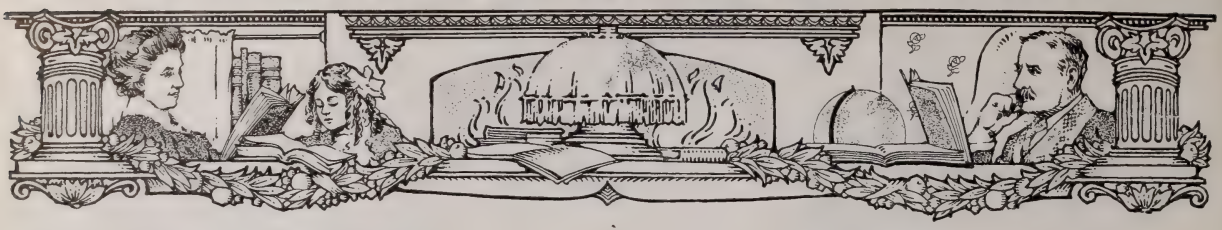
"Why, haven't you read it?"

"No. I promised the pater when I left home I would not try to follow the thing. I knew he could escape criminal charges. And I don't mind saying, ever since then I haven't been able to get away from the picture of those girls falling, falling. You will excuse me. That is why I spoke as I did just now. But what did you say about my father?"

"He testified to the reporters that no notice had been served by the fire marshal. And the papers all say that relieves him from all responsibility for the deaths at the accident. I'm so glad for you."

But Sidney was staring out across the rail and his mind was in a whirl of contradictions as he flung Pax Marston's astonishing statement into the future, and in bewilderment wondered what would come of it all, as the image of his father, stern, upright, and fiercely ambitious over the new warship, rose up in front of him.

His father had sworn that the marshal had never served the notice? Yet he himself had seen it served and his father had confessed it afterwards. This made his father a liar and a perjurer. And how about himself? Would he have to lie and perjure also? As he asked himself this question, Pax Marston's blue eyes were looking at him with more than ordinary interest.



Continued on page 1248

"'Yes,' said Cushing, studying her face intently"

* From War: What For? by Kirkpatrick.

Home Hearths at Christmastide

The Christmas Rush

By MARGARET E. SANGSTER

THE year has its periods of leisure and its periods of haste, its times when we may jog on slowly and take our ease, and its other times when we cannot very well avoid rushing onward with the crowd. There is something very pleasant and stimulating in joining the procession when the drums are beating, the bugles calling and the banners flying. One of the greatest delights of the Christmas season, in anticipation as well as in actual reality, is in the feeling it brings of belonging to a great happy family. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Family meeting around the hearth at Christmas feels the thrill of a common impulse. There are a great many of us, and we are separated into thousands of home groups, but there is not a child hanging up its stocking, a father bringing home bundles for the mother to hide away, a wife planning a surprise for her husband, or a housekeeper filling her larder with delicious cakes and pies, who is not one of the family and aware of the family bond. How many of us there are who are just now engaged in doing precisely the same things, not exactly in the same way, but with the same sweet spirit! There are mothers who have been sitting by the lamplight dressing dolls for little daughters whom they have tucked into bed, and whether the dolls have been the latest importation from Paris, or home-made creations evolved from rags and stuffed with wool, they will equally give a lot of pleasure to the children who receive them.

Don't let us forget in this happy season that we owe it to one another to send our good wishes by letter or by telephone or telegram to the people for whom we care. A Christmas letter is the very best possible Christmas gift, because a letter implies trouble taken and time spent and a personal touch, and once it is dropped into the mail box, it carries, perhaps across a continent or a nation, a vital thought and the warmth of a handclasp. Are you owing any one a letter? Is there any one whom a letter from you would very much please? Is there an absent boy to whom a letter might go and be the word in season to keep him from temptation, or give him strength to resist if the tempter had designs upon him? Remember that the best time to write a letter is not to-morrow, but to-day. Christmas correspondence should not be postponed until the Christmas week, because at that time the mails are overburdened and the resources of the post office department are taxed to the uttermost. That is the best Christmas which includes in its loving and unselfish thought the homeless, destitute and outcast. How are we to reach these poor people who may have fallen among thieves, or, worse still, who by sin and crime have put themselves beyond the pale of decency and self-respect? Sometimes we can reach them best by sending our mite and lending our helping hand to agencies of blessing.

Sometimes we may get hold of an individual and give him a lift. Let Christmas remind us that our Lord came to save the perishing, to call sinners to repentance, that he came as the Great Physician to heal every disease, and bring peace and joy to the world.

COME, OLD SANTA CLAUS

Down from the blue air's glittering dome
Come to the children, old Santa Claus, come!
Eagerly watching, a patient band,
They wait for the monarch of Faerié Land.

Back to that country this Christmas Eve,
Let us all go and "make believe!"
All too soon do we cease to roam
In its sweet enchantments—so, Santa Claus, come!

DAY IN AND DAY OUT

A BRILLIANT professor in an Eastern college was asked by a man who was taking notes for a directory how he earned his living. "I earn it by day labor," replied the professor. His friends were diverted a little later when they saw attached to his name in the city directory the words, "Day laborer." Yet the professor told nothing but the precise truth. He merely did not specify the kind of labor that he did.

The old Latins had a maxim to the effect that to labor is to pray. Surely in the whole world there is nothing so much to be honored as faithful and conscientious labor; the skilled hand bent to the task, the brain directing the muscles, the thoughts of the soul translated and interpreted by actual deeds. President Wayland, in his time one of our greatest American educators, said pithily, "Nothing can stand before days' work." By which he meant to say that it is not the clever spurt, but the persevering effort carried on day in and day out, that tells for success in the end. Each of us should be a day laborer. For the matter of that, few of us are so situated that we do not know the necessity of patient toil.

The doing of one thing over and over makes the specialist in any line. Every housekeeper is aware that when she goes into the kitchen herself, and with her own hands makes delicious bread, cakes and pies, she can tell to a nicety what her results will be. She cannot be sure that her ingredients will not be ruined, her dinner spoiled and her family peace interrupted by the ill-temper consequent upon indigestion, when she delegates her cooking to a kitchenmaid or even a regular cook.

The woman who does her own work sometimes craves our sympathy, realizing as she does that "man works from sun to sun, but woman's work is never done"; still, it is she who is independent, whose home is well ordered, whose table is daintily spread, and who never needs to sit down and bewail waste.

One of our readers, the other day, finding that breakfast was late while the men of the family were watching the clock afraid lest they should lose a train, and the daughter of the house was really anxious to set off in time for school, stepped into her kitchen. She found breakfast only half prepared, the coffee not made, the cereal not started and the biscuits not browned, while the light-hearted maid of the hour was merrily practising a dance, right foot and left foot, humming a little tune to keep time, before the kitchen mirror.

Here was a chance to exercise self-control. The day laborers who belong to the order of this maid exact wages for their inefficiency quite as high as do those who know their work and perform it well, though at what price to the community at large as well as themselves and their employers none will ever be able to tell.

Wherever we labor, in whatever field, let us say to ourselves, "Blessed be drudgery!" It has been said that genius itself is but perseverance and an infinite capacity for taking pains. From the lowest to the highest round of the ladder, the worker who is worthy of his hire does not disdain painstaking labor, giving the best that is in him without stint, day in and day out.

Happy Cozy Corner Days

THE CHRISTMAS PONIES

A True Story by the Aunt in the Cozy Corner

ONCE upon a Merry Christmas time, when we were very little people in our old home in the South, such a great sorrow came to us. I scarcely think we have known a greater since. And yet—but listen.

Uncle Robert, youngest of all our uncles, and the one we littlests loved best, ran away to sea, and the stories and the key to the gateway of our adored Hero Landwent with him. And it was impossible to understand how the days would ever come to an end; for up to that time, you see, he used to sit, every holiday and Sunday evening after dinner, on the old davenport in the living-room telling us stories until bedtime. And oh, such stories!

RED-LETTER DAYS
The Shetland Pony is the dearest pet in the world

I can remember to this day, after twenty years and more, that one after the other was more thrilling than the last; that there never were two alike, and that on the story-telling days Jack and I went about for hours together, often hand in hand, just waiting for the evening when Uncle Robert, true to his promise, would tell us another story. Between whiles, in our own funny way, we lived them over and over. Oh, it was a glorious life! For Jack and I are twins, you see, and in those days what Jack thought I thought, and what I thought Jack thought, which in some measure accounts, perhaps, for the almost phenomenal memory for those stories which we have between us to this day.

"In a Blue Moon"

WE HAD been cautioned not to speak Uncle Robert's name before Grandmother, so we never did. But for three years we had never once tired of wondering, just between ourselves, Was he wrecked on some desert land, with waves booming high on every side, living on damp sea-biscuit, perhaps, and tearing up his only shirt for flag-signals of distress? Maybe he had turned pirate, and at that very moment—who could tell?—perhaps in a scanty ship without an anchor he was tossing in the Dismal Famine Reach, or holding council with bloodthirsty buccaneers in Thieves' Bay, under the lea of some treasure island which invariably figured in his stories.

On this special Christmas Eve, we had recalled for the hundredth time, most likely, the details of that last day and how he had put either hand upon our heads and said, "Good night, kiddies; that is a true story, remember, and some day in a blue moon I shall be bringing you back a flock of deep-sea ponies to prove it."

We laughed un-understandingly as children will, but with that sweet abiding faith which they invariably have in the promises of grown-ups; the ponies became a very important part of our life.

Ponies, ponies, ponies! We thought and dreamed and talked and teased of nothing else but ponies, and now that Christmas was once again so near, it seemed that to-morrow we would surely have them, and as if to make our hopeful sureness doubly sure, when Grandmother came into the nursery to hear our prayers, we asked her if we might not please ask God to tell Santa Claus to bring us the ponies to-morrow. "The ponies Uncle Robert meant to bring us," we insisted, in our eagerness forgetting the warning we had lived by for so long. "Ask God to bring Uncle Robert back again," Grandmother said quite simply, and as she stooped to kiss us we noticed, by the light of the candle which she carried, a tear roll down her thin, pale cheek, and in her fine, sweet way she turned a bit swiftly, perhaps, and left us alone.

A Noisy Guest

THE very next thing we remember is a booming, crashing, tremendous hubbub which burst forth below stairs and awakened us, though it was scarcely daylight. Frozen to our beds with apprehension, we lay quite still and listened, while our hearts and minds, in childlike whimsey and terror, turned quickly to the ponies, and to the prayers which after all we had dared to offer.

"Is God angry?" I whispered. Boom! boom! boom! the din was coming up the stairs. Ding-dong-bell, ding-a-little-ding-dong, ding-a-little-ding-dong, ding-dong bell! "Merry Christmas! Merry Christmas!" it was calling. Out we bounced in our legged nighties, and like wild Indians we jumped and bobbed about; we sprang up and down and clapped our hands for joy. "Merry Christmas! Merry Christmas!" called the hubbub at the door. "It is Santa Claus!" screamed Jack; "he sometimes comes that way." "Do you think he is bringing our ponies?" I whispered in an agony of hope, springing into bed, springing out again, and tugging at Jack, who tugged and yanked and jerked at the door, which in his excitement he had locked. Then I remember we just screamed with all our might and main almost distractedly.

Grandmother

IN FAR less time than it takes to tell of it every door in the big upper hall was open, and there for the smallest fraction of a moment we all stood—aunties, uncles, Christmas guests and servants from the upper floor—like images of mute surprise. All except Grandmother, whose door was still unopened.

"Uncle Robert! Uncle Robert! We were the first to greet him," we screamed as he put down the great bronze English dinner bells which never were used, and gathered us up in armfuls, while we jumped and wriggled and screamed and kissed like things possessed, until Grandmother, dainty and sweet in her dressing-gown and soft frilled cap with a velvet ribbon, opened her door, oh, so gently, and gliding forth like some sweet spirit in a fairy tale, brushed us aside with her fine sensitive hands. "Robert, Robert!" she cried, almost breathless, and slipped into his great strong arms, feasting her hungry eyes, either hand upon his shoulders, until he crushed her to him in one long, sweet embrace. We others were very quiet then until with the fresh familiar voice that we remembered so well, Uncle Robert reminded her. "Oh, mother mine, not that. No tears to-day!" he said, stooping to pat Jeff, his favorite collie. "Come, it is a Merry Christmas we must be having. Hurry up, twinsies; hurry up, everybody; come, I have toys and trinkets and gewgaws enough from all the corners of the earth to trim out a hundred Christmas trees. "The ponies, the ponies!" we insisted; but he only hurried us off to get dressed.

The Bengal Tiger Kitten

"GOD moves in a mysterious way his wonders to perform." This is what Grandma said to us that Christmas night when she kissed us and heard our prayers.

"But what of the Christmas ponies?" I hear my little readers ask. Well, listen, dears, and you shall hear. You see, it was like this: When Uncle Robert nestled the Bengal kitten on the sofa beside her and said, "I brought him from India, mother. His name is Pompey. He is so gentle you will learn to love him, indeed you will, if you will only allow him to stay," Grandmother was obdurate. "It is dangerous for the children," she said, and would not change her mind. Uncle Robert only looked disappointed and planned that we should go with him to the big Special Christmas Day Circus that afternoon, where the tiger kitten was exchanged for one small monkey, fifty dollars in gold and two trained Shetland ponies, Lady Constance and Rob Roy, who at six and nine years measured respectively thirty-eight and forty inches high. The gold he counted into Grandma's lap, the monkey he presented to Mammy Dorcas, and, by the way, Jocko is living yet, a healthy and happy monkey, though Mammy Dorcas has long since gone where all good negroes go. The ponies were for us, our dreams had come true, our prayer was answered, and after that all our little girl and boyhood days were red-letter days.

Take My Advice

IF ANY boy or girl who reads this little story is wanting a Shetland pony, take my advice and never give up, but keep right on dreaming and hoping and praying and working for it; bend every effort toward it. You are almost sure to be repaid, and I for one have a great faith that if you really want a Shetland pony hard enough, the way Jack and I wanted ours, then by one way or other you will get one.

The Shetland pony is the dearest pet in the world. For gentleness, patience, endurance, the Sheltie is unequaled. I know from experience that it is exceedingly easy to train them to do all sorts of pretty tricks; they will leap through hoops; they will "hobby over the bar" and "hobby back again." They will gallop, run, pace, canter, at a bridle

Continued on page 1256

"Better than A Domestic Science Course"

A College Girl's Compliment to Diamond Dyes

"All my Domestic Science gave me nothing as helpful towards real household economy as the Diamond Dyes Book of Directions and Diamond Dyes." So wrote Miss Martha Williams, a college girl of Boston.

You will appreciate exactly what Miss Williams means if you have ever tried Diamond Dyes — the money-saving beautifiers of home and wardrobe.

Diamond Dyes

There are two classes of Diamond Dyes —one for Wool or Silk, the other for Cotton, Linen, or Mixed Goods. Diamond Dyes for Wool or Silk now come in Blue envelopes. And, as heretofore, those for Cotton, Linen, or Mixed Goods are in White envelopes.

Here's the Truth About Dyes for Home Use

Our experience of over thirty years has proven that no one dye will successfully color every fabric.

There are two classes of fabrics—animal fibre fabrics, and vegetable fibre fabrics:

Wool and Silk are animal fibre fabrics. Cotton and Linen are vegetable fibre fabrics. "Union" or "Mixed" goods are 60% to 80% Cotton—so must be treated as vegetable fibre fabrics.

Vegetable fibres require one class of dye and animal fibres another and radically different class of dye. As proof—we call attention to the fact that manufacturers of woolen goods use one class of dye, while manufacturers of cotton goods use an entirely different class of dye.

Do not be Deceived

For these reasons we manufacture one class of Diamond Dyes for coloring Cotton, Linen, or Mixed Goods, and another class of Diamond Dyes for coloring Wool or Silk, so that you may obtain the very best results on EVERY fabric.

Remember: To get the best possible results in coloring Cotton, Linen, or Mixed Goods, use the Diamond Dyes manufactured especially for Cotton, Linen, or Mixed Goods.

AND REMEMBER: To get the best possible results in coloring Wool or Silk, use the Diamond Dyes manufactured especially for Wool and Silk.

Diamond Dyes are sold at the uniform price of 10c per package.

Valuable Books and Samples Free

Send us your dealer's name and address—tell us whether or not he sells Diamond Dyes. We will then send you that famous book of helps, the Diamond Dye Annual, a copy of the Direction Book, and 36 samples of Dyed Cloth—Free.

WELLS & RICHARDSON CO., BURLINGTON, VT.

Delhi and the Imperial Durbar

Continued from page 1235

After one has mingled in the streets and seen the people, he may better enjoy some of the architectural sights. There is the Jain temple, in which all the architectural peculiarities of this Hindu sect are exhibited. The ivory-canopied Buddha in the interior is perhaps the most notable feature of this temple. The morning I was there the altar was strewn with flowers and sweetmeats left by devout Hindu ladies, returning from their bath in the river Jumna.

A visit is sure to be made to the Musjid Mosque, because its dark streaked marble domes are among the most conspicuous objects of Delhi. The memories of the Moghuls and their fourteenth century conquest are centred in the Musjid Mosque. The day I was there there was a vast crowd of worshipers in front. Within are the relics of Mohammed and what are claimed to be original manuscripts of the Koran. The Mohammedan priests at this mosque were the most persistent in demanding "bakshish" or tips of any that I met with.

The glory of Delhi is declared to be the Kutub Minar. It is some distance out from the city. The height is about half that of the Washington Monument. The tower seems to be a leaning one, although not quite like that of Pisa.

King George and Queen Mary have set sail from England for India on the steamship Medina to attend the Durbar. This will be the first occasion in history on which a British sovereign has ever set foot in England's Eastern empire, although several princes have made the journey before their accession to the throne. The Medina, which sailed from Portsmouth, is sumptuously equipped for the royal voyage. She is a splendid new vessel. The special cabins occupied by the royal party are equipped with swinging beds for use in stormy weather, and every precaution has been taken to secure the highest degree of comfort and to minimize the possibility of seasickness. The royal entourage is a large and distinguished one. The customary rites will be observed when the steamer "crosses the line," and King Neptune and his court will hold carnival. Provision has been made for deck cricket and other games, and there will be a round of concerts, vocal and instrumental, to lighten the tedium of the voyage. A cow from the Windsor House Farm will provide milk for the royal table.

The king and queen are taking out a great assortment of Christmas gifts for the native Indian nobles, including a large number of rich plum-cakes, one thousand plum-puddings, an abundance of fine cheeses, rolls of dainty linen, delicate point-lace, silks, velvets, photographs and illustrated books and a number of fancy dogs and singing birds. For months past, the queen has been making a collection of ivory and tortoise shell fans, parasols of rare lace with hand-painted silk covers and gold inlaid handles; also a large number of miniatures of herself and a variety of other articles to give away as presents. The king also has many boxes filled with gifts for a similar purpose.

The Durbar will be a continuous pageant of two weeks, marked by extraordinary magnificence. Their majesties will appear in state at Delhi, surrounded by the largest gathering of native princes and chiefs the world has ever witnessed. At the Durbar ceremonies, they will occupy thrones and wear their robes of state, including the state jewels, and each will carry a sceptre. A special crown has been made for the king, as the British crown cannot be taken out of the country; but Queen Mary will wear the same crown to which she is accustomed in England, with the Kohinoor diamond blazing in front. Her robe will be the white-and-gold embroidered garment she wore at her coronation.

At the great Durbar procession, there will be twenty-four state trumpeters, each carrying his silver trumpet. The official camp will accommodate 250,000 persons. There will be a series of military reviews and processions, in which the flower of India's native nobility and many of the British nobles will take part, together with large bodies of magnificently equipped troops of every branch of the service. Hundreds of elephants, richly caparisoned and with howdahs filled with gorgeously attired riders, will be a picturesque feature of the spectacle. The principal feature will be the Durbar proclamation of the King-Emperor. All of the parades, reviews, receptions, dinners and state audiences will be on a scale of magnificent and lavish display that can only be attempted in the Orient. Jewels worth many millions of dollars will be worn and the trappings will be the richest that limitless wealth can provide. Nothing will be left undone to impress the natives with the splendor of the ceremonies, which to their minds will represent the power and greatness of the British throne.

Careful provision has been made to guard their majesties against the possibility of personal danger. They will be surrounded by a special guard of marine gunners and also by a strong bodyguard of Indian police, the latter being in personal attendance during the entire visit. While on the high seas the Medina will be escorted by a squadron of four cruisers from the royal navy.

Among the Workers

—THE WOMEN'S FOREIGN Missionary Society celebrated its golden jubilee recently at Memphis, Tenn. A thank-offering of more than $5,000 was raised for the mission work.

—THE MISSION YACHT ASSOCIATION of New York during the year has visited 4,736 ships of all classes and nationalities in New York harbor, and circulated among seamen 1,281,500 periodicals. The literature circulated among the seamen included 8,216 Bibles and Testaments.

MR. JAMES WOOD has been elected president of the American Bible Society. For many years he has been actively connected with the society and has held various official positions in other religious bodies. He has traveled extensively and has a wide knowledge of foreign missions.

—WRITING OF THE aims and hopes of the Polytechnic Institute of Porto Rico, Rev. J. W. Harris, its president, says: "'Economy no more means saving money than it means spending money. It means the administration of a house, its stewardship, spending or saving, that is, whether money or time, or anything else, to the best possible advantage.' says Ruskin. And when we speak of teaching the science of economy we do not mean that we wish to make these people miserly. We mean that we wish to develop in these youths a foresight that will help them to make the most of the present and to provide for the future. To live in a dirty, filthy house and to sleep on the floor to save money, is not economy. To spend the whole week's earnings all in one day and then to starve the other six days is not economy either. Yet that is the condition in Porto Rico. Economy in time, how much that is needed in a manana (to-morrow) land! Lack of economy is one cause of so much poverty and suffering. One is supposed to live to the limit of his income. Every one could own his home and keep it in a sanitary condition were the laws of economy known and practised. The great thing is to teach these students to live rightly and to prepare them for home-making. Good homes insure a good nation. This institution stands solidly for economy, that the people may learn to become self-governing and progressive. Our hope is to turn out boys and girls trained to teach others the value of right living and the possibility of making a small house comfortable and of keeping it clean. Clean homes, clean lives, and clean motives directed to a high and worthy end will make good material for citizenship in any land."

THERMOS

The Gift That Is Never Exchanged

"It is exactly what I wanted." How much pleasure is added to your Christmas when you hear that said enthusiastically. Give Thermos articles and you will surely make presents that will be appreciated. Thermos never returns to the shops for exchange.

Thermos Bottles now $1.00 up

In past years you may have felt that Thermos cost a bit more than you could afford to pay. To-day it is within the reach of even the most modest income. Handsome full pint Thermos Bottles are on sale at all our dealers for $1.00, $1.50, $2.00 and $2.50 each. One quart Thermos Bottles can now be had for $2.00, $2.50, $3.00 and $3.50 each. Sets of two or more bottles in a carrying case are moderate in price.

Any man, woman, boy or girl who is fond of outdoor sport will be enthusiastic about a Thermos Bottle. They will use it constantly not only afield, afloat and on the road, but in the home as well. For the invalid and the aged, for the young mother and the baby it is the ideal gift.

Thermos keeps any liquid ice cold for 72 hours or piping hot for 24 hours.

The New Thermos Carafe

The Thermos Carafe is made for indoor use. Its handsome design and finish have earned for it the title of "Thermos De Luxe." For serving refreshing beverages in the dining room or on the piazza it is ideal. In the bed chamber the Carafe has ice water fresh and ready at any hour of the day or night.

Many hotels—including the famous Knickerbocker and new Vanderbilt of New York—have equipped all guest rooms with the Thermos Carafe.

Thermos Carafes $5.00.

Thermos Coffee and Tea Pots and Decanters

Thermos Coffee and Tea Pots and Decanters make splendid gifts. Prices $5.00.

Thermos Lunch Kits and Lunch Sets

Thermos Lunch Kits contain two compartments—for sandwiches, etc.—and a Thermos Bottle. They are luxurious necessities for anyone who must eat lunch away from home. Give them to the school boys or girls and to your friends who are fond of picnics.

Thermos Lunch Kits and Lunch Sets range in price from $2.50 Kits—for individuals—to elaborate sets for motor tourists, coaching parties, etc., at $75.00.

Thermos is sold by all good stores. The word Thermos is stamped on the bottom of all genuine Thermos articles. It is a word that infringers dare not use, and is placed on each article to protect you against worthless imitations.

Thermos Carrying Cases

Thermos Carrying Cases make acceptable gifts for those who already own Thermos Bottles. They sell for from 65 cents up.

Write for Catalog

The Thermos Catalog and Price List will be sent upon request. It is a handsome illustrated booklet which describes all Thermos articles. You should not fail to write for it before you do your Christmas shopping. You will be wise to guard against forgetfulness by writing now.

American Thermos Bottle Co.
Thermos Building, New York

Enjoying What Others Own

By O. S. MARDEN

If you are not wealthy yourself, be glad that somebody else is, and you will be astonished at the happiness that will result to yourself.
REV. DR. CHARLES F. AKED.

I would rather be able to appreciate things I cannot have than to have things I am not able to appreciate.

IN HIS Citizen of the World, Goldsmith describes a mandarin who appeared in a blaze of diamonds, and who was very ostentatiously thanked by a person in the crowd. "What does the man mean?" the mandarin exclaimed. "Friend, I never gave thee any of my jewels." "No," replied the stranger, "but you have let me look at them; and that is all the use you can make of them yourself; so there is no difference between us, except that you have the trouble of watching them, and that is an employment I do not desire."

Dr. Orison Swett Marden

A French marquis with whom Washington Irving made us acquainted consoled himself for the loss of his chateau by remarking that he had Versailles and St. Cloud for his country resorts, and the shady alleys of the Tuileries and the Luxembourg for his town recreation.

"When I walk through these fine gardens," he said, "I have only to fancy myself the owner of them, and they are mine. All these gay crowds are my visitors, and I have not the trouble of entertaining them. My estate is a perfect Sans Souci, where every one does as he pleases, and no one troubles the owner. All Paris is my theatre, and presents me with a continual spectacle. I have a table spread for me in every street, and thousands of waiters ready to fly at my bidding. When my servants have waited upon me, I pay them, discharge them, and there's an end. I have no fears of their wronging or pilfering me when my back is turned. Upon the whole," said the old gentleman with a smile of infinite good-humor, "when I recollect all that I have suffered, and consider all I at present enjoy, I can but look upon myself as a person of singular good fortune."

. . .

I KNOW a lady who has lived all her life in a poverty-stricken district, in the midst of squalor and all sorts of discord, and yet, in this miserable environment, she has developed a sweet and beautiful character. She possesses that marvelous soul-alchemy which transforms the ugly into the beautiful, drudgery into delight.

The habit of feeling rich because you have developed the faculty of extracting wealth from everything you touch is riches indeed. Why should we not feel rich in all that our eyes can carry away, no matter if others happen to have the title-deed? Why should I not enjoy the beautiful gardens of the wealthy and their grounds, just as if I owned them? As I pass by I can make my own the wealth of color. The beauty of plants and lawn and flowers and trees are all mine. The title-deed of another does not cut off my æsthetic ownership. The best part of the farm, the landscape, the beauty of the brook and the meadow, the slope of the valley, the song of the birds, the sunsets, cannot be shut up within the title-deed; they belong to the eye that can carry them away, the mind that can appreciate them.

. . .

ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON once packed up his pictures and his furniture and sent them to an enemy who was about to be married, and he wrote to a friend that he had at last rid himself of his master, to whom he had been a bond slave. "Don't," he said, "give hostages to fortune, I implore you. Not once in a month will you be in a mood to enjoy a picture. When that mood comes, go to the gallery and see it. Meanwhile let some hired flunkey dust the picture and keep it in good condition for your coming."

How is it that some rare characters manage to have some precious treasures, so much that enriches the life, out of a poverty-stricken, forbidding environment, while others get little out of the most luxurious and beautiful conditions that wealth can furnish? It is wholly a question of the quality of the absorbed material. Some people are blind to beauty. They can travel with the utmost indifference in the midst of gorgeous scenery which would entrance an angel. Their souls are not touched. They do not feel the inspiration which puts others into ecstasy. The power to absorb beauty depends on the quality of the mind to assimilate it in the life.

. . .

THIS ability to gather enjoyment from all sorts of sources is a divine gift. It broadens the life, deepens the experience, and enriches the whole nature. It is a great force in self-culture.

Some people are so mean and stingy, so uncharitable and narrow, so bigoted and suspicious, that they never open their natures wide enough to take in the riches all about them, the beauty with which they come in contact. They are so jealous and envious and small, that they are afraid to throw open the doors of their hearts. The result is, their lives are pinched and starved. A person must be magnanimous and large-hearted, to be able to absorb the wealth and beauty that are worth while.

I know a woman in New York who is a dwarf and a cripple, but who has such a sweet, open, beautiful nature that everybody loves her. She is welcome everywhere, because she loves everybody and feels interested in every one. She is poor but she enters into other lives with a heartiness and unselfish abandonment and an enthusiasm that ought to shame those of us who are physically normal and in a better condition.

I know a poor man who really enjoyed more than any rich man I know of, simply because early in life he learned to enjoy things without owning them to such an extent that he never seemed to have the slightest envy or jealousy in connection with them, but rather gratitude to those who owned them. He was such a sweet soul that all doors were open to him, because he radiated sunshine and good cheer.

. . .

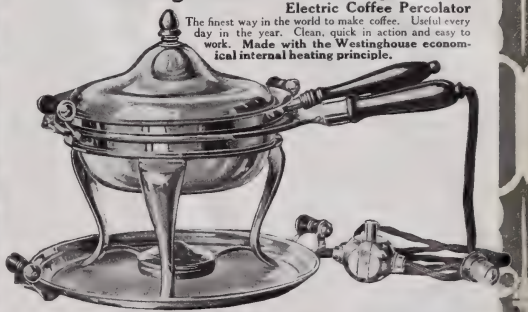
IT DOES not matter how poor or how unfortunate you are, you can enjoy, without the trouble of owning or caring for them, millions and millions of dollars' worth of works of art, and things of rarest beauty, almost as well as though they were your own. Think what it costs to maintain our great city parks, with all their wonders of beauty and comfort, the palatial public buildings, the fine residences, beautiful private grounds and gardens and objects of beauty everywhere which you can enjoy without money—and yet you may say you own nothing. He has missed the finest lesson of experience who has not learned how to enjoy without owning.

The secret of happiness is in a cheerful, contented mind. "He is poor who is dissatisfied; he is rich who is contented with what he has," and can enjoy what others own.

A Christmas Gift

of Westinghouse Quality a Compliment to any Woman

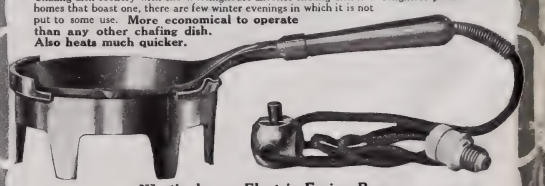
The timeliness of a piece of Westinghouse Electric Ware for a holiday gift will be appreciated the instant you think of the matter.



The use of Westinghouse Electric Ware in the household is getting to be a matter of pride among knowing women.

The recognized quality of all electric household devices bearing the Westinghouse name has placed them in a class by themselves.

In buying electric ware, insist on Westinghouse



Westinghouse Electric Coffee Percolator

The finest way in the world to make coffee. Useful every day in the year. Clean, quick in action and easy to work. Made with the Westinghouse economical internal heating principle.

Westinghouse Electric Chafing Dish

Chafing dish cookery with the Westinghouse Electric chafing dish is a delightful pastime. In homes that boast one, there are few winter evenings in which it is not put to some use. More economical to operate than any other chafing dish. Also heats much quicker.

Westinghouse Electric Frying Pan

This real frying pan carries its heat with it. Can be used anywhere there is an electric connection. Cooks everything you can cook in a frying pan on the kitchen range—but does it quicker and uses only the heat necessary for the work. You can easily regulate heat. Comes complete with aluminum stand. Inverted upon the stand the frying pan makes a practical "one-burner" stove.

Westinghouse Electric Toaster-Stove

If you want a gift that will be used, here it is. Every day in the year will see the toaster-stove in use for something. Attach to any electric connection and it is ready to fry an egg, make toast, broil a chop, right on the table, ready to serve. A real table stove. Nothing else on the market like it.

Westinghouse Electric Samovar

Have you ever made tea in a samovar? Folks who know tea and love it say that tea should never be made in any other way. This electric samovar is a handsome ornament to any tea table. Works at the snap of the switch and can be regulated from where you sit. Just the gift for the tea lover.

Before you make out your Christmas shopping list you must have the Christmas booklet of Westinghouse Electric Ware. Send a postcard at once for a copy to "Westinghouse, Household Dept. X, E. Pittsburgh, Pa."

Westinghouse
Electric & Manufacturing Company
Pittsburgh

Sales Offices in 40 American Cities
Representatives All Over the World

I like Ralston

—who doesn't? There's something so tempting about Ralston that everybody likes it. It has the rich flavor and natural color of pure, whole wheat.

Children are eager for

Ralston Wheat Food

—breakfast after breakfast does not lessen their liking for it. You could not choose a food that is better for their growing bodies—it has all the rich nourishing qualities of the whole wheat left in.

Ralston is not factory cooked—but fresh cooked every morning, in your own kitchen—and brought to your table, tempting and delicious. Serve with cream and sugar.

Ralston is a most economical food—one cup, when cooked, makes a breakfast for six. Get a package today—for your children's sake. You will like it as much as they will.

Purina Whole Wheat Flour makes delicious, nourishing bread, muffins, rolls, etc. Try it too.

5% Your Money Safe But NOT Tied Up

Some enterprises pay 6, 8 or 10 per cent. on money, but rarely without risk. It is possible to get 6 per cent. on mortgages, but then your money is tied up. It is safer, more convenient, and equally as profitable to deposit idle money with this Company. We have paid 5 per cent. per annum for eighteen years, and this is compounded semi-annually, or remitted by check, quarterly or semi-annually, as preferred.

Assets, $2,500,000

Your money can be withdrawn upon short notice at any time. Our business is conducted in accordance with the stringent New York banking laws, and our patronage is solicited by investors all over the world. Write for particulars.

Industrial Savings & Loan Co.
2 Times Bld'g, B'way & 42d St., New York

INDUSTRIAL SAVINGS and LOAN CO. NEW YORK CITY

Sleep Out-Doors in Your Own Room

This FREE Book Tells You How —you may receive the benefits of out-of-door sleeping at all seasons—the face only coming in contact with the crisp, out-door air—the body enjoying all the comforts of a warm room, by using a

Walsh Window Tent

Provided with awning and screen to protect sleeper from rain, storm, cold or insects. Instantly adjusted to any window without nails, screws to mar woodwork. Every sleeping room should be equipped with one. If not at your dealers, write for free book—What Fresh Air Will Do.

Recommended By Eminent Physicians Satisfaction Guaranteed.
CABINET MFG. CO.
311 Main St., Quincy, Ill.

FITS ANY WINDOW

AGENTS WANTED, either sex, sell great household necessity. Immense demand; big profit. Build big business; all or spare time. One agent says "So remarkable, had to supply seven friends—am now making $700 salary." Write for particulars and free sample. Dunlap Mfg. Co., Dept. 1009, Bloomington, Ill

Brander Cushing's Ambition

Continued from page 1243

CHAPTER VI

BRANDER CUSHING'S pulse beat regularly again.

"You will subpœna my son to testify against me?"

"I will unless you make confession yourself."

"My son was not present—"

"Wait, Mr. Cushing. 'Not present' when?"

"My son will testify as I have; no notice was served. Will you leave now?"

"No! Mr. Cushing, the deputy marshal's notice was served. You know well enough it was."

"Leave the room!"

"I will not, until I have said all I came to say, Mr. Cushing. You have not yet guessed my real reason for this visit. You think of me as a political enemy simply. You have hated me for years. You hate me now as you hate no other human creature. Is it not so?"

"True."

"But in the strange turnings of human events, things have come to pass which neither of us would once have thought possible. And while I suppose it would be impossible to prove to you that I have any feelings other than political ambition, I am going to try to show you that I do have."

Brander Cushing was beside himself with rage and hate.

"Because I will not resort to violence and throw you out of the room, it does not follow that I have to listen to you. Talk on, Mr. Fleming."

He deliberately turned his chair around in front of his desk and pulled some papers out and begun making notes on them.

Silas Fleming hitched his big form up a little closer.

"Cushing, you shall listen to me. Do you know who the deputy fire marshal is? The young man who served the notice on you here in this room September 18? He is my prospective son-in-law. And all his life he has been the soul of honor. His word is his life, and yet you know that if he goes into court and swears that he served the papers on you, and you swear that he didn't, every one will believe you, and count him guilty of perjury, trying to make good by a desperate falsehood for a mismanaged fire department. Why? Brander Cushing, head of the great shipyard, trusted by the government, man of strictest integrity, man of wealth and position; and the deputy, an obscure young man, just out of the ranks of labor, untried and unknown. But see here, Cushing. Here is where I come in. I suppose as a man you love your son. As a man I also love my daughter. Her happiness is dearer to me than even my political ambition or my hostility to you. Since your public statement denying the service of the papers, Nelson is under a cloud. I know that he has told the truth. Others are not so sure. Poison has entered the mind of others in my home. There are things that are dearer to me, yes, even to me, strange as it may seem to you, than personal power. And the sole reason I have come here to-day is to see if in any way you would retract, make a bold statement of the facts about the notice, and leave it to me as the prosecuting attorney to take care of the case so that you should not suffer when the trial came off."

Cushing wheeled about abruptly.

"And you have the insolence to come here with a proposition that I perjure myself for your benefit? And incur the risk of a conviction and a jail sentence, trusting your tender mercies once I pleaded guilty? Once more I tell you no notice was served on me, and order you to get out of my sight."

Silas Fleming rose. His big fat face was mottled. His fat forefinger again pointed at the safe behind Cushing.

"Brander Cushing, you lie, and you know it. I will convict you of perjury and of criminal negligence and I will do it through the testimony of your son."

"Leave the room! And do your worst."

The county attorney went out, and to preclude the possibility of his return, Brander Cushing got up and locked the door.

Then he went back to his desk and confronted himself.

There are a few real moments in life when a man fairly and squarely sees himself as he is. This was one of those times for Brander Cushing. Once having determined on his course he was ready to drive over all opposition and trample on everything and every one that was likely to get in the way. The visit of Silas Fleming had in reality stiffened his stubborn will and in other ways reminded him anew of the dangerous position he occupied. There was no way of safety for him except positive and emphatic denial of the service of the papers.

The constant reference to them in his own mind started him at last to action.

He rose and went to the small office safe, opened it, pulled out the drawer with a grim look as he recalled how Fleming's fat finger had pointed directly at it, and then took out the papers, and after a moment of hesitation put them into his inside coat pocket. There was no place in the room where he could destroy them, and he purposed to do that when he reached home.

It is strange what weaknesses are to be found in exceptionally bold and aggressive men. Napoleon was afraid of looking into a broken mirror, and Frederick the Great thought his greatest accomplishment was playing the flute (which he did abominably).

Brander Cushing actually felt easier in his mind when the envelope containing the fire marshal's notice was out of the safe and in his pocket, and for a few minutes he actually had a feeling as if there was nothing more to do.

The minutes passed and he had turned to his desk as if to take up his regular work, when the one great question of all suddenly confronted him.

How about Sidney?

What would the boy do?

Everything depended on him, of course. Would he, in this crisis, go his own way and tell the truth?

Cushing had never known him to tell a falsehood. He had himself trained him to habits of sternest probity. The name of Brander Cushing for over forty years had been absolute in the market place. He was, it is true, allied with the greatest commercial pirate gang in all the world's history; it had robbed the people of millions, and at the same time Cushing had himself a personal reputation for truth and honesty that was unimpeachable. So intricate and puzzling are the possibilities of this complex social and business world.

But what would the boy do? That was one question Cushing could not answer. For twenty years Sidney had obeyed his father implicitly. There had never been an instance that his father could recall when he had questioned his father's authority or his good judgment.

But this was another matter. For the first time in his life, the son would be asked to stand by a falsehood, deliberately uttered; to abet a course of action that meant dishonor and disgrace for innocent people. Who could tell whether Sidney's high sense of honor might lead him to rebel and even go so far as to testify against his own father?

What was the alternative? State prison! Brander Cushing wiped big beads of sweat from his face. That would determine Sidney doubtless. Such an alternative would decide the

Continued on next page

This Handsome Set of Furs for $9.00

Makes an exceptionally fine Christmas gift, and you save just one half on the usual retail price

To wear furs gives one the appearance of being well dressed and prosperous and is always a very acceptable Christmas gift. You can have this beautiful set of furs sent to your home, all express charges prepaid, and if you are not satisfied in every particular you can return them at our expense, and we will refund you the full purchase price—you to be the judge absolutely.

706.—Handsome Belgian Lynx Stole, long, soft, black silky hair; Buxelle model, animal effect. A full skin across the back, 9 inches wide, finished at each end with handsome heads, one of which hangs gracefully over each shoulder. The Muff is the latest model with a fine down bed, finished at each end with a neat slurring. The entire set is lined with Skinner's Guaranteed Satin. Retail price $18.00. Our price for immediate orders..... $9

706

This offer is made to you by the largest mail order Fur house in the country, backed by a reputation of 35 years for square dealing, so you can rest assured you are getting the best the market afford—at manufacturers prices. We manufacture every piece we sell.

Write to-day for our Beautifully Illustrated Catalog of FURS—it will be sent to you absolutely FREE OF CHARGE.

ALASKA FUR CO., Manufacturing Furriers, Estab. 1876
1217 D Market Street, Philadelphia, Pa.
Reference: Bank of Commerce, 624 Chestnut St., Philadelphia

Whittemore's Shoe Polishes

Finest in Quality. Largest in Variety.

They meet every requirement for cleaning and polishing shoes of all kinds and colors.

"ELITE" combination for gentlemen who take pride in having their shoes look A1. Restores color and lustre to all black shoes. Polish with a brush or cloth, 25c. "BABY ELITE" size, 10c.

"GILT EDGE" the only ladies' shoe dressing that positively contains OIL. Blacks and Polishes ladies' and children's boots and shoes, shines without rubbing, 25c. "FRENCH GLOSS," 10c.

"DANDY" combination for cleaning and polishing all kinds of russet or tan shoes, 25c. "STAR" size, 10c.

If your dealer does not keep the kind you want, send us his address and the price in stamps for a full size package

WHITTEMORE BROS. & CO.,
20-26 Albany St., Cambridge, Mass.

The Oldest and Largest Manufacturers of Shoe Polishes in the World

Pozzoni's Complexion POWDER

The Greatest Beautifier of Them All

Producing a smooth, velvety complexion, bringing out the natural tones of the skin. Its absolute beauty, almost impalpable fineness and softness makes Pozzoni's Complexion Powder cooling, refreshing and beautifying to the most delicate skin without injury. It is the only complexion powder that really clings—the only one put up in a wooden box, which retains all its delicate perfume until entirely used up.

5 Colors—Flesh, Special Pink, Cream, White, Brunette.

50c—EVERYWHERE—50c

OXALBITOL

AN ANTISEPTIC DRESSING

that is better than any other preparation for healing cuts, ulcers or wounds of any sort. Get it from your druggist, or a bottle will be sent by mail for 25 cents.

OXALBITOL CO. Bonesdale, Pa.

Brander Cushing's Ambition

Continued from preceding page

matter. In any case he had sent Fleming away with all of a stubborn, stolid man's relentless purpose to bring Cushing and his son into court and if possible secure conviction and a full sentence.

He had hoped his denial of the paper service would preclude an indictment by the grand jury. The longer he thought it over the more he grew convinced that Fleming would secure some kind of indictment, probably based on criminal negligence. A number of horrors, similar to this one, had occurred in different cities within a few months, and the public was beginning to grow clamorous for convictions. The Federation of Labor had held great meetings in all the great cities voicing deep wrath over the cheapness put on human life by certain business firms. Brander Cushing felt it, like a thing which needed no argument. In spite of his position, his wealth, his influence, he could not disguise the fact that he stood in real peril. For the first time in his life he was afraid. And to save himself he had flung up the shield of a direct lie. The great and consuming question with him now was, would his own son support him in that defense? And the thing that grew to torture him as the minutes went on was the uncertainty in his own mind as to how Sidney would act. The more he dwelt upon it, the more uncertain it all seemed.

It was now four o'clock in the afternoon. He was so restless in his mind that he unlocked the office door and went up to the great draughting room. The minute his eyes fell on the white chalk lines on the great floor, he felt a sense of relief. What! He, Brander Cushing, the great shipyard man, in whose brain were born these new and valuable designs for warships, the man trusted and honored by the great United States Government, the close personal friend of the Secretary of War, who was perhaps in the way to become even greater, he in danger of going to prison as a common law-breaker?

The very thought was absurd. He saw an incorrect drawing on the other side of the room, and stepped around to the engineer to correct it. In a moment everything else was gone from his mind. This vessel would be the pride of the nation. It would be the envy of all the other powers. His name would be on the lips of kings and emperors. The high and mighty who sat in seats exalted would mention him in their war councils. The lines on the floor took on new and powerful meaning. They spelled awards of honor, all the comforts and luxuries of great wealth, high acclaim and an honored ending of a dignified and distinguished career.

As he passed by a window he was attracted by the stir of all the human and mechanical movement. Yet somehow, it flashed over him that something was different. What was it? He recalled his experience of the morning, and determined to test it again.

After making a few changes in another part of the floor design, he went out into the yard.

The keel-laying was proceeding under the supervision of the yard superintendent McLeish, who generally had four hundred men under him. The number this afternoon seemed so small that Cushing spoke to McLeish about it.

"Seventy-five men had children in the accident. Might as well say, Mr. Cushing, there's an ugly feeling among the men."

"Do they blame me?"

The superintendent was astonished at the question.

"You can judge for yourself, sir. There's an ugly feeling in the yard."

Brander Cushing at once went up to one of the men whom he knew as one of the oldest and most trusted yard-workers in the employ of the company.

"Burns," he said, "what ails the men to-day? Are they blaming me for the factory fire?"

Burns looked exceedingly uncomfortable. At first he seemed inclined not to speak. Then he said stiffly,

"Since you ask me, Mr. Cushing, I don't mind saying they do. There's bad feeling in the yard."

"Don't the men know I am not responsible for the loss of life?"

"I can't say, sir. But I know feeling is strong against you."

Burns moved away as if he did not care to talk any more and Cushing went down into the yard.

He spoke to different men as he moved along, but received in reply only a surly nod or a hard look. It was a new experience for him. One of the comfortable daily events for him was the relation he sustained to his men. There were nearly four thousand in all. Out of that number he knew a very large number by name. It was one of the pleasurable things in his day's programme to walk through the yard or the shops exchanging greetings with the men. It was,

"Fine piece of work, Lloyd," "This will beat the old type, Andrew," "Great day for work, eh, Wallace?"

And the men always responded heartily. They respected him, too. They made him feel as if, in some intangible way, without too much fuss about it, he and they understood the exact relation of labor and capital, of brains and muscle. But all this was different. It was new business for him to be snubbed by his own workmen in his own shipyard. It cut him deeply, and the whole thing intensified his purpose that no matter what the cost to his conscience or his family pride he must stand by his falsehood and regain popular confidence.

He went back to the office again, and calling in a stenographer, dictated a few letters. It was an unusual time of the day, but he worked in unusual ways and never wrote his letters until he felt exactly in the mood. After dictating a dozen letters, he sent the clerk out and wrote a brief line to Sidney. After finishing, he read it, tore it up and sent a telegram instead.

"Everything going all right here. See Anderson about details of water valves. Draw on me for anything you need. If secretary invites you, tell him his suggestion about interior lighting is being carefully considered. See Marston. Take your time at patent office."

He sent this out and busied himself until nearly five o'clock with the details of a new form of detachable torpedo hood. He had finally risen to leave the works, as his custom had been for years to take a long walk before dinner, when a clerk announced a visitor.

"A lady to see you, sir."

Brander Cushing was by nature and training the soul of courtesy and fine manners.

When he looked up and saw his visitor he at once rose and with added politeness offered a chair.

As long as he lives he will not forget that afternoon nor his experience.

Outside, the yard clanged and roared and hummed with its many-voiced energy. Inside the offices, typewriters clicked and clerks were busy here and there at desks and tables and draughting boards. Through the open door leading into his inner office, Cushing could see a splendid model of the great warship, the Republic.

But instantly all his attention was directed towards his visitor.

She was, perhaps, twenty years old. Her face was very pale, and unusual in its cold regularity of feature. Cushing was startled by it. But his first impression speedily yielded to his second when the girl began to speak. He had read of wonderful voices in women of fiction but had never believed in them. Now he was simply bewildered to hear that rarest of all

Continued on next page

The Delight of Winter Evenings

You can't imagine the CHARM and INTEREST of ROOK till you play it—till you get a taste of its excitement, amusement, cleverness, luck, skill. It's Irresistible!

The GAME of

ROOK

fits into more leisure moments in the FAMILY than any other game ever invented. Its fascination grows. You come back to it each time with fresh pleasure.

The Best HOME GAME for a Generation. 3 to 8 Players

10 OTHER SPLENDID GAMES are played with these 56 handsome cards SEVERAL ARE FOR CHILDREN (and they love them), some are SOLITAIRES for one person, some are for TWO (a man and his wife, a couple of young people, a boy and his chum), some are for 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, or 8, as may be present. There are games for ALL TASTES and ALL AGES, and you get all this when you get ROOK. Highest quality cards as above (not playing cards).

We guarantee you'll like it
Your money back if you don't

50 Cents

At all DEALERS or by mail from us

PARKER BROTHERS, Inc.

Sole makers of ROOK, PIT, Ping-Pong, Pastime Picture Puzzles, etc.

Parker Square, Salem, Massachusetts

Ladies, Ease Your Feet!

A customer writes: "I kept my Pillow Shoes all last year for just a "dress up shoe." Now I am wearing them for every day. They don't lose their shape like other shoes. They are the only shoe I ever put right on new and wore with comfort."

The soft, glove-like feel of

PILLOW SHOES

is simply charming." Soft, easy, durable, neat, stylish; genuine hand-turned shoes of Vici-Kid. No lining to wrinkle and chafe; no breaking in necessary. Absolute comfort and fit guaranteed or money refunded. Price includes rubber heels. All styles. Write for free Catalog and self-measure blank customers everywhere.

$3.25 Postpaid in U. S.

PILLOW SHOE CO.,
184 Summer Street, Dept. 3, Boston, Mass.

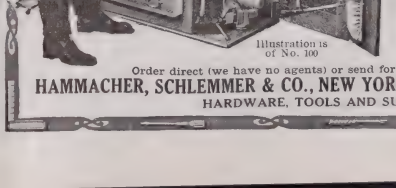
$1.00 STOP FRETTING OVER YOUR XMAS PRESENTS

The most desirable, most suitable and least expensive of all CORRECT GIFTS is a dainty

"LENOX" Combination Xmas Box

Sent to any address prepaid and insured for ONE DOLLAR

Contents of Box designed for MEN:
(1) 3 pairs 6 months guaranteed "Lenox" Hose, choice Black, Tan, Navy, Gray, - - - Value $1.00
(2) Beautiful "Lenox" All Silk Flowing-End "Four-in-Hand" Tie to match, - - - Value .50
(3) 1 pair of guaranteed quality Suspenders, Value .25
ALL FOR ONE DOLLAR. Total Value $1.75



Contents of Box designed for WOMEN:
(1) 3 pairs 6 months guaranteed "Lenox" Satin Finished Lisle Hose, Black or Tan, - - Value $1.00
(2) 3 beautiful corner embroidered Pure Irish Linen Handkerchiefs of superior quality, Value .75
ALL FOR ONE DOLLAR. Total Value $1.75

Don't forget to state the size and shades desired.
We refer to Dun's, Bradstreet's, or any bank in N. Y. City

LENOX SILK WORKS, Dept. 26 5 W. 31st St., New York
We need good Agents.

PATENTS SECURED OR FEE RETURNED.
Free report as to Patentability. Illustrated Guide Book, and List of Inventions Wanted, sent free.
VICTOR J. EVANS & CO., Washington, D. C.

PATENTS That Protect and Pay
Advice and Books FREE
Rates Reasonable. Highest References. Best Services.
WATSON E. COLEMAN, Patent Lawyer, WASHINGTON, D. C.

There is nothing more fascinating to the average man or boy than

Tinkering with Tools and for the man who is really handy with tools a present of one of our Combination Benches and will give him more pleasure than anything else you could select. It is a handsome oak cabinet containing 95 of the finest tools made and when open is a complete bench with vise ready for immediate use.

Tool Cabinets for Christmas

For one less expert, or for the boy, we suggest one of our smaller cabinets. All tools are the highest grade standard mechanics' tools arranged in convenient sets for home use. The quality is the same in all. The higher priced cabinets are larger and contain more tools.

No. 47	21	Tools	$ 7.50
" 52	24	"	10.00
" 53	36	"	15.00
" 54	40	"	20.00
" 55	52	"	30.00
" 100	95	"	85.00

Illustration is of No. 100

We are pioneers in the sale of high-grade tool outfits for home use; every set bears our guarantee of quality.

Order direct (we have no agents) or send for Catalogue No. 2966

HAMMACHER, SCHLEMMER & CO., NEW YORK SINCE 1848 4th Ave. and 13th St.

HARDWARE, TOOLS AND SUPPLIES

WORKS WITHOUT FAITH

Faith Came After the Works Had Laid the Foundation

A Bay State belle talks thus about coffee:

"While a coffee drinker I was a sufferer from indigestion and intensely painful nervous headaches, from childhood.

"Seven years ago my health gave out entirely. I grew so weak that the exertion of walking, if only a few feet, made it necessary for me to lie down. My friends thought I was marked for consumption—weak, thin and pale.

"I realized the danger I was in and tried faithfully to get relief from medicines, till, at last, after having employed all kinds of drugs, the doctor acknowledged that he did not believe it was in his power to cure me.

"While in this condition a friend induced me to quit coffee and try Postum, and I did so without the least hope that it would do me any good. I did not like it at first, but when it was properly made I found it was a most delicious and refreshing beverage. I am especially fond of it served at dinner ice-cold, with cream.

"In a month's time I began to improve, and in a few weeks my indigestion ceased to trouble me, and my headache stopped entirely. I am so perfectly well now that I do not look like the same person, and I have so gained in flesh that I am 15 pounds heavier than ever before.

"This is what Postum has done for me. I still use it and shall always do so." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

"There's a reason," and it is explained in the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

SEND A POSTAL FOR THIS

FREE ENCYCLOPEDIC DIGEST

Different from anything else you ever saw—in fact a little encyclopedia in itself—covering many subjects. Handsomely illustrated, showing Ely, the Aviator, flying from deck of a warship—fine halftone of President Taft—realistic pictures of animals and flowers—scenes showing new ideas in agriculture—modern methods of child instruction, etc., etc.

We want you to have this Digest, because it will tell you all about the most wonderful encyclopedia ever printed, all complete in two Bible paper volumes—each only 1½ inches thick, but 2,700 pages and 4,500 subjects in all. Handy to keep around anywhere—reliable up-to-date information, boiled down so you can get at it quickly. Costs so little you will be astonished. Get your postal in the next mail and we will also send you free a rich Christmas gift book without advertising. Send today.

W. B. CONKEY & COMPANY
Printers and Bookbinders
Dept. 29 HAMMOND, INDIANA

PELOUBET'S SELECT NOTES

The World's Greatest Commentary on the International Sunday School Lessons for 1912

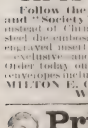
By REV. F. N. PELOUBET, D.D. and PROF. AMOS R. WELLS, A.M.

38th ANNUAL VOLUME

Next to the Bible, the teacher's best friend

Cloth, price, $1.25, postpaid

W. A. WILDE COMPANY
Boston and Chicago



Pentecostal Hymns Nos. 5 & 6 Combined

Latest and best of a famous series. Usable in both Sunday School and Church. 320 extra size pages. Cloth, $25-the-100. Word edition, $8-the-100. $10 secures 25 music and 75 words only, in all 100 books. Returnable sample copies mailed. Write direct.

HOPE PUBLISHING COMPANY, CHICAGO

GIFTS FOR CHRISTMAS

Follow the Christmas custom of "Royalty" and "Society." Send Christmas cards to your friends instead of Christmas gifts. Our line of rich designs in steel die-embossed folders in colors and copper plate engraved insert cards tied with satin ribbon are new exclusive and acknowledged superior to all others. Order today our $1.00, $2.00, or $5.00 assortment (envelopes included), postpaid. Satisfaction guaranteed. MILTON E. CARTER COMPANY, Manufact's, Winthrop (Boston) Mass.

Print Your Own

Cards, circulars, books, newspaper. Press $5. Larger $18. Rotary $60. Save money. Big profit printing for others. All easy, all sent. Write factory for press catalog. Type, cards, paper. Kit. THE PRESS CO., - Meriden, - Connecticut rare gifts, a natural musical voice which the owner did not understand but used naturally.

Brander Cushing's Ambition

Continued from preceding page

One other item he had also at once noted. She was a cripple.

"Mr. Cushing, I am Athanasia Ward. One of the girls your son saved in the—"

She put her hands up to her face. There were great burns visible on the backs of them.

"Well?"

"He—I—No one can thank any one for such a thing as that. But—there seemed to be no other way."

"My son is not here. He is out of the city. I do not know when he will return. You do not need to thank him."

"But I wish to do so."

"I do not know when he will be back."

"I was not able yesterday to say anything. Oh, it was terrible. Mr. Cushing, aren't you thankful you are not responsible for any of those deaths? It must be terrible to feel that."

Pause.

"You have been working in the factory—how long?"

"Since father died, four years ago. My mother is living and I have a brother in the warehouse."

"There was another girl who escaped at the same time with you and who helped you, my son told me. Hermosa—"

"Hermosa Howard. Oh, she is a brave girl! I should be with those others if Hermosa— You see, Mr. Cushing, right in the midst of our work, without a second's warning, there was an awful report, and the whole room seemed to be in a blaze. You see there's so much lint flying all the time. There were fifty girls on our floor. They all stood up and then ran around to the different windows screaming and crying. I saw Hermosa pull several back who were just going to jump. She and Helvetia Slova ran to the door and tried to open it, but it was locked. They beat on it with their fists until the flesh came off. Then we all crowded over to the alley windows. It was there we first saw your son. Oh, he is brave and strong! I shall never forget how he stood there on the window sill, his foot braced against the edge of the board. I would have been trampled to death if Hermosa had not lifted and pushed and shoved me out onto the board. Oh, how I feared! I shall always dream of it. I am not brave like Hermosa or your son. I am a coward. Perhaps it comes from being lame. I don't know how I ever crossed. I was saying all the time, 'O God, if you are good, won't you save Hermosa?' And he did—but oh, it's terrible in our court to-day. There will be twenty-five funerals from our tenement to-morrow. A good many of the people are going crazy over it."

"Good Heavens, girl, why do you come here to tell me about it?" Brander Cushing's nerves were racked and his exclamation was justifiable in the girl's mind.

"Oh, I beg pardon, Mr. Cushing. I did not mean— No, I came for another purpose. But I cannot escape the sight of it. I came—I came—to warn you!"

To be continued

What He Likes in the Almanac

THE Christian Herald Almanac was received to-day. My daughters and I are perfectly delighted with it. It contains so many things of the greatest importance, and that every person, old and young, should know, and everything is concise, clear and accurate. The weights, measures, etc., are for constant reference and use. The definitions of "initiative," "referendum" and "recall" are excellent; and "Hard Bible Problems Solved" should be studied by every person. Would that you might put in small booklet form your thoughts, under this head, on dancing, card playing, and gambling. I would like to distribute an unlimited number of such booklets. D. V. D.

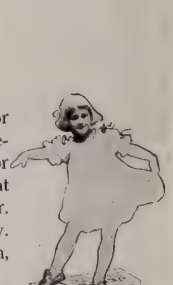
Delaware, O.

Dinah and Her Jell-O Dessert

"There's yo' Jell-O and peaches, chile. Yo' goin' to like dat. Jell-O's fine for chil'en 'at likes good things to eat."

Dinah is a cook—a great cook—but even Dinah cannot make other desserts so dainty and delightful as those she makes of

JELL-O



They are "fine for children" and everybody else.

Any of the seven flavors of Jell-O may be used for these desserts, and for additional variety, peaches, pineapple, oranges, bananas, or other fruit may be added or used to garnish them. The Jell-O flavor is so delicious that it is never necessary to add anything to make it better.

A Jell-O dessert can be made in a minute by anybody.

The seven flavors are: Strawberry, Raspberry, Lemon, Orange, Cherry, Peach, Chocolate.

All grocers sell Jell-O, 10 cents a package.

The beautiful recipe book, "DESSERTS OF THE WORLD," illustrated in ten colors and gold, will be sent free to all who write and ask for it.

THE GENESEE PURE FOOD CO.,
Le Roy, N. Y., and Bridgeburg, Can.

The name JELL-O is on every package in big red letters. If it isn't there, it isn't JELL-O.

Without Door $1.00 PER SECTION With Door $1.75 IT FITS ANY SPACE

On Approval, Freight Paid

Lundstrom

IT GROWS WITH YOUR LIBRARY

SECTIONAL BOOKCASE

Endorsed "THE BEST" by Over Fifty Thousand Users

MADE under our own patents, in our own factory, and the entire production sold direct to the home and office. That is the reason we can offer them at such reasonable prices. Our Sectional Bookcases are the product of years of undivided attention to this one line of manufacture. Book sections have non-binding, disappearing glass doors, and are highly finished in SOLID GOLDEN OAK. Other styles and finishes at correspondingly low prices. Write for New Catalogue No. 112.

THE C. J. LUNDSTROM MFG. CO., Little Falls, N. Y.
Manufacturers of Sectional Bookcases and Filing Cabinets.
New York Office: Flatiron Bldg.

No Smarter, Daintier, More Artistic Garments can be made than these

Priscilla Dresses

designed by a woman who knows the needs of little folks and appreciates the demands of particular mothers—

Priscilla Garments are made with exquisite taste and infinite care—Every little detail must be just right—The materials—the designs—the trimming are just what the most particular of mothers would want them to be—

All Sizes—Girls of 2 to 14

Sold only by mail direct from the factory—At factory prices—Most remarkable values you ever saw—

Write for the Priscilla Book

A beautiful style book of childrens' and misses' garments—Full of suggestions for school and dress wear—and of information about the Priscilla Shop.

Our Expert Mail Service Makes It Easy To Shop Here.

The Priscilla Shop, Dept. B, Detroit, Mich.

Thin, Feeble and Under-Fed people need more coal, clothes and doctors than the strong, robust and hearty.

Scott's Emulsion

saves coal bills, tailors' bills and doctors' bills.

ALL DRUGGISTS

11-55

LITTLE BEAUTY NIGHT LAMP

65c

Gas-filled with carbonic oil will burn 40 hours. Absolutely odorless. Handsomely constructed of brass, nickel plated. Provided with wick to last several years. Can be used on either hallway, closets, nursery and sickroom. At your dealer's or by mail, postpaid, 65c.

SILVER & COMPANY
320 Hewes Street
Brooklyn, N. Y.

AGENTS WANTED

AGENTS STEADY INCOME

Selling our guaranteed hosiery for men, women and children. Every style and grade. Every pair guaranteed 4 months without holes or a new pair given free. Sure repeat proposition. Big seller, fine profits, steady income. All want guaranteed hosiery. Don't delay. Write at once for terms and free sample to workers. Don't miss this big chance. Send no money. A postal will do.

THOMAS HOSIERY CO.
3524 BARNEY ST., DAYTON, OHIO

Free Sample.

Makes and burns its own gas—and produces a pure white, steady, safe, 100 candle power light. No wick, smoke, dirt, grease or odor.

THE "BEST" LIGHT

Lighted instantly. Over 200 styles. Agents wanted. Write for catalog.

THE BEST LIGHT CO.
5-10 E. 5th St., Canton, O.

$1.50 STENCIL OUTFIT 50c

MAKE MONEY! BEAUTIFY YOUR HOME!

To introduce our new line we send this new Stencil Outfit, 15 cut stencils, 3 tubes, stencil Oil colors, 6 stencil holders, brush, New catalog and instructions. All in strong box for 50c

THE BELL CO., 1288 Washington Ave., Desk B, N. Y. City

WANTED MEN

Prepare as Firemen, Brakemen, Electric Motormen, Train Porters (colored). Hundreds put to work—$65 to $150 a month. No experience necessary. 500 More Wanted. Enclose stamp for Application Blank and Book. State position.

International Railway Corr. Institute,
Dept. 16 Indianapolis, Indiana.

ALL FOR 20¢

Three beautiful 12-inch LINEN Centerpieces, Doilies, Rocker and Dresser Scarf. 1 Doily and one cut of above sent on receipt of 20c. Send for 20 different EMBROIDERY STITCHES. All covered by 2-cent stamp.

P. W. KELLER CO., Waterloo, Iowa

FOR .75 CTS

We will send you Postpaid a Box of Finest Writing Paper 24 Sheets and Envelopes stamped with any 2-Letter Monogram.

JACCARD'S Jewelers, St. Louis
Write for Our Grand Catalogue

BLYMYER CHURCH BELLS.

UNLIKE OTHER BELLS SWEETER, MORE DURABLE, LOWER PRICE. OUR FREE CATALOGUE TELLS WHY.

Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati O.

Roberta Starr's Real Christmas

Continued from page 1239

forgotten, and Mrs. Craig, who expected to find her Christmas in the children's enjoyment, was crying softly over a new dress. When the first sack was empty, Roberta opened the second. "This has something for your Christmas dinners!" she announced. Then beef roasts, potatoes, cans of corn, and bags of nuts were distributed.

Roberta stayed and watched the quiet happiness of the children for some time, for the Babel had ceased when the gifts arrived. It was too late to go to her uncle's for dinner; their own cook had the day off, so she ate at a restaurant, but her thoughts were too busy to allow any feeling of loneliness.

When Mr. and Mrs. Starr reached home they found Roberta seated before a glowing grate fire. "Now give an account of yourself, Miss," said her father smilingly, as he and Mrs. Starr drew up two chairs before the grate. They had both secretly wondered at the soft, enthusiastic light in their daughter's eyes.

Roberta waited for no second bidding, but she told the whole story, beginning with the meeting of Mrs. Craig on the train. "You will have to give me a check to-morrow, father, for the bills I've made to-day will take my allowance for two months; but I shall not mind doing without it. It was wonderful to be able to give such inexpensive things, too, when the gifts meant so much happiness. The children could not talk, they just played and played, and the mothers looked at their dresses and the food in silent joy. I have thought it all out since I came home, and I think we make a mistake to give to our friends who have almost everything they want anyway; Christ came because the world needed him, and we should show his spirit by giving on his birthday to needy people, who have little to make them happy. That's the way I intend to celebrate hereafter. I discovered just to-day down among the poor of Fannin Street, that it is not what I receive or what I give to my especial friends that makes me happy on Christmas; it is what I give to those who would have no Christmas unless I gave it to them. This has been my very first real Christmas," finished Roberta.

"I know you understand now, my dear, that it is not the value of the gift that counts, but the spirit that is behind it. You enjoyed giving to Mrs. Craig and her friends because love prompted the gift; you knew you would get nothing in return," remarked Mrs. Starr.

"But I did get something in return. The joy of the children and the broken, faltering thanks of the mothers was all the Christmas I needed. The picture of that scene and those words of thanks will stay with me all the year, as father said the speech of his men did with him. I—I am sorry I spoke as I did about the automobile yesterday. I see things so differently now," and Roberta's voice was low with emotion.

"When the bank returns the check I shall give you to-morrow, Roberta, I want to keep it as a memento of the time when you found out what it really meant to celebrate Christmas Day," said Mr. Starr in a gentle tone.

MORE ALMANAC CONGRATULATIONS

Allow me to congratulate you on the appearance, workmanship and contents of the Christian Herald Almanac you have put in the hands of your subscribers. The calendar, United States Government, foreign governments, religious bodies in the United States, agricultural and domestic interests together with other information and facts of value, and proverbs and witty sayings, all go to make up an almanac of surpassing interest and profit; and will be eagerly read in the homes to which it goes. I thank you very much for the copy you sent me, which is quite an improvement even over the beautiful calendars received in former years.

Washington, D. C. W. LETTERMAN SMITH.

The Howard Watch

THIS Christmas is surely the time to gratify for him one of his dearest wishes—to own a HOWARD WATCH.

Not that he hasn't a watch of some kind already.

But the higher up a man gets in the councils of the business and professional world the more HOWARD owners he finds among his associates.

It is brought home to him more and more that the HOWARD has a distinctive standing among the leading men of all callings and occupations.

And when a man once absorbs the prestige of the HOWARD—when he realizes what "HOWARD time" is and the service it performs in the world's affairs, any other watch becomes a good bit of a makeshift.

Through its seventy years' career the HOWARD has come to be known as the finest practical timepiece in the world.

A HOWARD Watch is always worth what you pay for it.

The price of each watch—from the 17-jewel (double roller) in a Crescent or Jas. Boss gold-filled case at $40, to the "EDWARD HOWARD" model (23-jewel, 18K solid gold case) at $350—is fixed at the factory and a printed ticket attached.

Find the HOWARD jeweler in your town and talk to him. Not every jeweler can sell you a HOWARD. The jeweler who can is a good man to know.

Admiral Sigsbee has written a little book, "The Log of the HOWARD Watch," giving the record of his own HOWARD in the U. S. Navy. You'll enjoy it. Drop us a post-card, Dept. W, and we'll send you a copy.

E. HOWARD WATCH WORKS, Boston, Mass.

"Our Folks" Wrote This Advertisement

Here is an advertisement made up of phrases culled from letters written by Farm Journal subscribers:

"It beats everything I have ever seen in the value you get for the money you give for it. . . . We cannot keep house without it. . . . It is the most instructive paper that comes to our home. . . . When I want reliable information on any subject I consult Farm Journal. . . . It's the only paper my wife reads, and we take many others. . . . The variety and quality of its material is surprising. . . . To stop it would be like stopping the visits of a good friend."

Pretty strong advertisement, isn't it?—and remember it was written by our subscribers, not by us—and we could print easily a thousand such advertisements from the letters we have on file. Wherever you live, whatever your business, you need such a paper in your home. For only $1 we'll send it monthly for five years.

FARM JOURNAL
184 N. Clifton Street, Philadelphia

Vapo Cresolene

(ESTABLISHED 1879)

for Whooping Cough, Croup, Asthma, Sore Throat, Coughs, Bronchitis, Colds, Diphtheria, Catarrh.

"Used where 'em' need"

A simple, safe and effective treatment avoiding drugs. Vaporized Cresolene stops the paroxysms of Whooping Cough and relieves croupal croup. It is a boon to sufferers from Asthma. The air rendered strongly antiseptic, inspired with every breath, makes breathing easy, soothes the sore throat and stops the cough, assuring rest to nights. Cresolene relieves the bronchial complications of Scarlet Fever and Measles and is a valuable aid in the treatment of Diphtheria. Cresolene's best recommendation is its 30 years of success in use. Send its postal for Descriptive Book, etc.

For Sale by All Druggists

Try Cresolene Antiseptic Throat Tablets for the irritated throat, composed of slippery elm bark, licorice, sugar and Cresolene. They can't harm you. Of your druggist or from us, 10c in stamps.

The Vapo-Cresolene Co., 62 Cortlandt St., New York
or Leeming-Miles Building, Montreal, Canada

HOLIDAY COMBINATION

2 Xmas Greeting Letters with Envelopes for . . . 10c,
or 6 assorted in Fancy Box for 20c
10 Xmas Post Cards . . . . . 10c.
6 Superior Xmas Post Cards . . . . . 10c.
10 New Year Post Cards . . . . . 10c.
Any three 10c packages for . . . . . 25c.
Special Assortment of High Grade Post Cards 100 for 60c.
MADISON ART COMPANY, - - MADISON, CONN.

Let us show you how sound bonds will safely increase your income

The house of E. H. Rollins & Sons, founded 1876, enjoys an unexcelled reputation with this nation's bankers for successful bond investments.

Every bond we offer for sale has been purchased outright by us. Every bond we own has withstood the most exacting reliability tests that our organization of specialists knows how to apply.

We have at all times investment bonds of the soundest type. It will pay you well to investigate our standing and then become acquainted with us personally.

Write to-day for our quarterly publication, The Rollins Magazine, and circular 504.

E. H. ROLLINS & SONS

Investment Bonds

Boston New York Chicago Denver San Francisco

Highest Interest Best Security

Amounts of any size ($25, $50, $100, $200 or multiples) can be invested, temporarily or permanently. Your money available when wanted. Endorsed by highest financial authorities everywhere.

6% NET INTEREST

Principal and interest secured by select Mortgages on Preferred Real Estate

If your savings or any other money is drawing less than 6% net, or is not as secure as Old Mother Earth herself can make it—send postcard for our Booklet. Read it.

A. C. LESLIE CO.

Suite 117, Bakewell Law Bldg., Pittsburg, Pa.

GUARANTEED MORTGAGES

for Large and Small Investors

You can now invest small sums in first-class mortgage bonds. You can have the same advantages which for hundreds of years capitalists alone have enjoyed. Whether you have $10 or $10,000 to invest, you can have the same security and the same returns. Send for our booklet on yielding 5% to 6%, with the guarantee of this Company and the largest class New York and Suburban Real Estate back of them. The safest, surest, most profitable investment for earnings consistent with absolute security.

FIRST MORTGAGE TRUST BONDS

Under Supervision of New York Banking Department

Write for Booklet.

NEW YORK MORTGAGE CO.

Dept. D, 1475 Broadway, New York City

THE STEPPING-STONE TO WEALTH is the systematic saving of money. You and members of your family can easily cultivate this admirable habit by putting a dime in every day. Your money accumulates rapidly. Deposit of each coin registered automatically. Capacity $30. Bank opens when $5 or multiple thereof has been deposited. Cannot be opened otherwise. Made of solid steel, oxidized copper finish. Size 2½x3¾ ins. Price $1.00, prepaid in U. S. Money back if not satisfactory. An appropriate Xmas gift. Order NOW.

Grab's Keyless Basket Bank

VICTOR M. GRAB & CO., 827 Ashland Block, Chicago, Ill.

TYPEWRITERS ALL MAKES

VISIBLE WRITERS

or otherwise

L. S. SMITHS, OLIVERS, UNDERWOODS, Etc.

¼ to ½ M'F'RS PRICES

Shipped ANYWHERE for Free Trial, or RENTED allowing Rent to APPLY

PRICES $15.00 UP

First Class Machines Fresh from the Mfrs—Write for Illustrated Catalog 71

Typewriter Emporium, (EST. 1892) 34-36 LAKE ST., CHICAGO

Buying and Selling Securities

A VERY competent authority has said that "there is no question connected with investments of more importance than the ability to judge whether market conditions are favorable for the purchase of securities."

In addition to knowing how to judge the value of all forms of investment a thorough knowledge must be had of the principles that control the rise and fall of securities. A man needs no large experience to account for the variations in prices of the life necessities, that are influenced largely by weather conditions, for here the demand is constantly increasing while the supply may not keep pace with it, thus resulting in an increased demand and higher prices; but the amount of securities, such as we are considering, is fixed with reasonable certainty. It follows from this that any increase in the value of securities must arise from a demand that for the time makes that form of investment desirable, and adds to its selling value.

The man whose knowledge enables him to see when a particular form of security is going to take an upward turn can, if he have the money to buy, turn this knowledge into cash, without the effort or risk usually incident to such gains.

The Principles Involved

As a rule, the market movements of all negotiable securities are controlled by two forces, which sometimes act in opposition to each other, while again they may move in concert. One of these influences is the current rate of interest at which free money is loaned, the other is the general condition of business. A low rate of interest, or, indeed, the prospect of a near low rate, has the effect of increasing the market value of securities whether they be income-producing or purely speculative, the purpose being to keep all money active and productive. Even banks and other money-lending institutions are forced into the security market when they cannot make loans to advantage. On the other hand, a high rate of interest or the prospect of a high rate invariably depresses the prices of securities, for at such times the banks and other large holders sell their stocks and bonds, for the very good reason that they can use the ready money to greater advantage. These fluctuations, like the ebb and flow of the tides, which we have so often brought in to illustrate, regulate themselves harmoniously, though, unlike the tides, their regularity and continuance can never be foretold or depended on.

Clearly, the time to buy securities whose normal condition is favorable is when they are at or near their lowest, and this is the time when the man with some money and the essential knowledge can invest to the greatest advantage.

The other factor that affects the prices of securities is the general business conditions. When there is good business, or the promise of such conditions, the tendency of securities is to advance. An unpromising outlook or dull business has a contrary effect, for at such times there is no great demand for money, nor any inclination to invest.

When these two forces work together, as they sometimes do, the effect is always felt, for low rates of interest and good business conditions are irresistible in stimulating financial activity. At such infrequent times all classes seem to work together, though not, we may be sure, with equal success.

Experience, however, has demonstrated that money rates and business are seldom in harmony. The rule is that bad business means low rates of interest, and good business high rates, for in the latter case ready money is always in demand. As business conditions become hard the easier money becomes. These conditions have a different effect on different kinds of securities, for at such times high-grade stocks and bonds may decline, middle-grade securities remain stationary, and poor securities advance, and all at the same time.

Is It Guess-Work?

It will be seen from the foregoing that the market for securities has a decidedly irregular appearance, and it would seem to justify the general inference that future security prices are all a matter of guess-work, and that they are entirely controlled by interested influences; but, while there is much to confirm this contention, the student of finance—which is a branch of general economics—knows, with the certainty of a mathematical demonstration, that price movements are directed by laws as certain as those that control the operations of nature about us. Let us cite an example by way of illustration:

Assuming that interest rates are low and business conditions bad, with the prospect of a still worse state of affairs, what will be the effect on the different kinds of securities? In such a condition it should be expected that securities of a high grade, whose safety cannot be affected by bad business conditions, will advance, as their interest is sure to be met. Bonds of a middle grade must remain about stationary, low money rates tending to advance their price and the fear of decreasing earnings tending to depress them. But the lowest grade of bonds and stocks, whose margin of security, at the best of times, is not great, are pretty sure to fall off as investments, though, under such conditions, they are apt to stimulate that form of speculation that deals through margins, and which is at the best but a legalized form of gambling. It should be understood that securities are not divided into the three classes we have named by way of illustration, for they shade off one into the other, almost imperceptibly.

Alternating Periods

The combined effect of the two influences just described is to produce regular swings in prices. The indications that precede these changes are not so difficult to follow by those whose experience has taught them to read aright the financial ebb and flow. Even a cursory study of the history of the alternating rise and fall in business conditions will show that they move in cycles, practically of the same length.

It is a fact that a financial crisis usually follows a period of great business prosperity. With the crisis money decreases in circulation and lies heaped up, profitless and idle in the banks. Water piled up behind the dam must find an outlet through an increased spill-way, or it will overflow, or perhaps sweep away the restraining barrier. The banks try to relieve the money pressure by diverting it, or rather converting it into interest-bearing securities. At such times rates on loans are at their lowest, but not many are made, for a low per cent. is no inducement to borrow when business is stagnant.

After a time activity begins to assert itself, at first somewhat timidly, but with ever increasing vigor and confidence. Rates of interest rise in response to the growing demand for capital. New enterprises spring from the brains of men and assume a tangible form, and soon the world of business, seemingly refreshed by its late sleep, is in the full possession of that vigor which year after year has tended to build up individual fortunes, and to add to the wealth of the nation in a way that was not dreamed of by our fathers.

Convertible 6% Notes at Par

We offer and recommend at par and interest the Three-year Convertible 6% Coupon Gold Notes of a public service corporation having an exclusive 20-year franchise in a city of over 200,000 population. This issue is secured by bonds equal to 237% of the total amount of outstanding notes, and the net earnings applicable to interest on the issue are more than five and one-half times the amount required. Full particulars on application.

Ask for Circular No. C-142

Guaranty Trust Company of New York

28 Nassau Street

Fifth Avenue Branch 5th Ave. & 43d St. — London Office 33 Lombard St., E.C.

Capital and Surplus - $23,000,000

Deposits - - - 161,000,000

You Ought to Have the New 5% Book

¶ Every man or woman who is interested in the conservative investment of money ought to have it.

¶ It is free for the asking—there is a copy for you.

¶ This Company has been in business 17 years. It pays 5 per cent interest on money entrusted to its care and has never been a day late in the mailing of semi-annual interest checks.

¶ It allows the withdrawal of money at any time without notice and without loss of interest.

¶ Every dollar invested with it is amply secured by first mortgages on improved real estate deposited in trust with one of the strongest trust companies in Baltimore.

¶ Nothing could be sounder—more conservative—more desirable as an investment for savings or idle funds.

Write today for the Book

Calvert Mortgage & Deposit Co.

1046 Calvert Bldg., Baltimore, Md.

AGENTS 100% Profit

Hundreds are coining money selling Novelty Knives. Many styles and sizes. Transparent handles, decorated with secret society emblems, photos, address, etc. Hundreds of designs to choose from. Easy sellers. Big profits. D. Wilson, one of our hustlers reports:

ONE MONTH'S PROFIT $260

C. E. Warner, another live one, made $60.00 in 8 days, working in the noon hour only. We want more like them. Why not you? No experience needed. We teach you how. Exclusive territory. Elegant sample outfit furnished. Catalog and terms on request. Don't wait—Write quick—Today.

Novelty Cutlery Co., 269 Bar St., Canton, O.

PATENTS How to GET Every Dollar Your Invention is Worth.

Send 8 cents stamps for new 128 page book of Vital Interest to Inventors.

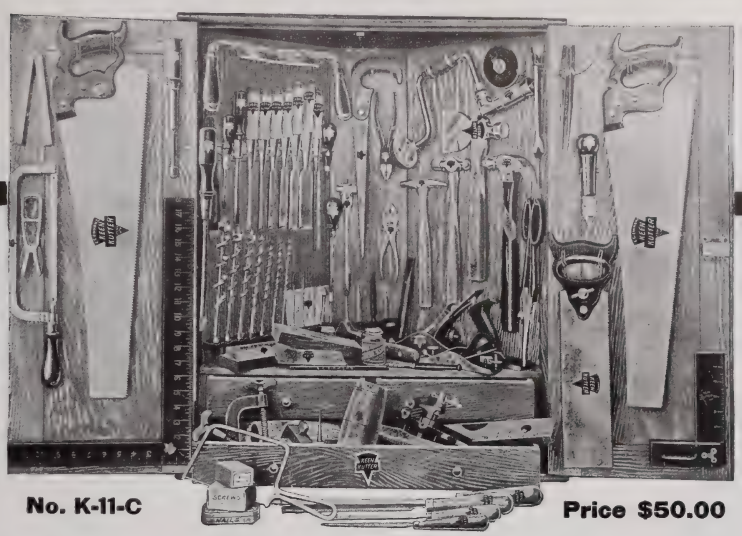
R. S. & A. B. LACEY, Dept. 36 Washington, D. C.

It Is Time To Invest

The Farmer, (the man who feeds you) needs money—just the same as the manufacturer.

Many of our farmers are buying more live stock, erecting buildings, helping their children to get homes, and in many other ways, having a legitimate use for money.

IT IS TIME FOR YOU TO INVEST in Farm Mortgages. You can probably increase your income now from 10% to 50% and better the quality of your security. Why not do it?



Selected mortgages on productive farm land in the Great Northwest are the equal of any bond in point of security and with the added advantage of a better rate of interest (6%).

Our Booklet "A" tells how investors can deal with us advantageously. Write for it today.

WELLS & DICKEY COMPANY

Established 1878 — Security Bank Building

Capital and Surplus $700,000 — Minneapolis, Minn.

No. K-11-C Price $50.00

KEEN KUTTER

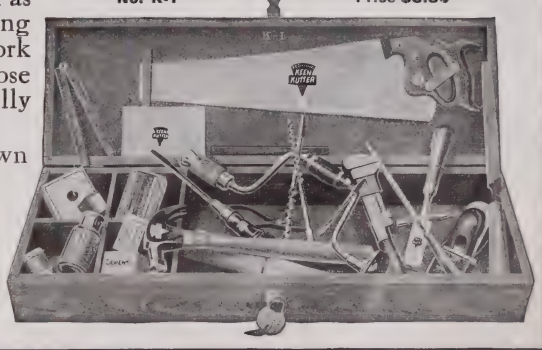
Tool Cabinets for Christmas Gifts

Next time you pass a hardware store just notice the men and boys looking in the windows, especially if there is a display of tools.

This shows what an attraction good tools are to all boys and men and how they appreciate a cabinet of sharp, true tools of the very best quality.

Keen Kutter Tool Cabinets furnish the only really appropriate kits for home or shop use because every tool is guaranteed perfect and of highest grade. Tools bought one at a time, regardless of make or name, are sure to prove unsatisfactory, and home tools should be so good that they hold their temper, edge and adjustment without frequent grinding and setting.

Keen Kutter Tool Cabinets are the only ones made containing a complete set of guaranteed tools under one name and trade mark.



Every tool has a place, so it will not be ruined by knocking about with others.

Working materials are included, such as screws, nails, tacks, wire, glue, sand-paper, brads, oil, oil can, etc.

Keen Kutter Tool Cabinets come in many sizes, containing various assortments. Here are two—one at $50.00, adequate for a carpenter or cabinetmaker, and one at $8.50, containing all tools needed for small jobs around the house, such as putting up shelves, weather strips or making screens. Then there is one at $125.00 with work bench, and many others at prices between those mentioned. Remember each tool individually is the best tool made and is guaranteed.

E. C. SIMMONS KEEN KUTTER TRADE MARK REG. CUTLERY AND TOOLS U.S. PAT. OFF.

No. K-1 Price $8.50

Sold for over 45 years under this well-known motto:

"The Recollection of Quality Remains Long After the Price is Forgotten."

—E. C. Simmons.

Trade Mark Registered.

IF NOT AT YOUR DEALER'S, WRITE US

SIMMONS HARDWARE COMPANY (Inc.)
St. Louis and New York, U. S. A.

From a photograph of a

"Wear-Ever" Aluminum Saucepan

in which tomatoes purposely were burned to a char and then one-half the utensil cleaned by boiling for a few minutes and then scraping with a wooden spoon.

The utensil is not injured. It can be entirely cleaned and will give as good service as if it had not been burned at all. Heat passes through aluminum twice as fast as through tin and three times as fast as through iron. There is no "local overheating"—which is the cause of burning—unless more heat is used than is necessary.

If not obtainable at your dealer's, fill in and mail the coupon below, enclosing 15 two-cent stamps (Canadian stamps accepted), and we'll send you, prepaid, the 1-quart saucepan pictured.

Write for booklet, "The Wear-Ever Kitchen."

Replace utensils that wear out with utensils that "Wear-Ever"

THE ALUMINUM COOKING UTENSIL CO.
Dept. 34, New Kensington, Pa., or NORTHERN ALUMINUM CO., Ltd., Toronto, Ontario
(Distributing Agents for Canada)

Please send me, prepaid, sample 1-quart "Wear-Ever" Saucepan, for which I enclose 15 two-cent stamps (30c) money to be refunded if I'm not satisfied.

Name .....

Address .....

Dealer's Name .....

You Can Weigh What You Should Weigh

You can, I know it, because I have reduced 25,000 women and have built up as many more — scientifically, naturally, without drugs, in the privacy of their own rooms; I can build up your vitality—at the same time I strengthen your heart action; can teach you how to breathe, to stand, walk and relieve such ailments as nervousness, torpid liver, constipation, indigestion, etc.

One pupil writes: I weigh 83 pounds less, and I have gained wonderfully in strength." Another says: "Last May I weighed 196 pounds, this May I weigh 126, and oh! I feel SO WELL."

Write to-day for my free booklet.

SUSANNA COCROFT, Dept 18, 624 Michigan Boul, Chicago

Nulite Gasoline Table Lamp

A complete Light Plant weighing 7 lbs. Portable, absolutely safe, 300 c.p. brilliant light 1 cent per hour. Saves 90% of your light bill.

AGENTS. Write for Special Offer on complete line of gasoline lights and systems. Over 200 different styles. Highest Quality. Lowest Prices. Exclusive territory for capable town, county and traveling salesmen. 72 page illustrated catalog free. Write today.

NATIONAL STAMPING & ELECTRIC WORKS
413 So. Clinton St., Chicago, U. S. A.

Ezra's Sabbath School*

Sunday School Lesson by Dr. and Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts

THE first part of the lesson pictures a model Sabbath School of twenty-six centuries ago. We commonly speak of the Sabbath School or Sunday School as only a little more than one century old. In 1880 we celebrated its "centennial." The origin of the modern Sunday School movement is no doubt rightly credited to Robert Raikes, who in 1780 gathered poor children in "ragged schools" on Sunday, because they were engaged in child labor on other days, and taught them to read, through paid teachers, giving the schools a religious flavor by using the Bible as the reading book. Intelligent Christian parents were expected to teach their own children at home, and take them to church.

For the children of the rich whose religious training is neglected, there has been organized by some denominations a most excellent "Children's Special Service Mission"—the word "mission" having the sense of "revival" or "evangelistic movement." This "Mission" is endeavoring, with encouraging success, to show such children they are sinners, and lead them to accept the Saviour, who died for them, and to build themselves up into strong and useful manhood and womanhood by daily Bible reading, for which a uniform schedule is provided. One exemplary thing done by this mission is to hold open-air seaside meetings for children at fashionable seaside resorts. This "Special Service Mission" (whose literature can be secured on application to 12 Warwick Lane, E. C., London) the writer regards as the most evangelical and spiritual of all the religious movements for children. American Sunday Schools could learn much from its plans, which realize beautifully the conception of a "Children's Church."

Stopping a Leak

The "Men and Religion Movement," which is aiming to bring back to the churches the millions of men and boys who have dropped out in recent years, needs to find a way, first of all, to stop the great leak that begins when the boys leave the primary class, in which there are usually as many boys as girls. In the intermediate, the boys are fewer than girls, and still fewer in junior and senior classes. The way to stop this leak is to put as a hedge between the boys and the door a big class of manly men, such as only a few Sunday Schools have as yet; and to give the boys for teachers, not young girls who take the classes because the duty and privilege of teaching is persistently refused by the church officers, but men of power and experience.

The lesson story also shows another way to stop a big leak—taking the children to the preaching service. Millions drop out of the churches where the Sunday School and preaching service ought to be coupled, as they were by Ezra, when the same people, men, women and children, heard the sermon, and then stayed to have the Bible explained, verse by verse, to small groups, by the evangelistic Levites.

The best way to keep in the church the boys who are to be men, is for manly fathers to rebuild the family altar, and fill the family pew, and keep their boys from leaving the Sunday School by going with them to prove it is, and to make it still more, a manly institution.

An Outdoor Sermon

"All the people gathered into the broad place that was before the water gate" (verse 1). It was an outdoor, waterside meeting. Ezra, the priest, brought the law before the congregation, both men and women, and all that could hear with understanding. Why shouldn't we have such audiences regularly in the twentieth century, when a child of eight can understand at least as much as one of twelve could understand in the days of Ezra? In those days a young man did not attain his majority till he was thirty; but at twelve he joined the church as capable of religious responsibility. The general absence of boys from church is the chief explanation of the absence of a majority of men, and no mass meetings can do so much for men as parents can do by beginning at once to bring their children, and especially their boys, to church.

Men, Women and Children at Sabbath School

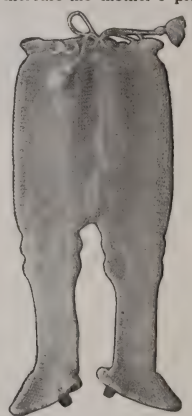
"The Levites caused the people to understand the law." It is surprising that before the days of Robert Raikes, preachers did not understand childhood and their Bibles well enough to see that there was need to gather people, especially children, in groups of like age and capacity in order to study the Bible most effectively. Parents taught these things, and the solemn preacher came along occasionally for a dreaded examination. But we have learned at last what Ezra knew so long ago, that we can best "comprehend with all saints"; that is, we need not only private study but also studies in a group, in which each is stimulated to do his best, and helped by the views of others.

After Ezra's sermon was over, the audience broke up in groups, presumably with some regard to age and capacity, and the Levites, who were ancient deacons and elders and stewards and vestrymen and trustees, because they knew more than any one but the preacher, considered it their business, as a matter of course, to do the teaching. They read again what the preacher had expounded from the long-neglected law of God, and "gave the sense" so that the people "understood the reading." No doubt the people asked many questions, for they were all in earnest to know God's will. In too many Sunday Schools, there is no tension of earnestness. The verses are read almost as if it were a counting of beads. The pupils only half listen—sometimes because the teacher is only half teaching. Sometimes the "School" is too much like a mere "school" and too little like a reverent, earnest Church. Let us ask why in some years only one teacher in eight brings even one soul to repentance in fifty-two lessons?

Decision Day

It was decision day in Ezra's Sabbath School. Every day should be decision day. Teachers may well search their hearts for a reason why their pupils do not oftener "mourn and weep" in real sorrow for sin, as they did in Ezra's Sabbath School, where the teachers held up God's law as a pure mirror, in which they saw their sins, like ugly stains on their faces. It was what Finney and early evangelists called "law work." In order that men and women and children shall desire to be cleansed, they need to see themselves as God sees them by looking in the mirror of his law, as interpreted by Jesus.

God's law, faithfully explained, made the people "mourn and weep." There must be something wrong in our teaching and preaching or there would be more real sorrow for sin. Not alone God's law, but the cross, ought to show us how wicked it is to sin against God—so great a wrong that Jesus Christ must leave heaven and bear the cross, to right that wrong, and draw men from their sin.



Nehemiah and Ezra, when the people had seen their sin as God sees it

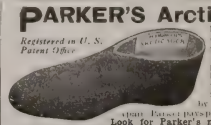
Continued on next page

* The International Sunday School Lesson for December 17, 1911. Neh. 8. GOLDEN TEXT: "The law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul Ps. 19: 7.

Grandmothers, aunts and godmothers, as well as mothers themselves, will find in the pages of The BABY BOOK a thousand happy suggestions for baby's Christmas gift. This handsome little volume describes our infinitely varied assortment of infants' merchandise, ranging from exclusive hand made imported patterns to exceptional values in inexpensive apparel of fine quality but simpler design. All the newest novelties and specialties that add to baby's comfort and appearance and increase the mother's pride.

What is more appropriate or desirable as a Christmas gift for the infant or young child than a pair of nice warm leggings? The garment here shown is made of fine quality worsted yarn, closely knitted, and has an elastic knitted cord around waist. Infants' size is made with feet in white only. Sizes 1, 2 and 3 years are made without feet and can be had in white, cardinal or black. Be sure to state age.

No. 29W4526 White. Size for infants to 1 year only.
No. 29W4528 White.
No. 29W4529 Cardinal.
No. 29W4530 Black.
Sizes, 1, 2 and 3 years.



Price, 44c

Shipping weight, 12 ounces.
Address all correspondence to

Eliza Cameron Goff

Department 29
Sears, Roebuck and Co.
Chicago

PARKER'S Arctic Socks

Registered in U. S. Patent Office

Healthful foot comfort, cleanliness, bath and sock-room. Worn over rubber boots, absorb perspiration. Made of knitted fabric, lined with soft white wool fleece. Sold in all sizes by dealers or by mail 25c per pair. Parker pays postage. Catalogue free.

Look for Parker's name in every pair.

J. H. PARKER CO., Dept. C, 25 James St., Malden, Mass.

★VACATION TRAVEL WITHOUT CASH, to those enlisting friends in our popular European tours. Pleasant, profitable work. Write today for booklets and plan. REV. G. F. NASON, Box A984, Wilmington, Del.

PHILIPSBORN'S Xmas Catalog—Free

Our Catalog shows hundreds of Idealy Appropriate Christmas Presents for all the female members of the family.

Magnificent Furs

Silk Petticoats	Sweaters
Elegant Silk Waists	Sweater Caps
Beautiful Dresses	Gloves
Stylish Wraps	Elegant Plumes
Jewelry	Birds of Paradise
Belts and Bags	Stockings
Toilet Sets	Etc., Etc.

And also the latest things in Misses', Girls' and Childrens' Wearing Apparel. In fact, everything that will delight the recipient of the gift, and will be long remembered and appreciated.

Three of the most popular and exclusive fur offerings are displayed here. They will make exceptionally handsome presents. Simply order by number as given above—entirely at our risk. Your money refunded, if not entirely satisfactory. Write for Catalog No. 874. Just mail a postal with your name and address.

PHILIPSBORN
The Outer Garment House of 212-216 W. ADAMS ST. CHICAGO.

The World Revival Songs and Hymns

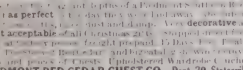
The comment is ... Here then is one of a book like this ... Many of the Moody and Sankey hymns are again in this book, and ... like "The King's Business," and the famous "Glory Song." Dr. R. A. Torry all ... It seems to me it is an unusually good collection ... The new Sunday School book that sings. The long-looked-for Revival Book ... The Sunday evening service book ... Cut out this notice and send for a copy at once ... bound ... Postpaid ... Cloth ... 100 copies ... Address

W. ELMER BAILEY, Publisher, CAREY, O.



FOR CHRISTMAS

Only $28.50 Freight Prepaid East of the Mississippi

... decorative and the most acceptable ... Christmas Gift ... Prepaid ... Piedmont Red Cedar Chests, Upholstered Wardrobe Chests, etc.

PIEDMONT RED CEDAR CHEST CO., Dept. 20, Statesville, N.C.

Maternity Skirt Pattern, Baby Record and 30 Baby Patterns

... plain patent sealed envelope postpaid for 25c. ... Write to-day ... Baby Record ... Hints to Expectant Mothers True Motherhood ... Baby's and Children's Pretty Clothing ... coupon valued at 25c ... Free. Baby's 25-piece Make-to-Order Outfits of Baby Clothes $5.75 to $25.50. Transportation charges prepaid. Money back if wanted. Estab. 1892.
Mrs. C. F. Atsma, 78 Atsma Block, Newark, N.J.

THE LAND WHERE THEY NEVER GROW OLD

PHILIP ROBERTS — BENJAMIN FRANKLIN BUTTS

COPYRIGHT, 1911, BY BENJ'MIN F. BUTTS.

Dedicated to Rev. R. F. A. Pierce, D.D., New York City

Sunday School Lesson

Continued from preceding page

and repented, comforted them by showing that God's law is really a revelation of love. When one desires to turn from sin, God stands ready to help. And so the repentant people were bidden to go home to feasts that should celebrate the joy of forgiveness, not only in what they ate but also in what they gave to the poor, whom some of them had wronged. It was repentance and restitution. It was also being "saved to serve."

The Gladness of a Christian Life

"All the people went their way to eat, and to drink, and to send portions, and to make great mirth" (verse 12). We do not know that this feast was on the Sabbath, but the dinner of the Sabbath ought to be, not a fast but a feast; only we should keep no one from the feast of the soul to prepare it, and we should deepen its gladness by seeing that the poor are not left to hunger while we feast. Let us in our lives be so gladsome that we shall not belie the Bible's frequent picture of Christian life as a "feast." The writer has heard a preacher expound the parable of the wedding feast without smiling himself or kindling a smile in all his solemn audience, putting the emphasis on those who missed the feast instead of on those who entered in. Reverence and decorum have too frequently been carried in church and outside to the extreme of funereal solemnity. "Be glad in the Lord and rejoice, ye righteous; and shout for joy, all ye that are upright in heart." To cure the over-solemn preacher or teacher and his over-solemn audience or class, we prescribe the reading, by aid of the concordance, of the Bible's eight hundred commands and exhortations to "rejoice" and "be glad."

1847 ROGERS BROS. XS TRIPLE

"Silver Plate that Wears"

The grade of triple-plate fully guaranteed by the largest silver manufacturers in the world.

One of the newer designs is the "SHARON," illustrated in cream ladle—a handsome pattern with the richness and character of solid silver.

Sold by all leading dealers. Send for illustrated catalogue "M-57."

MERIDEN BRITANNIA CO.
(International Silver Co., Successor)
MERIDEN, CONN.
New York Chicago
San Francisco
Hamilton, Canada

Unique Calendar of the Southland
for 1912

The Dixie Book of Days

Entertaining and instructive daily quotations that reveal the romance, folklore, humor, literature, and history of the South.

Distinctly Southern but national in interest

Cover with hand-some photogravures; each inside sheet covers one week and has space for notes. Two colors throughout.

Price, $1. Order through your bookstore, or sent by mail on receipt of price.

The Page Publishing Association
Dept. A, 849 Park Ave., Baltimore, Md.

LABLACHE
FACE POWDER

PERFECT BEAUTY

assures the poise which comes from knowing you appear at your best. Thousands of women gain that confidence by using LABLACHE. It beautifies the delicate tissues, smooths the wrinkles and gives the skin that youthful velvety appearance which imparts the desired touch of refinement.

Refuse substitutes.

They may be dangerous. Flesh, White, Pink or Cream. 50c. a box of druggists or by mail. Send 10 cts. for a sample box.

BEN. LEVY CO.,
French Perfumers
Dept. 22,125 Kingston Street,
BOSTON, MASS.

Grace Morrissey — Copyright 1911.

Buy for cash direct from factory

Buy first quality furniture direct from our factories—pay cash and save ½. We're giving the greatest values in fine furniture in America—we sell only for cash,—you save the dealer's and jobber's profits and the time-payment losses. If you're planning to furnish a home or need a few extra pieces for your parlor, dining-room, library or bedroom—write us — get our cash catalogue IT'S FREE—No matter where you live you can enjoy the full benefit of our great furniture values. Note this great money saving rocker offer:

$10 Rocker $4.95

It makes a hand some Xmas Gift—

The seat is deep, and roomy — 20½ in. square and built on extra finished tempered spiral steel springs — back 37 in. high. Entire rocker covered with guaranteed Boston leather—front and edge of back handsomely ruffled—back diamond tufted. Arms and front studded with two rows of large Boston leather covered tacks.

You'll pay $10 for this rocker at time-payment houses — our cash price (you save half)..... $4.95

If you're not satisfied, return at our expense and we will refund your money.

GET OUR CASH CATALOGUE—IT'S FREE

A Postal Card will bring it to you

PHILLIPS BROS. & WEIL

Direct from factory to you

Dept. E, 819 West 63rd Street, CHICAGO

SAVE OIL MONEY

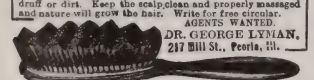
Buy the 50c Half Pint Household Size 3-in-One Oil. You'll get just as much oil as if you bought 8 of the 10c size. Why not be economical? 3-in-One keeps indefinitely—never turns rancid. 1000 uses in every home or office.

3-in-One is the best lubricant for locks, clocks, sewing machines, talking machines, guns, reels, etc.

Best preparation for cleaning and polishing furniture. Prevents rust on metal surfaces, indoors and out. Library Slip with every bottle.

At all Good Dealers

3 IN ONE



3-IN-ONE OIL COMPANY

42 CH Broadway, New York

THIS NEW HAIR BRUSH COMBS AND BRUSHES THE HAIR AND MASSAGES THE SCALP.

The greatest modern invention for keeping the hair beautiful and fluffy and the scalp clean, healthful and free from dandruff or dirt. Keep the scalp clean and properly massaged and nature will grow the hair. Write for free circular.

AGENTS WANTED.

DR. GEORGE LYMAN,
217 Hill St., Peoria, Ill.

THIS ELEGANT BLACK PONY SKIN PLUSH COAT $5.95

This swell, handsome garment is made of Chase's best quality, heavy black pony skin plush, of rich and clinging-less finish. Looks exactly like a $50.00 Genuine Pony Skin Coat. Take an expert to tell them apart. It's latest Paris design for Winter, 1912. A strikingly handsome, finely tailored garment, made in the charming, shapely semi-fitting model, with large, handsome, deep shawl collar, latest turn-back cuffs; deep vents in side seams; elegant large art buttons. Full lined with beautiful satin mercerine, sateen, 52 in. long. Sizes 34 to 44 in. bust measure. Wt. 7¼ lbs.

SEND $1.00 DEPOSIT wanted and we will send you this elegant, extra quality, black pony skin plush coat, C. O. D. by express subject to examination. The balance, $4.95 and express charges you pay the agent after you find the coat perfectly satisfactory, as swell and handsome a coat as you ever saw and the equal in appearance of any $50.00 genuine pony skin coat, otherwise refuse to take it. It will be returned at our expense and we will promptly refund your $1.00. Order the coat today or write for our BIG FREE SPECIAL FASHION BOOK which shows over 1,000 elegant pictures of rare and beautiful Fall and Winter garments at wonder prices. Women's and misses' coats $3.95 up, suits $4.90 up, dresses $2.25 up, skirts $1.98 up, petticoats 50c up, waists 45c up, and immense assortments of dainty muslin underwear and children's and infants' garments and shawls at startlingly low prices. We are headquarters for ladies', misses' and children's FURS OF ALL KINDS at below regular wholesale prices.

Write today for our BIG FREE SPECIAL FASHION BOOK

Full line shown in the SPECIAL FASHION BOOK.

JOHN M. SMYTH CO. 150-162 West Madison Street CHICAGO

Mine Own

WHEN for me the silent oar
Parts the silent river,
And I stand upon the shore
Of the strange forever,
Shall I miss the loved ones known?
Shall I vainly seek mine own?

Then will One approach the brink,
With a hand extended,
One whose thoughts I loved to think
Ere the veil was rended,
Saying, "Welcome, we have died
And again are side by side."

Can the bonds that make us here
Know ourselves immortal
Drop away like foliage sear
At life's inner portal?
What is holiest below
Must for ever holier grow.

He who'on our earthly path
Bids us help each other,
Who His well-beloved hath
Made our Elder Brother,
Will but clasp the chain of love
Closer when we meet above.

Therefore dread I not to go
O'er the silent river,
Death, thy hastening on I know.
Bear me, Thou life giver,
Through the waters to the shore,
Where mine own have gone before.

—Selected.

A World-Famous Painting

See Illustration on Cover Page

FOR fifteen centuries, the ideal Mother with the Holy Child has been the subject of the most beautiful and precious productions of human genius and skill. Greatest writers, painters, wood-carvers, sculptors, poets have attempted the portrayal of the ideal likeness of the mother of Jesus. In painting, none has surpassed Raphael, "the inspired artist of the Italian Renaissance." It is said of him that his whole life was a triumph of beautiful achievements. No deep sorrow ever came to him, and he won all things by the quiet force of his loving and great nature. "Let him become my pupil," said his master, the great Perugino; "he will soon become my master." When he died, the great pupil-master wrote of his master-pupil, "He loved beauty and he pictured it; he loved poetry and he wrote it; he loved philosophy, a deep philosophy of generous feeling, and of kindly thoughts for all of the world, and he lived it." At thirty-seven, the brilliant career of the greatest artist the world has ever known was ended. In less than twenty years Raphael had painted upwards of two hundred and eighty pictures, among which the Sistine Madonna in the Dresden Gallery is reckoned easily the greatest painting in the world, and to which the "Madonna della Sedia" (The Madonna of the Chair), which is reproduced on the cover of this issue, alone ranks second.

Happy Cozy Corner Days

Continued from page 1245

signal. And no pony looks so smart or interested in his work as the well-groomed Shetland in the neat little cart. No Shetland pony was ever mean or vindictive by nature. They are born patient and teachable and willing.

Lady Constance and Rob Roy were as much a part of our family life as the babies. I have known them to be admitted to family parties and to weddings and funerals. In a word, the shaggy litle animals, more resembling wild bears than any of the horse tribe, adapt themselves with astonishing readiness to the habits of the family. Sagacious, cunning and gentle if kindly treated, they are almost as loyal and loving as a fine dog.

Remember, this is a true story of my own little girlhood, and if you care to know anything more about Shetland ponies, you may write and ask, always.

Very lovingly and faithfully yours,

The Aunt in the Cozy Corner

Why Beautiful Homes Are Lined With Compo-Board

The Modern Wall Lining

It is superior and so much more satisfactory than lath and plaster in every way that it makes an irresistible appeal to the wise home builder.

It is quicker to put on and lasts longer. In thousands of cases its permanent reliability has been put to tests of from five to twelve years. It does not peel off, or sag, like plaster. It will not mar by knocking furniture against it. Durability means economy.

The Poorest Home Builder Can Afford Compo-Board

Most artistic effects can be obtained with Compo-Board in plain, papered, or kalsomined walls, or in a large variety of panel designs.

It is moisture proof and sanitary---impervious to heat and cold---keeps the house warm in winter and cool in summer.

Compo-Board has many other uses about the house and yard---making an extra room in the attic or basement, finishing off summer houses, building partitions and remodeling old houses. Can be nailed over old plaster. Compo-Board is sold in strips 4 feet wide and 1 to 18 feet long, and is carried in stock by dealers in nearly every town and city. Write for our

Free Book and Sample

Learn all about this modern wall lining, why it is economical and how you can use it to advantage. It will be to your profit to write today.

NORTHWESTERN COMPO-BOARD CO., 4305 Lyndale Ave., No. Minneapolis, - - - Minn.

The Berkshire Hills Sanatorium
For the Scientific and Effective Treatment of CANCER
Without Resorting to Surgical Procedure

The only private institution of magnitude in the United States for the exclusive treatment of Cancer and other malignant and benign new growths. Conducted by a physician of standing. Established thirty-two years.

For complete information address
Berkshire Hills Sanatorium, North Adams, Massachusetts

65 Christmas Samples 10c

THE MOST WONDERFUL PACKAGE EVER OFFERED

It contains beautiful Christmas Post Cards in colors, gold and embossed, Christmas Tags, Christmas Labels, Christmas Stamps and Christmas Seals in colors and gold. Remember, everyone sending for a package of 65 Christmas Samples for 10c will receive our Special Wholesale Offer. Ladies, Girls and Boys can make money selling the packages to their neighbors and friends. Do not delay, but send now, today, for a package. HERMAN & CO., 2430 North Halsted St., Dept. X. 374, CHICAGO

AGENTS PORTRAITS, 25c, FRAMES, 15c. Sheet Pictures, 1c. Stereoscopes, 25c. Views, 1c. 30 days' credit. Samples and catalog free. Consolidated Portrait Co., Dept. 2499, 1027 W. Adams St., Chicago

LADIES MAKE $3 TO $5 DAILY Selling Dress Goods, Skirts and Handkerchiefs. Free outfit. No capital required. MUTUAL FABRIC CO., Dept. 377, Binghamton, N. Y.

Posed for a Picture

This Photograph was taken especially for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD on the Simpson Pony Farm, near Aurora, Ill.

The Shetland Ponies are two years old and their names are "Trinket May" and "Trinket Marie."

The Christian Herald Boy who makes the best record during the next few weeks will receive one of these beautiful ponies as an especial reward.

All Boys have an equal opportunity—The Pony Circular will tell you all about it.

Any Boy can start to-day to get customers for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. We will supply the first ten copies FREE of all costs—fifty cents' worth. Steady profit and many cash and premium prizes can be earned every week.

Many Boys earn several dollars every week in return for a little time spent after school hours. Write us to-day.

SPECIAL COUPON

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD,
Bible House, New York City. Date.....

Please send me a start in business and tell me all about how I may win the beautiful Shetland Pony, if I do good work.

Signed.....

Address.....

Age..... Town..... State.....

GOD ANSWERS PRAYER

I KNOW not by what methods rare,
But this I know—God answers prayer.
I know not when He sends the word
That tells us fervent prayer is heard.

I know it cometh soon or late;
Therefore we need to pray and wait.

I know not if the blessing sought
Will come in just the guise I thought.

I leave my prayers with Him alone
Whose will is wiser than my own.
—Exchange.

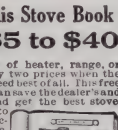
Cash or Credit

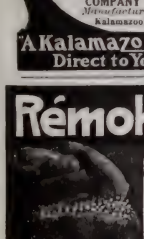
On This Magnificent Base Burner



A great, big, handsome double heater that's an ornament to any room and that throws more heat than you ever thought a stove could develop. Shipped right from our factory, freight prepaid, to your home to try free for 30 days, shipment in 24 hours. Then 360 days approval test. 170,000 have bought Kalamazoo Stoves backed by the famous $100,000 bank bond guarantee. Don't buy anywhere until you have our stove book.

Get This Stove Book

Save $5 to $40

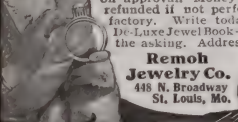


on your purchase of heater, range, or gas stove. Why pay two prices when the Kalamazoo is guaranteed best of all. This free book tells you how you can save the dealer's and middlemen's profits and get the best stove made. Over 400 stoves to choose from and a low factory price for every purse. Write a postal giving your name and address for Catalogue No. 103.

KALAMAZOO STOVE COMPANY
Manufacturers
Kalamazoo, Mich.

A Kalamazoo Direct to You — And Gas Stoves Too

Rémoh Gems



Not Imitations

The greatest triumph of the electric furnace—a marvelously reconstructed gem. Looks like a diamond—wears like a diamond—brilliancy guaranteed forever—stands filing, fire and acid like a diamond. Has no paste, foil or artificial backing. Set only in 14 Karat Solid gold mountings, 1-30th., the cost of diamonds. Guaranteed to contain no glass—will cut glass. Sent on approval. Money cheerfully refunded if not perfectly satisfactory. Write today for our De-Luxe Jewel Book—its free for the asking. Address—

Remoh Jewelry Co.
448 N. Broadway
St. Louis, Mo.

$1 English Knock-about Hat

A stylish serviceable hat. Genuine Fur Felt. Folds into compact roll without damaging. Can be shaped into Alpine or Telescope. Trimmings. Colors: Black, Steel Gray, Brown. Actual value $2.00. Sent postpaid promptly on receipt of $1.00. State size and color wanted. Money refunded if not satisfactory.

Packed in Beautiful Holiday Boxes

PANAMA HAT CO., Dept. C, 830 Broadway, New York City

PEARLS XMAS

Frederics famous scientific pearls in Graduated Strings including Artificial Pearl and Diamond Cluster Clasp. Regularly sold at $5.00 SPECIAL $3.00

Illustrated Catalog Sent for 10c Postage

Three New York Stores FREDERICS Unusual Jewelry Manufacturers

Address Mail Order Office
53 West 37th St. New York

CORNS

must go when A-Corn Salve is used. They come out by the roots without pain or danger. 15 cents at druggists' or by mail.

Giant Chemical Co., Philadelphia

John D. Rockefeller Accused

ONE of the most dramatic chapters from the story of high finance that has ever reached the public was retold on November 22 before the House Committee, which is investigating the United States Steel Corporation. The Stanley Committee, as it is usually called, had summoned before it Leonidas Merritt, one of the family which, by the discovery of iron ore in the Mesaba Range in Minnesota and by the development of the finds—at first by sheer manual labor—had amassed a fortune of at least $6,000,000. This wealth was all tied up in the mining property of the family, and when ready money was needed for the development of railway connections, Leonidas Merritt went to New York to make the necessary arrangements. He came in contact with John D. Rockefeller, who, through the mediation of the Rev. F. T. Gates, agreed to lend the necessary $420,000 as a call loan on the condition that the Merritt company be merged with Mr. Rockefeller's. Mr. Merritt understood this loan would not be called until the stock in the company, which Mr. Rockefeller had taken as security, was liquidated and converted into bonds. To this agreement, he claims, Mr. Rockefeller did not adhere. He stated that Mr. Gates came to him and announced that Mr. Rockefeller had made his plans, but that his remaining in the company with his brothers depended entirely upon their accepting Mr. Rockefeller's dictation.

Mr. Merritt said: "I was amazed when I heard Rockefeller's plan contemplated throwing down other stockholders. My brother told Gates we had laws in our country, and to do what was asked would land us in jail. He said he would not do it for all Rockefeller's money. Gates insisted that Rockefeller would protect us. Then I turned to Gates and said: 'You came from Rockefeller. Go back to Rockefeller and tell him that when I want to steal I shall steal for myself and for no one else.'"

During the course of the hearing Mr. Merritt was asked: "What was the value of your securities put up to cover that Rockefeller loan?"

"About $10,000,000," he replied.

"Then your negotiations with Rockefeller lasted only a few months?" "Yes."

"At the end of that time did you own the railroad?" "No."

"Did you own any of the mining stock or any of the mines?" "No."

"What did you have?"

"I had a chance to walk from New York to Duluth on the ties. That was all I had in sight. Gates told me I would have to walk the cross-ties, and that I could no longer swell around as a wealthy mineral man. I could not think how I could have gone down into New York with millions and in a few months have lost it all."

On the day following the publication of these remarkable charges by Mr. Merritt, Mr. Rockefeller promptly issued his version of the case, which gives it a totally different aspect. His statement denies that he ever called the Merritt loans. He loaned them $420,000 in the summer of 1893 in various amounts. In 1894 they applied to him again and he loaned them an additional $480,000. The Merritts sold him 90,000 shares of stock at $10 a share, to cover this loan; the members of the family contributing different proportions. He gave them each a one year's option at the same price they had sold it with six per cent. interest. Two of the Merritts subsequently took back their stock under the option; but the others never exercised their privilege. Further, Mr. Rockefeller has produced and published a statement, signed by all the members of the Merritt family, twenty in number, and their counsel, dated January 27, 1897, in which all charges of fraud and misrepresentation in connection with their dealings with Mr. Rockefeller are denied and they fully exonerate him from all such charges and claims.

For Christmas

All the World Loves a Ring for Christmas. Give Rings This Year

We Replace Lost Stones in These Rings—Free

The giving of rings for Christmas is now more satisfactory than ever. For here are rings with the stones guaranteed secure. They are W-W-W Rings—a perpetual pleasure because the stones don't come out. That's our unlimited guarantee, no matter what jeweler you buy of, or what price you pay. It applies to all kinds of stones save diamonds. It holds good as long as the ring is worn. It makes W-W-W Rings real investments. It saves all worry of losing the stones.

How We Set Them

We begin with molten gold and construct W-W-W Rings ourselves, by hand, in our sunlighted workrooms. There is no patent method—nothing but minutely careful work. A perfectly set stone stays set for years, so we build ours that way and guarantee them.

W-W-W Rings

are made for men, women and young people. There are over 3,000 exclusive designs, including every variety of stones. Equally beautiful rings are produced by no other maker. Our people make rings only. That's why we lead.

See these dainty works of art at your jeweler's. If he hasn't them, we will name a jeweler who has. Look inside for the mark "W-W-W."

Write for the catalog. See what these rings are like before you buy anywhere else. Beautiful W-W-W Rings can be had for $2 to $25.

White, Wile & Warner, Dept. J, Buffalo, N.Y.
Makers of Solid Gold Rings, in which the stones do stay (6)

This is a picture of my big confectionery store in Springfield, Ohio.

The money I earned, selling Popcorn Crispettes---a new, delicious confection---enabled me to establish it.

My Popcorn Crispette Machine made me a rich man. Any other man who goes at it as I did can make a lot of money. I am just a common, everyday sort of fellow. No reason why I should do any better than you.

Write me today. I'll tell you how I built my big business. I'll tell you just how I went about it---how you can do the same.

If you follow instructions you should make more money this fall and winter than you ever dreamed of. Somewhere in your town there is a small store---a half-store, a little nook or even a store window---where you can set up your machine and make money. You can start at home if you wish.

POPCORN CRISPETTES BUILT THIS BIG BUSINESS FOR ME

I stand ready to help other men to make good; men who have business hopes; who are anxious to make lots of money.

Every Time You Take in a Nickel You Make Almost Four Cents Profit

You'll have a good thing all to yourself. I furnish a secret formula for making Crispettes; it's different from anything else. So you escape competition. People buy and buy and buy Popcorn Crispettes because of the taste. They're so different---so tasty and tempting, folks want more and more of them.

In my literature I tell you all about them; about men who have made big money with the machine, and the men tell you how they did it. It's very interesting reading.

Making money isn't nearly as hard as it seems. Half of success is in making the start---the other half is nerve, judgment add a good proposition. I have the proposition---you have the courage---nerve---judgment. Put the three together NOW and make money as I did. At least investigate. Look into the proposition. Get my story, and the story of other men who are making money with a Long Popcorn Crispette Machine. Write today.

W. Z. LONG, 431 High Street, Springfield, Ohio

LOW PRICES for this handsome FENCE

100 other styles. Many cheaper than wood—all better. For Lawns, Churches, Parks, etc. Write for Pattern Book and special offer.
THE WARD FENCE CO., Box 904 Decatur, Ind.

Ladies' Aids and other church organizations are paying off debts and raising money through our Special Church Aid Plan. Write for it. Address SPECIAL WORK DEPT., Capitol Brush Co., Hartford, Conn.

FREE THIS ALADDIN LAMP FREE

BURNS KEROSENE (Coal Oil)

Outshines city gas or electricity. Simple, noiseless, odorless, clean, safe, money-saving. Guaranteed. Write nearest office for catalogue M and learn how to get an Aladdin Mantle Lamp FREE.

AGENTS ... A. H. BALL SOLD 850 on money back guarantee, not one returned. Stacey sold 12 in one hour. Newsom sold 12 in 1½ calls. Gibson sold 48 in 5 days. Sells itself. Needed in every home. Our Sunbeam Burner fits other lamps. Complete line for homes, stores, etc. Ask for our liberal agency proposition.

MANTLE LAMP CO. OF AMERICA, Dept. 3P
Offices at—Chicago, Ill., Portland, Ore., Waterbury, Conn., Dallas, Tex., Winnipeg, Montreal, Canada

Handsome Furnishings Of All Kinds Given With Purchases Of Household Supplies

No. 605

Beveled-plate Mirror with heavy solid gilt frame, 3 in. wide. Size, 29x51 in. Given with a $10.00 purchase of Larkin Products.

Dining-room Oil Dome-Light. Cathedral-Glass Shade; choice of Green or Amber, with 4-in. Glass-Bead Fringe to match. Also offered equipped for Gas or Electricity. Given with a $10.00 purchase of Larkin Products.

SEND FOR OUR MONEY-SAVER CATALOG

You can obtain everything you need to make your home cozy and attractive without any extra expense by purchasing your household-supplies direct from us, the manufacturers. We offer you Furniture, Carpets, Portieres, Lamps, Dishes, Silverware,—altogether over 1500 articles to select from, all thoroughly up-to-date and strictly reliable merchandise. Thousands of housewives, all over the country, have furnished their homes without expense—

By LARKIN Factory-to-Family Dealing

It is a practical and easy way of saving. You must buy Tea, Coffee, Spices and other food products, Soaps, etc., regularly. Our Products number 500 such necessities, each of the very highest quality.

You get just as much for your money, in whatever Products you purchase from us, as you would anywhere. You also get in addition the handsome furnishings offered by us which represent the saved profits and expenses of the wholesaler, salesagent and retailer.

This is our thirty-seventh year in business. We consider no sale complete unless you are perfectly satisfied with the quality of our Products and Premium.

30 Days' Free Trial—

You can test the quality of our goods and the economy of dealing with us without risk.

Larkin Co.
BUFFALO, N. Y.
If West-of-the-Mississippi send to Peoria, Ill.

SIMPLY FILL IN AND MAIL THIS COUPON
Larkin Co. Please mail your Large Fall Catalog No. 63
Name.....
Address.....
(G. P.) 178

A WELL-SPENT LIFE*

THE poet Browning tells us that the last of life is the best part of it, "for which the first was made." "Young, all lay in dispute," he says, "I shall know, being old." He dwells upon the exemption of age from strife, thus bringing what Wordsworth calls "the philosophic mind"; and intimates that age alone can sift out the true of life from its false, and "give us peace at last."

The young are likely to think that when they grow to be what they consider old (some place the limit at forty) they will not care for anything in particular—whether they are sick or well, blind, deaf, or halt. But any aged one will testify that such matters become more and more important the older one grows, so long as any sense at all remains. Remember this, and live always with the thought of old age in view—a healthy old age, in which the faculties may still be active and the interest in life keen and deep to the last. It is a worthy end to keep in view, and is the prize which God offers often in the Bible to his chosen ones. "With long life will I satisfy him, and show him my salvation." "Thou wilt prolong the king's life, and his years as many generations." Numerous promises of this kind are given to the godly, whose "hoary head is a crown of glory."

We do not always think that memory is going to be either our best friend or our worst enemy when age comes upon us. Any day of our early life may be recalled then. See that you have only good things to remember. Do nothing which you would blot from memory if you could.

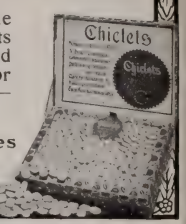
"Youth," said a good man, "is the time to believe; age is the time to trust." But the belief must precede the trust. This delicate shade of difference can be appreciated best by the old.

A beautiful thought which must give comfort to old age is that one has done something to make those who are to come after him better, wiser, more efficient. It is only those who are mentally or morally deficient who care nothing for the welfare of posterity. Some of the wisest of our modern philosophers declare that this spirit has died out among us, that no civilization has considered the future less than our own has done. One affirms boldly that this lack has affected also the modern belief in immortality.

"Among the ancients the admiration for posterity, the perpetuation of one's own name, was a need among elect minds, an obligation in great families. To satisfy this need, to maintain this obligation, individuals and families often cheerfully suffered exile, persecution, even death. Man lived spiritually almost in contact with future generations. Religion, tradition, literature, all fed this ardent hunger for earthly immortality among choice spirits. To-day they do it no more. Statesmen, writers, philosophers, artists, athletes, all are anxious to know not what the world will think of them in the twenty-first and twenty-second centuries, but what the newspapers will say of them the next day. The present quite bars out the vision of what is to come."

Let it not be said of us that we are so taken up with the petty affairs of to-day that we cannot plan properly for our own last years and for the welfare of future generations. The good mind and the godly soul live for the future, and regard every act of daily life as a stone laid in the foundation on which the true temple not only of our own old age and our own eternal happiness, but of the world's future good, are to be built.

*Topic of the Epworth League for Sunday, December 17. TEXTS: Rom. 14 : 7, 8; II. Tim. 4 : 6-8; Num. 23 : 10.



DURING 1910, 2,623,412 CHICLETS WERE SOLD EACH DAY

Chiclets

REALLY DELIGHTFUL

The Dainty Mint Covered Candy Coated Chewing Gum

The singer's tones are more dulcet, the speaker's voice more clear, when Chiclets are used to ease and refresh the mouth and throat. The refinement of chewing gum for people of refinement. It's the peppermint—the true mint.

For Sale at all the Better Sort of Stores

5¢ the Ounce and in 5¢, 10¢ and 25¢ Packets

SEN-SEN CHICLET COMPANY, METROPOLITAN TOWER, NEW YORK

25 Xmas and New Year POST CARDS 10c

INCLUDING GOLD and SILVER EMBOSSED CARDS

The finest lot of Xmas Cards we ever offered. All different, every one richly colored, every card with a Christmas Greeting on it. All styles of Xmas Scenes, Holly, Santa Claus, Reindeer, Winter Scenes, etc. Send your orders to us; we are specialists in Season Cards. Biggest and best Christmas Card catalog sent free. ELLIS ART CO., Dept. 501, 538 Lawndale Ave., Chicago.

I TRUST YOU TEN DAYS. SEND NO MONEY.

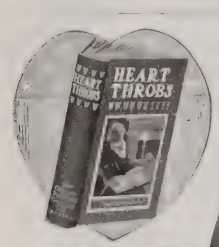
$2 Hair Switch Sent on Approval. Choice of Natural wavy or straight hair

Send a lock of your hair, and we will mail a 22 inch short stem fine human hair switch to match. If you find it a big bargain remit $2 in ten days, or sell 3 and GET YOUR SWITCH FREE. Extra shades a little more. Inclose 6c postage.

Free beauty book showing latest style of hair dressing—also high grade switches, pompadours, wigs, puffs, etc. Women wanted to sell our hair goods.

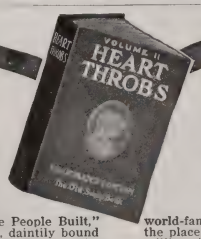
ANNA AYERS, Dep. B83 22 Quincy Street, Chicago

AGENTS! BIG PROFITS



The Only Stropper that Strops the Razor Diagonally

Guaranteed for Life



Brandt's patented Automatic Razor Stropper. Automatically puts a perfect edge on any razor, old style or safety. Big seller. Every man wants one. Write quick for terms, prices and territory.

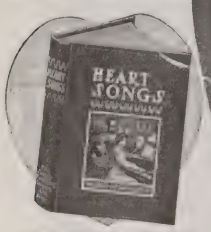
C. Brandt Cutlery Co., 84 W. B'dw'y, N. Y.

New Gift Book Edition, handsomely illustrated, with rich cover, $1.50 net. The most wonderful collection of old-time prose and poetry in existence. The selections of 50,000 people

The Gift Book Sensation of the Year

"Heart Throbs" Volume II

Just off the press and all ready for the holidays. Richly illustrated, handsomely bound, $1.50 net



The latest and greatest of the "Books the People Built," "Heart Throbs," Volume II, is now ready, daintily bound in an appropriate manner as a companion book to the world-famous "Heart Throbs," Volume I, that occupies the place of honor on the library table in over a quarter-million American homes.

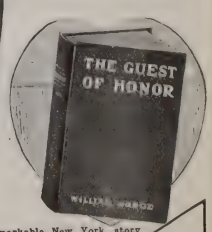
Practical Suggestions and helpful hints contributed by 12,000 American housewives. $2.00 net

The "Heart Throb" Books

These are books of real heart interest—books that show the very soul of American life. Books that hold their readers because they come so close to every man and woman; they reflect with faithfulness the national characteristics that have made this country what it is. Their true sentiment and good cheer make them ideal gift books.

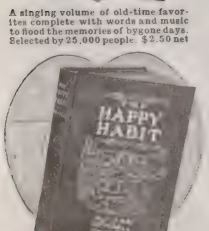
A singing volume of old-time favorites complete with words and music to flood the memories of bygone days. Selected by 25,000 people. $2.50 net

"Heart Throbs," Volume One, is already one of the most famous books of the times. It is composed of the best of the favorite stories, anecdotes and poems sent to us by fifty thousand people. It is an American classic.



"Heart Throbs," Volume Two, illustrated, is the result of repeated and persistent requests of our friends for a second volume of "HEART THROBS," in which might be included many beautiful gems of prose and poetry that were not in the original book.

"Heart Songs" is to music what "Heart Throbs" is to literature. Its measures are made up of heart beats. "The beautiful melodies of days gone by." The selections in this book were chosen by 25,000 individuals.



"Little Helps for Homemakers" containing a wealth of personal, practical knowledge in homemaking. Over two thousand tested home-hints to lighten the household cares and gladden the heart of the homemaker. A most appropriate, practical gift at any time.

"The Guest of Honor," a new American novel by William Hodge—"The Man From Home." This book, just off the press, in response to the direct request of thousands of readers of the National Magazine, is an intensely human story of American life. Its author has charmed over a million people with his stage depictions of American character; his book shows a power recalling Charles Dickens in the pen portrayal of our characteristic national types.

"The Happy Habit," by Joe Mitchell Chapple, is a collection of personal sketches and flash lights of public men, showing the human side of American life and giving intimate views of some of our great national figures, selected by 8000 people.

The remarkable New York story written by Wm. Hodge, the first American actor to write a successful novel. Published at the request of 10,000 magazine readers. $1.25 net.

A book of irrepressible good humor and wide-awake present-day philosophy. Personal selections of 8,000 people. $1.50 net

These books are on sale by all booksellers at the prices given. If you have any difficulty in obtaining them, write us. Right now, while it's on your mind, sign the coupon and send two 2-cent stamps for our 64-page booklet, "Happy Olde Days." You'll enjoy every page, for there's a heart throb in every line.

THE CHAPPLE PUBLISHING CO., Ltd.

NEW YORK BOSTON CHICAGO

Publishers also of "History Making," "Eloquent Sons of the South," "Romance of Arlington House" and "Through the Lands of Yesterday."

Send in your contributions to our new book, "Heart Letters," to be published in 1912.

We are going to add another volume to the series "Books the People Built," called "Heart Letters." We invite contributions of letters that have reached your heart—messages of sympathy or encouragement, love missives, letters from parents to their children, or vice versa, business communications that have affected your future or impressed you by their power. 500 of the best of those received will be made up in the book of "Heart Letters." Send contributions to our Boston office, addressed to "Heart Letter" Editor.

BOOKS THE PEOPLE BUILT

Sign and Mail This Coupon Today

CHAPPLE PUB. CO., Ltd., Boston, Mass.

Gentlemen:—Enclosed find two 2-cent stamps. Please send by return mail a copy of "Happy Olde Days" without further obligation.

Name _____

Street _____

City or Town _____

State _____

The Florsheim SHOE

LOOK FOR NAME IN STRAP

Men prefer Florsheim shoes. They embody correct style and "Natural Shape" lasts. Perfect comfort from the start.

Ask your dealer or send amount to cover cost and express charges and we will have our nearest dealer fill your order.

Most styles $5.00 and $6.00

Write for our free booklet "The Florsheim Way of Foot-Fitting," showing styles that are different.

The Florsheim Shoe Company
Chicago U. S. A.

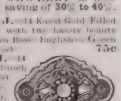
The Imperial
A Custom Model

DY-O-LA DYES

"One Dye for All Goods"

Don't Discard Anything Because it is Soiled or Faded

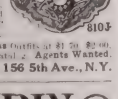
Dip it in Dy-O-La. The color won't crock or fade. It will stand any amount of washing. Dy-O-La is the simplest, most convenient dye to use. You don't have to know whether the material to be dyed is silk, wool, cotton or mixed goods in order to get satisfactory results; all you need is Dy-O-La in the right color. You can put all kinds of garments and materials into the same dye bath and each will be dyed beautifully.



Sixteen colors, from which any shade or tint may be obtained. 10c a package at all dealers.

For the name of your dealer and 2c stamp, to cover postage, we will send you a full-sized package of Dy-O-La Dyes in any of our 16 colors, with a book of directions.

THE JOHNSON-RICHARDSON CO., Ltd.
145 Pearl Street, Burlington, Vt.



LADIES' USEFUL XMAS GIFTS

Our unique, exclusive line of Pequot Pierced HOSIERY, HANDKERCHIEFS, and ART JEWELRY, is now offered, Direct to You, by mail at a saving of 30% to 40%.

Set No. 577 J. 14 Karat Gold Filled 2 new Bar Pin with two lasting beauty pins to replace in Rose Engine-Turned Gold finish. Dozen 75c

Set No. 810J. 14 Karat Gold Filled Ring with Bright Finish Shell or Bell Pin set with either Ruby Imitation Sapphire, Imitation Cat Stone or Real Sea Moss or Green Gold or Oxidized Silver 50c

Satisfaction guaranteed or money refunded. 810J

Special Xmas Outfits at $1.50, $2.00, $3.00 and $5.00 Agents Wanted.

C. M. Reynolds & Co., Dept. A, 156 5th Ave., N.Y.

GLASS PINS

Attractive New Catalogue of elegant up-to-date designs. Class and Fraternity Pins, Emblems, Engraved and Jeweled. Class Rings Trophies and Medals made to order on request. All pins mounted with our patent safety clasp. Work Guaranteed.

PETER PAUL & SON, Jewelers and Stationers
136 North Pearl Street Dept. X. Buffalo, N. Y.

COLLEGE SCHOOL FRATERNITY

Missions in the West Indies*

WE ARE told that missionary work in Haiti has become almost impossible owing to the political unrest there. The Episcopal Church is most active and successful in this island, maintaining from fifteen to twenty colored ministers and having churches in most of the settlements. From the Christian Missionary Alliance, the Baptists, Methodists and Adventists, there have also been sent a few workers.

Porto Rico, on the contrary, is forging onward with great rapidity. An especially encouraging feature there is that the wealthy and educated classes, as reported in The Missionary Review of the World, are turning in great numbers to evangelical Christianity.

A returned missionary gives the following interesting description of the conditions in the various islands where she has worked: "We reach the people most easily through music. The Spanish and the descendants of the aborigines are not so quickly affected, but the negroes and kindred races yield readily to its spell. One evening when traveling from one island to another, the captain of the steamship called in a dozen or so of the logwood men (strong negroes who cut the trees for dyeing), and had them sing for us. The lights were all turned out, excepting the ship's lantern, and the weirdness and pathos of those wild hymns I can never forget. The men sang with the most intense feeling, their bodies swaying in time and their large eyes rolling back and forth. The words were simple doggerel, and often without any apparent connection, such as:

"Dig my grave both deep and narrow,
Make my coffin neat and strong,
Two two to my head,
Two two to my feet,
Two two to carry me home when I die.
O Lord, my little soul going to shine like a star,
O Lord, my little soul going to shine like a star,
When I reach that better land.

"O sister, where were you when the Lord passed by?
O brother, where were you when the Lord passed by?
He's been here, He's been here and blessed my soul and gone.

"What you goin' to do with Jonah?
Oh, throw him overboard.
The whale did come and eat up Jonah,
Were you there when the armor rang?
Were you there when the armor rang?

"Cock-fighting and bull-fighting prevail in most of the islands where the Spanish element is strong, especially in Haiti. Men may be seen rushing out from service at the cathedral (having kept their animals in the vestibule) with a cock under each arm, eager for their sport. The cocks utter such frightful noises that one new missionary upon hearing them, and having no idea of their source, hid under her bed for some time, thinking that one of the revolutions for which her instructions had prepared her, was beginning.

"Conversions among these simple people are like those recorded among the primitive Christians. Their whole mode of life is changed; and great humility is manifested. One poor old pedlar, having heard of the way of salvation, was moved to accept it. 'But,' he asked timidly, 'How much will it cost?' 'It is free, my brother,' said the missionary. The old man expressed joy and gratitude and together they sang, 'Just as I am,' which is always one of the first hymns to be translated into any foreign tongue.

"It is strange to see the great cathedrals, several of them boasting of their foundation in the time of Columbus, and yet to see on these same islands vice and crime rioting. On some of them little or no missionary work is needed. On others, but a day's or two days' sail away, the most shocking degradation may prevail."

* Christian Endeavor Topic for Sunday, December 17. TEXT: II. Cor. 12: 1-15.

The Fashion in Fabrics is best expressed in terms of cloths created by the American Woolen Company

Wm. M. Wood, President.

¶ Note particularly our 1915 Broadcloth, an irreproachable fabric which, owing to our enormous output (the largest in the world), we can furnish at a most favorable price.

¶ 1915 Broadcloth is a fine worsted warp of choicest wool, and comes 54 to 56 inches wide (thus cutting to the best advantage), in lustrous raven black and other shades now in vogue.

¶ Ask your Clothier, your Tailor or your Store for "American Woolen Company's 1915 Broadcloth." If not furnished readily, write to us for samples, and on receipt of money order or check we will see that you are supplied with 1915 Broadcloth in the quantity desired, at $2.25 per yard.

American Woolen Company of New York
J. CLIFFORD WOODHULL, Selling Agent
American Woolen Bldg., 18th to 19th Sts., on 4th Ave., New York

90-45-71 SERGE
Note also our 90-45-71 Serge (90, 45, 71)... A strictly pure wool fabric - soft, stylish and remarkably durable. Priced lower than any other serge of equality on the market. Per yard, $2.00.

AMERICAN WOOLEN COMPANY OF AMERICA

It's so easy to keep your skin soft and clear this cold weather when you use Hinds Cold Cream."—The Hinds Cream Girl.

Just write us now for a free trial tube. Apply a little cream and note how quickly the is relieved and entirely healed; all unsightly redness gradually disappears.

ROUGH OR CHAPPED SKIN

Hinds Honey and Almond Cold Cream 25c is made by chemists who for 35 years have made nothing but absolutely pure, refined and wonderfully successful toilet creams.

You are sure of the most gratifying results with this Cream. It keeps the skin so clean and healthy that eruptions and other blemishes cannot remain; the skin holds its natural girlish beauty and velvety softness.

We positively guarantee that Hinds Honey and Almond Cold Cream will not cause or aid a growth of hair.

Price 25c on unlisted tubes. If your dealer cannot supply you, write us, enclosing 25c in stamps and we will send it postpaid.

Shall we mail you a Free Sample Tube and Booklet at once? Write us.

Our Beautiful Art CALENDAR

Exquisite in style and color; full of life and interest; the daintiest, prettiest and most attractive art panel imaginable. No advertising on the front. You will like it and so will your friends. Send 10 cents to-day and we will mail it postpaid.

POSTPAID 10c

Size 11 x 46 Inches

A. S. HINDS, 90 West Street, Portland, Maine

I am your Christmas wish, the realization of your Christmas desire. I am the voice of Slezak, the soul of Sylva, the dramatic art of Sarah Bernhardt—I am the laugh of Lauder, the coon shouts of Stella Mayhew—I am Sousa's band, Herbert and his orchestra—I am the

EDISON PHONOGRAPH

I hold, on a little sapphire button, scarcely bigger than the point of a pin, the ability to produce exactly the kind of music you and each member of your family like best. No one in your family is too young, none will ever be too old to enjoy my presence. I am supreme as an entertainer—the greatest kind of Christmas gift—a gift for all the family.

And I am the greatest Christmas gift of its kind. For I have four great advantages: Exactly the right volume of sound for your home; the sapphire reproducing point that never wears out—no needles to be changed after each record; Amberol (four-and-one-half minute) Records rendering every composition completely, without cutting or hurrying; and home recording. This is a great feature: Talk to me, sing to me! I answer you back in your own words, in your own voice. I, the Edison Phonograph, am you yourself.

Go to an Edison dealer and hear and see me—be sure to have me in your home on Christmas day.

There is an Edison Phonograph at a price to suit everybody's means, from $15.00 to $200.00; sold at the same prices everywhere in the United States. Edison Standard Records, 35c; Edison Amberol Records (play twice as long), 50c; Edison Grand Opera Records, 75c to $2.00.

Thomas A Edison
INCORPORATED
8 Lakeside Ave., Orange, N. J.

Young People's Societies

The Wilderness Shepherd*

IN THE busy routine of most of us, especially of the dwellers in cities, there is little enough leisure for quiet thought. It is high time that a note should be sounded like that in our lesson. There is a great outcry among us against "dogmatism." We are told that we must not blindly accept statements; we must think out for ourselves the complex problems of modern life; but, with duties following each other so fast that we can scarcely finish one before the next is due, whence shall the time come for that quiet thought?

One newspaper writer pompously informed his readers that this question was silly for most city workers. "Why not think during the long rides which you presumably have to take to and from your daily labor?" he asked; and Mr. Arnold Bennett in his whimsical way has reiterated this cry. But several answers arrived at the newspaper office, deploring this advice. "We followed it," they all wailed, "and we went past our stations."

It is hardly wise to fall into very deep thought on trains, unless one has to go to the very end of its run. The plan of the Morning Watch, shut into one's own room, alone with God, in the strength and freshness of the day's beginning, this is an ideal plan for "tuning to pitch" the day's pæan. Beecher wrote: "Let the day have a blessed baptism by giving your first waking thoughts into the bosom of God. The first hour of the morning is the rudder of the day."

Long before his age, the saintly George Herbert had studied his Bible to such purpose that he, too, had perceived the vital help of the well-spent morning hour, and he sang:

When first thine eyes unveil, give thy soul leave
To do the like: our bodies but forerun
The spirit's duty. True hearts spread and heave
Unto their God, as flowers do to the sun.
Give him thy first thoughts then. So shalt thou keep Him company all day, and in him sleep.

What are the qualities that the sacred keeping of this precious fragment of time should nurture in us all? It should emphasize and cause to remain with us until we kneel for our nightly tryst with our Maker, the strong realization of our dependence upon him, and of his loving fatherhood. This, in turn, should quicken our feeling of the brotherhood of man. It should give to the voice with which we say "Good morning" the sympathetic note. It should make us more patient with the faults of those with whom, under whom, or over whom we work. It should increase our sense of duty so that we shall do that work more thoroughly. It should strengthen the feeling of our hold on God's greatness, so that, as his children, we should constantly aspire to do finer things. In short, it should make us more like Christ.

It is a truth as old as humanity, that we generally resemble those with whom we associate. There is a mysterious law which draws like to like. To go with a certain "set" is to declare yourself in approval of their manners and ideals. You may be obliged to pass your life as a missionary to the outcast and the sinning; but when you seek society for pleasure you choose those who are presumably congenial, or whom you wish to resemble. And you will come to resemble them if you go much with them. It is inevitable. Therefore choose your companions with care. Above all, seek often the side of your Master, Christ. Open the day with him. Close it with him, and let him walk beside you all through its trying hours.

* Topic of the Epworth League for Sunday, January 7. TEXTS: Amos 1: 1, 2; 7: 14; Gal. 1: 15-17.

Courage*

"I SUPPOSE," said a lady to a soldier who had been several times awarded medals for bravery on the field of battle, "I suppose that you never in your life felt any fear."

"On the contrary, madam," he replied, "I never went into battle but that my knees shook and my heart was like water within me."

"Oh!" she exclaimed, in a mystified tone, as if to say, "Is that being brave?"

The hero did not explain the matter to her, but he might have truly said that the highest courage of all is that moral bravery which compels the shrinking flesh to go forward, no matter how much it may falter. Perhaps the majority of hardened veterans in warfare would testify that upon entering into battle they were often seized with a nervous desire to run away. It is like the "stage fright" of the speaker or singer, which, in many cases, is never entirely outgrown.

The species of courage which goes forward and does the deed, in spite of the protests of the coward flesh, is infinitely superior to that reckless stolidity, either inherent or acquired, which often goes by the name of courage. The fatalist, who, like the Mohammedan, dares the bullets in a spirit of indifferent stoicism, exhibits a far lower type of valor than did, for instance, the Christian martyrs.

But the most extreme exercise of the courage which enables a man to rush unwaveringly into danger or to face a wild beast, is nothing to that by which a man conquers the evil within him. "He that ruleth his spirit is better than he that taketh a city." In this, as in every other crisis of life, the only true courage is to be drawn from above. Henry Drummond, in his wonderful book on The Ideal Life, shows how, when we are confronted with a hard duty, the help to perform it comes also, if we will only look for it. "When God puts down his great will beside me," he says, "he puts down just beside it as great a thing, his love. And as my soul trembles at the fearfulness of his will, love takes my timid will and twines it around his, till mine is fierce with passion to serve and to do that will."

Many a soul has cried out, as it threaded the labyrinth of life, "The way of duty is dark. I cannot find it. Conflicting duties beckon at once, and which one shall I follow?"

In Stephen's Liberty, Equality, Fraternity, he has a noble word for the guidance of these puzzled and uncertain ones. "In nearly all of the important transactions of life which relate to the future," he reminds us, "we have to take a leap in the dark. We stand on a mountain pass in the midst of whirling snow and blinding mist. If we stand still, we may be frozen to death. If we take the wrong road, we may be dashed to pieces. What must we do? 'Be strong and of a good courage.' Act for the best, hope for the best, and take what comes, with eyes open and heads erect. If death ends all, we cannot meet it better. If not, let us enter whatever may be the next scene, like honest men, with no sophistry in our mouths and no masks on our faces."

This is good doctrine, and we can carry it out, provided that we ever have "our loins girt about with truth"; are wearing the "breastplate of righteousness"; have our "feet shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace"; and take with us the "shield of faith," the "helmet of salvation" and "the sword of the Spirit." Without these the highest form of courage is impossible.

* Christian Endeavor Topic for Sunday, January 7. TEXT: Ps. 27: 1-14.

YOU CAN AFFORD to have a new Song Book in your Church or Sunday School, and one for every person when you can get "FAMILIAR SONGS OF THE GOSPEL" for $3 for 100. Words and music, 83 very best songs. Sample copy 5 cents. E. A. K. Hackett, 114 North Wayne St., Fort Wayne, Ind.

A TERRIBLE AFFLICTION is a bad breath to a sensitive person. It can be quickly sweetened by Murray's Charcoal Tablets (absolutely unmedicated), which stop fermentation and the production of gas in the stomach and so purify the exhalations. They have a remarkable effect also in clearing the complexion. A full size, 25 cent box will be sent, once only, for 10 cents in stamps. A. J. Ditman, 2 Astor House, N. Y.

"DON'T SHOUT"

"I hear you. I can hear now as well as anybody. 'How?' Oh, something new—The MORLEY PHONE I've a pair in my ears now, but they are invisible. I would not know I had them in, myself, only that I hear all right."

The MORLEY PHONE for the DEAF makes low sounds and whispers plainly heard. Invisible, comfortable, weightless and harmless. Anyone can adjust it. Over One Hundred Thousand Sold. Write for booklet and testimonials. THE MORLEY CO., Dept. 754, Perry Building, Philadelphia

SAWS {ANY WOOD IN ANY POSITION ON ANY GROUND} 1 Man with a Folding Sawing Machine Beats 2 MEN with 2 Cross-cut Saws 5 to 9 cords daily is the usual average for one man.

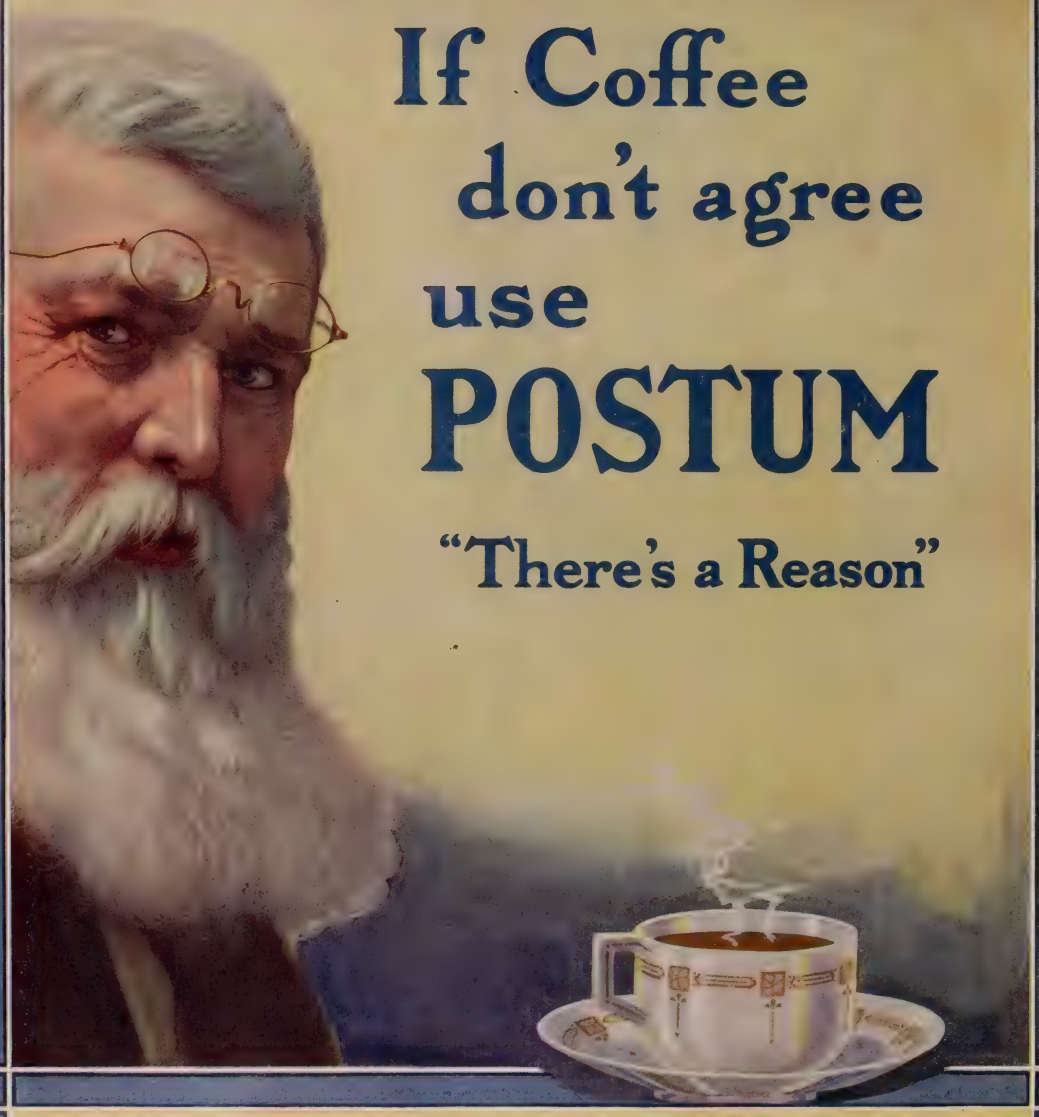
Our 1912 Model Machine saws faster, runs easier and will last longer than ever. Adjusted in a minute to suit a 12-year-old boy or strongest man. Ask for catalog No 21 6 and low price. First order gets agency
Folding Sawing Mach. Co., 161 W. Harrison St., Chicago, Ill.

AGENTS BIG PROFITS
NEW PATENTED Useful COMBINATION SHEARS Sells to every Housewife.

Made of first quality steel, fully guaranteed. Sells in every home, store or shop. Practical, useful. Housewives wont be without it. A whirlwind seller. Big profits. Biggest, best, most wonderful agents' proposition made. Write quick for terms and free sample to workers. Send no money. A postal will do. Thomas Shear Co., 212-4 Barny St., Dayton, Ohio

AGENTS Make $30 per Wk. This AWL

sews a lock stitch like a machine. Best thing ever made for repairing Harness, Shoes, etc. A dozen exclusive features. Demand is immense. Sales astounding. Roy Sage writes "Rec'd Awl today sold 5 in 15 min." L. Perine says "Sold 9 on way home with sample." Lowest price, biggest profit, greatest value, quick sales. Drop everything and write for sample and instructions. ANCHOR MFG. CO. Dept. 834 DAYTON, O.



TYPEWRITERS FACTORY REBUILT

Save $25 to $50 on any Standard Typewriter. Our "Factory Rebuilt" Typewriters are perfect in quality, condition and looks. Durable and reliable in construction and serviceable in every way. Buy from the largest factory in the world with branch stores in leading cities. We guarantee for one year against defect in workmanship and material. Write for catalog and address of nearest branch office.
American Writing Machine Co.
345 Broadway, New York

Foy's Big Book MONEY IN POULTRY and SQUABS

Tells how to start small and grow big. Describes the world's largest pure bred poultry farm and gives a great mass of useful poultry information. Low prices on fowls, eggs, incubators and brooders. Mailed 4c. F. FOY, Box 39, Des Moines, Iowa

If Coffee don't agree use POSTUM

"There's a Reason"

Men who fail to supply the body with food and drink of the kind needed to make up for daily wear and tear must stand aside in the race for pre-eminence.

Those who are properly fed will surely win the laurels.

If coffee is found to interfere with digestion, or to cause one or more of the many nervous disorders, common sense and a little ambition to "be some one" would suggest a change.

Postum furnishes the gluten and phosphates of grains required by Nature to nourish Brain and Nerves with food. When made right, that is, boiled 15 to 20 minutes after boiling begins, it has a delicious taste similar to that of the mild, high-grade Javas.

Healthy Nerves and Brain are an asset.

"There's a Reason" for POSTUM.

Postum Cereal Company, Limited,
Battle Creek, Mich., U. S. A.

Canadian Postum Cereal Co., Ltd.,
Windsor, Ontario, Canada.